THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. VII. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1908. NO. 40.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

STATE BANKS.

Minneapolis—The strength and soundness of the Minnesota state banks as well as the confidence of the people in the banks is shown by a comparative statement just issued by Public Examiner Anton Schaefer. The statement shows the conditions of the banks last year as shown by their reports of Nov. 12, 1906, and their condition on Dec. 3, the date of the last call this year.

The statement shows that there was a falling off in the total of the resources and liabilities of about $3,000,000 as compared with last year, notwithstanding that during the time between the two reports the Security Bank of Minneapolis, with a total of resources and liabilities of over $14,000,000 had been converted into a national bank. So that instead of the apparent decrease of $3,000,000 there has been a net gain of about $11,000,000.

Between the dates of the two reports there was an increase of 62 state banks, and a comparison of the statements of those banks included in the 1906 statement with their conditions is commented on by Mr. Schaefer as follows:

"Taking only the 450 state banks included in both the call of Dec. 3, 1907, and that of Nov. 12, 1906, which makes a just and fair basis of comparison of true condition, there is a net increase, in round numbers, of $1,500,000 in cash on hand, $2,000,000 in loans and discounts, and $3,500,000 in time certificates of deposit, with no shrinkage whatever in any principal item of banking resources.

Game Records.

St. Paul—Based on the number of deer and moose known to have been killed during the open season, Carlos Avery, executive agent of the state game and fish commission, estimates that nearly 5,000 deer and perhaps 150 moose were killed in this state. The figures available are those of the number shipped into the several counties. They show that 2,084 deer and 82 moose were shipped by the hunters, and it is estimated that at least as many were killed by the residents of the counties in which the big game abound and were not shipped.

Hennepin county heads the list of the number shipped in with 399, St. Louis county is second with 355, and Ramsey comes next with 205 deer. St. Louis county is credited with 21 moose, Hennepin with 12, and Ramsey with 4; Stearns received 6 moose, and Lake, McLeod and Traverse each got four.

The commission issued during the season fifty-four non-resident game licenses and the records show that forty-five deer and four moose were shipped out of the state.

Burns to Death.

St. Cloud—At 2 o'clock in the morning at Melrose, north of this city, Katherine Krick, twenty years old, lost her life in a burning house. While attempting to escape from the building the girl became suffocated and fell into the flames. Her body was recovered twenty minutes later, but it was charred and unrecognizable. John Krick, the girl's father, was badly burned, but will recover.

The fire was discovered at 2 o'clock. The entire family, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Krick and three children, were sleeping on the second floor, when Mr. Krick was awakened by smoke. Upon going down stairs he found the dining room in flames. He hurriedly called the family and all escaped but the girl, who had gone back to her room to save some trinkets. When she reached the bottom of the stairs she was suffocated and fell. The flames surrounded her and the firemen could not locate her.

Apples Are Imaginary.

Mankato—John Rose, a stranger from Ohio, was arrested on the charge of defrauding housekeepers by pretending to sell apples that he did not possess. He canvassed from house to house, claiming to have a carload of apples at one of the depots, and exhibited beautiful large red ones as samples. The apples were to be sold at $2.50 a barrel, and he collected 50 cents down.

His scheme failed when one housewife, more cautious than the rest, telephoned to the depots and found that there were no apples there.

Free Lunch Legal.

St. Paul—In a decision rendered by Hugo O. Hanft, judge of the municipal court, he holds the anti-free lunch ordinance prohibits the giving away or selling below market price of any food in places where liquor is sold.

Sam H. Stamm was arrested for violating the ordinance and the decision finds him not guilty, as the ordinance under which he was arrested is invalid.

Alexandria—The First Congregational church of Alexandria recently observed its fortieth anniversary.

St. Paul—The forty-fifth annual convention of the Minnesota Educational association will be held Jan. 1 to 4.

Minneapolis—When the appropriation of $45,000 to complete the Minneapolis armory is available, Jan. 1, steps will be taken to put the militia companies of the city on a better basis.

St. Paul—E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, is preparing new regulations relative to the labeling of foods which doubtless will be generally appreciated by manufacturers and jobbers.

Duluth—Sales of timber aggregating $27,346.35, were the result of a tour of six of the northern counties of the state just completed by S. G. Iversen, secretary of state, and Clarence Dinehart, state treasurer.

Crookston—Crookston is the latest to tie on the 11 o'clock lid, Mayor McPhee giving the chief of police a written notice to the effect that hereafter all Crookston saloons must be closed from 11 o'clock at night until 5 o'clock in the morning.

Hastings—Ralph W. Brown, a deserter from Fort Yellowstone, Wyoming, gave himself up to Policeman W. W. Carson and was taken to Fort Snelling where he will be turned over to the proper officer. Brown deserted on Aug. 29 of this year.

Crookston—From the first day of November to the present date, land men of Crookston and surrounding towns report that nearly three times the amount of land has been sold that was transferred in a like period of time in this section for six years.

Washington—Senator Nelson introduced a resolution appropriating $75,000 for the reconstruction of Sandy Lake dam at the headwaters of the Mississippi river, in accordance with the recommendations of the chief of engineers in his last annual report.

Delano—Teresa Kashelmer, who was arrested this week on suspicion of having poisoned her husband, Fritz Kashelmer, who died two weeks ago, waived an examination here and was bound over without bail and taken to the Ramsey county jail in St. Paul.

North St. Paul—Two frame buildings belonging to the Yoerg Brewing company were destroyed by fire early Friday morning, causing a loss estimated at $3,000 on buildings and contents. One of the places was occupied by John Hayes as a saloon and the other was used by Julius Lambrecht as a residence.

Minneapolis—Miss Annie Rachael Smith, the young woman who reported that she had been kidnapped and detained in a shack, died at the city hospital. When she was found she was taken to the home of Mrs. Fennie Williams, 519 Lafond street. Both her feet were so badly frozen that they had to be amputated.

Fergus Falls—J. P. Bauer, a well known citizen of Bluffton, this county, died from blood poisoning, caused by an injury to his foot resulting from a peg in his shoe. The peg worked up and pierced the skin, and blood poisoning and other complications followed. Mr. Bauer was a middle-aged man and had a large family.

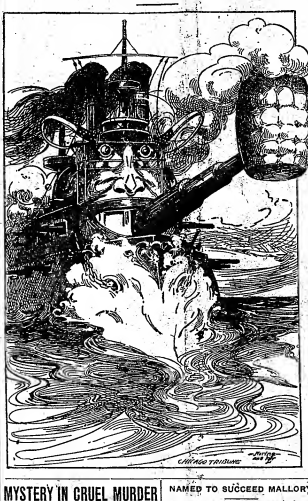
St. Paul—Miss Mary McDonough, 28 College avenue, had her savings, $525, stolen from her room. A sneak thief, it is supposed, got into the house and broke into the trunk that contained the money and escaped without being observed. Detective Frank Fraser says the police are working on the case and he expects that the robber will be caught.

Minneapolis. — A real Irish play with the popular Irish tenor, Fiske O'Hara, whose rapid rise to the front ranks of the singing comedians has been a phenomenal one, will be seen at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of Jan. 5th. The piece is called "Dion O'Dare," and in the title role that is perfectly fitted to his well known talents.

Red Lake Falls — Jilted twenty years ago by the girl he wooed Manfield Kress, broken hearted, went to a recruiting office and enlisted as a soldier in the regular army. Recently he married his old sweetheart who, after a score of years of married life, had been left a widow by the accidental death of her husband. Mrs. Gunhaldah Kriel, the bride, is a resident of this city.

St. Cloud—The state board of control has decided to add a tailor shop to the equipment at the reformatory. The shop will supply the clothing used by the inmates of the various institutions under the control of the board and it is expected that the venture will result in a considerable saving to the state. The board hopes to have the shop in operation by the first of the year.

UNCLE SAM'S PIPE OF PEACE.



MYSTERY IN CRUEL MURDER

WOMAN'S NUDE BODY FOUND IN POND AT HARRISON, N. J.

Killed in the Night—She Was Seen Crossing Hackensack Meadows with Man.

Newark, N. J.—A murder, combining the elements of mystery and deliberate cruelty that take it out of the ordinary, was committed on the Hackensack Meadows in the town of Harrison early Thursday, and the nude body of the victim, a comely woman of perhaps 30 years, was found nearly submerged in the icy waters of a little pond. Only the feet projected when chance passers-by broke the ice in which the exposed portions were incrusted and dragged the body ashore.

The dead woman was finely featured; her hair and nails gave evidence of a recent and scrupulous toilet, and such of her clothing as was subsequently found suggested in texture and style an owner of refinement.

Two men, who occupied a yacht moored near where the body was found, are detained by the police.

The most important clew obtained was furnished Thursday night by Peter Coogan, a watchman employed by the Marine Engine company, who recognized the body as that of a woman whom he had seen crossing the meadows in company with a man early in the day. Later he saw the man alone. He then carried a bundle in his arms. The man was short and stout.

Two girls returning to their home in Harrison long after midnight heard a woman's cries floating over the marsh land. They seemed to come from the direction of the pond and, to the startled girls sounded like "Spare me," and "Help!" Nearer home the girls were approached by a well-dressed stranger, who accosted and followed them until a policeman was met with, when he turned and fled.

FOOTBALL PLAYERS ARE HEROES.

St. Louis Boys Help Rescue Trainmen from Bad Wreck.

Seattle, Wash.—St. Louis university football athletes made heroes of themselves before daylight Monday morning near Brocket Station, on the Canadian Pacific, when they arrived on their way to the coast, 20 minutes after a head-in collision between two freight trains. The engine crews and train men were under the debris, some of them scalded frightfully by escaping steam.

Medical student members of the team set to work to rescue the victims and materially aided, though working against escaping steam, in saving life and limb. They operated on three of the crushed trainmen. Brakeman Ormsbee was crushed to death and Fireman Chris Von Wald and G. McKinnon were so badly injured that they may die.

The wreck was caused by the failure of the operator at Brocket to deliver orders. He afterward fled.

NAMED TO SUCCEED MALLORY.

William James Bryan Appointed Senator from Florida.

Jacksonville, Fla. — Gov. Broward Wednesday appointed William James Bryan of this city to be United States senator, vice Stephen Russell Mallory, deceased, for the balance of the term, expiring March 4, 1909. Mr. Bryan is a prominent young attorney, only 31 years of age, and now holds the position of county solicitor for this (Duval) county. He was born in Orange county, Florida, October 10, 1876. He is the son of John M. Bryan, who served 14 years as state senator and afterwards as a member of the state railroad commission. He has always been active in politics and at present is a member of the Democratic executive committee. About two months ago Mr. Bryan announced his candidacy for the United States senatorship to succeed Mr. Mallory. He is not related to William J. Bryan of Nebraska.

Senator Mallory was born November 2, 1848. He entered the confederate army in 1864 and in the spring of 1865 was a midshipman in the confederate navy. He studied law and began practicing at Pensacola in 1874. He was elected to the state legislature as representative and senator and later served two terms as a congressman. He was elected to the United States senate in 1897 and was reelected in 1903.

MOVE FOR WALSH LOST.

Judge Anderson Refuses to Order the Banker Acquitted.

Chicago.—Judge A. B. Anderson late Thursday refused to take the case of John R. Walsh from the jury in the federal court and order the defendant dismissed on a plea made by Attorney John S. Miller. The court not only turned down the argument that the government had not made out a case, but ordered the defense to proceed with the trial.

The jury which had been excluded from the room during the day was recalled at four p. m. and preparations to proceed with the defense were continued. The court instructed Mr. Miller to prepare a written complaint against any further evidence which the attorneys hold should be excluded from the record. In doing so the judge declared that portions of the evidence already objected to would be given to the jury.

Chicago Newspaper Man Dead.

Chicago.—Albert G. Beaunisne, assistant to the publisher of the Chicago Daily News, died suddenly Thursday afternoon of heart disease.

Mr. Beaunisne was 55 years old and became connected with the News in 1879, after having taught school and studied law. He was a member of the Union League, Press, Quadrangle and Caxton clubs.

Devils Lake, N. D.—George W. H. Davis, president of the Farmers' Grain company, which owns a line of elevators in North Dakota and Manitoba, died Thursday. For four years he was a member of the state legislature.

QUARREL IN THE NAVY

SURGEON GENERAL RIXEY ISSUES A STATEMENT.

ABOUT HOSPITAL SHIPS

Dispute Over Their Command, Between Medical and Navigation Departments, That Caused Brownson to Resign.

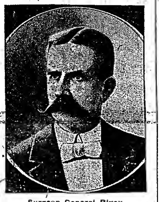
Washington. — Surgeon General P. M. Rixey of the Navy issued a statement Wednesday night which tells of the serious dispute between the navigation and medical bureaus and probably explains the resignation of Rear Admiral Brownson. The quarrel has arisen over the probable selection of the president of a medical officer to command the hospital ship Relief.

While disclaiming exact knowledge as to the cause of Admiral Brownson's resignation, the surgeon general in his statement leaves little room for doubt that the controversy he reviews was a potent factor.

Dr. Rixey maintains that hospital ships, as a rule, always have been commanded by medical officers, with a sailing master and civilian crew for purposes of navigation. This particular vessel, he says, formerly belonged to the army and always was commanded by a medical officer when used as a hospital ship.

Recommended by Joint Board.

In attempting to unify the medical services of the army and the navy, he says, a joint army and navy board of medical officers which was convened by executive order more than a year ago recommended that hospital ships should be commanded by medical officers and that recommendation was approved by both the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy in general orders. Since the civil war, he says, all hospital ships and medical transports of the army had been placed under the surgeon general of the army. He says further that Japanese naval hospital ships were commanded by medical officers after having tried line officers.



Surgeon General Rixey.

These ships, he says, are simply floating hospitals, properly under the control of the medical department, and should be conducted in peace exactly as in time of war. This is especially so, he adds, because during war time line officers cannot be spared and do not, and should not, desire the command of these ships.

He maintains that it always has been a doubtful question if the Geneva and The Hague agreements could guarantee the neutrality of these ships if combatant (line) officers and crews were aboard, and it was this doubt which prevented the Japanese during the recent war with Russia from using line officers on hospital ships.

"The internal administration of the bureau of medicine and surgery," he says, "has been in my opinion too much interfered with by the bureau of navigation. This interference has at times caused grave concern as to how I could meet the needs of those under our care."

The hospital ship Relief, he says, should now be with the battleship fleet on its cruise, but he adds, "the bureau of navigation thought otherwise and the fleet of 15,000 men, with its auxiliaries, is without a hospital ship and will be until it arrives at Magdalena bay, more than three months from now." He adds that he cannot understand how Admiral Brownson should be especially interested in the officering of hospital ships, as his duties lie in another direction, and that he should not interfere in a matter pertaining entirely to the bureau of medicine and surgery, and therefore to be decided by the secretary of the navy.

Pacific Coast Unprotected.

Seattle, Wash.—T. C. Woodbury, acting commander of the department of the Columbia, U. S. A., in a statement Wednesday said that the whole Pacific coast would be helpless in case the navy should prove unable to prevent the landing of a force of 20,000 Japanese or other foreign army at any of the numerous unprotected bays along the coast.

WILL RESORT TO COURTS

GOLDFIELD MINE OWNERS FILE SUIT AGAINST UNION.

Its Dissolution Is Asked—Injunction Against Picketing and Interfering Also Sought.

Goldfield, Ark.—The Goldfield Mine Owners' association Thursday filed in the circuit court of the district of Nevada a suit asking not only for an injunction against picketing and interfering, but for the final dissolution of the Goldfield miners' union.

The suit is filed by the Goldfield Consolidated Mine company against the Goldfield miners, the Western Federation of Miners, Charles A. Mackinson, president of the local union, and 19 other officers of the same.

The complaint alleges that the Western Federation of Miners is organized for the destruction of property and creating "endless strife, disorder, bloodshed and rioting."

The Goldfield union is charged in the bill with "intimidation" and of being guilty of "wanton destruction of property, murder of innocent citizens, lawlessness and anarchy to such an extent that it has instituted a reign of terror in the Goldfield district." It is further alleged that the Goldfield union is a "criminal society."

The court is asked to cite the defendants before it to answer the allegations of the complaint and to issue a writ of injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing the business of the Consolidated Mines company by threat, intimidation or picketing. An injunction against boycott is further asked for. The court is asked to enjoin the Goldfield union from holding any more meetings. Watchers or examiners are asked for with full authority to enter upon the property of the complainant and to carry out the orders of the court and to arrest any person violating them.

Finally it is petitioned that the injunction be made permanent and that the Goldfield miners' union be abated and forever dissolved as a nuisance, and perpetually enjoined from any further meetings or action of whatever kind or nature.

WASTED PUBLIC FUNDS.

New York Water Commissioners Will Be Removed by Mayor.

New York. — As a result of the investigation made by the commissioners of accounts into the award of the contract for the construction of the Ashokan dam, a part of the city's new water supply system, the board of water commissioners will be removed by Mayor McClellan unless his action is forestalled by their resignations. This was made known Wednesday following the receipt by the mayor of the report of the commissioners of accounts, John Purrey Mitchell and Philip B. Gaynor.

The water commissioners, Edward Simmons, Charles N. Chadwick and Charles N. Shaw, awarded the Ashokan contract to MacArthur Brothers company, whose bid was $12,669,775, against $10,315,530 bid for the work by the John Peirce company. Protests were immediately filed and an inquiry was ordered by the mayor. Charges of incompetency and misconduct, based upon an alleged waste of public funds, will be preferred against the members of the water board.

FAIRBANKS IS INDORSED.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Resolutions were adopted unanimously Thursday at the biennial love feast of Indiana Republicans, urging the nomination of Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks for the presidency.

The resolutions were introduced by Gov. J. Frank Hanly and were adopted with a round of cheers by the thousand and more active party workers of the state who were present.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The action of the trans-continental railroads in discharging hundreds of Mexican laborers during the week preceding Christmas has given rise to a pitiable condition of poverty among the people. It is estimated that about 800 men in all were let out. Most of them have families and nearly all are without money. It is estimated that about 500 able-bodied Mexicans with their families are destitute in this city. An effort will be made to charter a freight train and send them to Mexico.

Medals for Isthmus Workers.

Washington.—Medals of a suitable character are to be given to all citizens of the United States who have served on the Isthmus of Panama for two years in the service of the government and who, during that period, have rendered satisfactory service. A competent artist will be engaged and the design for a medal prepared. President Roosevelt is anxious that suitable tribute to and recognition of service shall be shown by the government.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

We wish all our readers and friends a happy and prosperous New Year.

How many times have you written it 1907.

How about them New Years resolutions, are you still keeping them? We were affraid to make any, as good resolutions are easily broken.

The catalouge houses are begining to get what is comming to them, at last, and if W.J.Pilkington, editor of the Merchants' Trade Journal of Desmoins Iowa follows them up for a few months he will land a large delegation of them behind the bars. Sears, Robuck & Co.,of Chicago was the first ones of the gang to be indicted by the federal grand jury of Iowa, for using the U. S. mails to defraud. This case will lead to such an airing of the methods of the catalouge houses that they will be driven out of business, if they don't all land in the penitentiary. At any rate we bet they are awful sorry they ever called Uncle Sam into the deal to help them fight the lumbermen.

One of the most necessary articles to have handy to a creamery is plenty of good water and a good supply of ice. Without these two articles no butter maker can make first class butter, and there is nothing that can take the place of them. A creamery built back from the river starts out "handicaped" by the lack of the two most important factors that enter into good butter making. The water in the Red Lake River is always good to be used for creamery purposes, and our northern winters never fail to produce the ice on its clear surface, in abundance. Of course you can dig wells, but there is no certainty that the wells will give you as pure and soft water as the river water, and it is a big expense to to dig wells and hawl ice. Another advantage that a creamery built on the river will have, is better facilitys for shipping their butter and obtaining cream, for it has just as good a chance to ship by land as a creamery located back from the river, and in addition would have the advantage of the boats for shipment, in case of bad roads. In building a creamery in a new locality the people had ought to take advantage of all the natural advantages they can in the way of location and not try to shove it out into a place where they have got to spead a lage amount of money to get ice, wood and water, just because that location happens to be near some individuals land.

A Word For Nero.

"Nero fiddled while Rome burned!" exclaimed the student.

"Well," replied Mr. Growcher, "that's better than the custom many violinists have of practicing at a time when everything is nice and quiet otherwise."—Washington Star.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Men, Women and Adjectives.

Certain adjectives are reserved for men and others for women. A man is never called "beautiful." Along with "pretty" and "lovely" that adjective has become the property of women and children alone. "Handsome" and the weak "good looking" are the only two adjectives of the kind common to either sex. Even "belle" has no real masculine correlative in English, since "beau" came to signify something other than personal looks. It is singular that "handsome" should have become the word for a strikingly good looking person, since its literal meaning is handy, dexterous. But "pretty" likewise comes from the Anglo-Saxon word [illegible]

Washington Gossip

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

ELOPEMENT IN HIGH LIFE STUNS CAPITAL SOCIETY

WASHINGTON.—Capital society was much cut up by the elopement of Mrs. Alma Marie von Haake Cathcart, wife of the son of a millionaire, with Earl W. Pritchard, an ensign in the navy until dismissed "for the good of the service" after running away with Mrs. Cathcart. It is said the lorn husband, R. Harry Cathcart, Jr., will apply for divorce.

The beginning of the romance dates back about three years. Alma Marie von Haake was then 18 years of age and one of the most popular girls in the younger army set in Washington. She lived with her parents in the Hammond Court, a fashionable apartment house. She was, and still is, a dainty, vivacious girl, with a striking mass of chestnut hair.

Among the scores of admirers who besieged the Von Haake home was Pritchard, then 21 years old. His athletic figure, more than six feet two inches in height, was notable even among the Washington crowds, where there are so many big, erect men. He was then in his second year at Annapolis, having been appointed by Congressman Overstreet of Indiana. His home was in Indianapolis.

Every time Pritchard obtained leave of absence he ran down to Washington. Every time the Annapolis crew raced—the big middy rowed at number three—Miss Von Haake waved her blue flag and cheered.

A year and a half ago young Cathcart met Miss Von Haake in Philadelphia. He was then a student in the University of Pennsylvania. He took a small part in athletics, too, but he is by no means the striking figure Pritchard is.

Cathcart is a reticent, reserved young man. He was then about 23 years old.

Pretty Miss Von Haake and Cathcart were married last June in Newburgh on the Hudson, the bridegroom's home. Within a month the couple quarreled, but peace was made. In September Cathcart and his bride visited Philadelphia. The husband left the bride at the railway station while he went to look after baggage. When he returned she was gone.

ADMIRAL DEWEY AND WIFE VACATE "GIFT" MANSION

ADMIRAL and Mrs. Dewey have moved. The house on Rhode Island avenue which was presented to the admiral by the American people not long after the Manila bay victory finally has been vacated. Everybody remembers what resentment there was when the admiral made the people's gift over to his wife, and then in the face of the storm another transfer was made and the residence became the property of the admiral's son, or matters were so arranged that it would become his property eventually.

It is not wide of the mark, probably, to say that the Deweys stayed in the Rhode Island home for a much longer time than they wanted to stay. Time dulls the edge of criticism and makes people forget, and so the Deweys, not long ago, quietly left the house on the avenue to take up a residence in the great dwelling at Sixteenth and K streets, where Mrs. Dewey resided when she was Mrs. Hazen, and from which Admiral Dewey took her to church to make her his wife.

Admiral Dewey is the ranking officer of the navy and as a full admiral he has a right which belongs to no other man of either service, the right to remain on the active list until he sees fit to retire. From his rank it is expected, and therefore practically necessary, that when the admiral gives an entertainment it shall be a large one. It is only fair to say that the Rhode Island avenue house which was given him by the people was altogether too small for large gatherings.

The old Hazen residence into which the admiral and his wife have moved affords space enough for most elaborate entertainments. A series of dinners already has been announced.

PRESS AGENTS ANXIOUS TO SHOW IN WHITE HOUSE

RIGHT THIS WAY. GENTS! ONLY A DIME. TEN CENTS TO SEE THE GREAT DOUBLE-JOINTED WHITE HOUSE CIRCUS! WHO'S THE NEXT?

ALL THE PRESS agents in the country seem to have got excited over Philip Kearney Mindil's success in getting President Roosevelt to donate the East room of the White House for a performance by his new attraction, the Japanese wrestler Hitachiyama. Only a few days ago Charles Frohman was talking about giving private performances in the White House as a far off dream, and, behold! Mindil has gone and done it. Not only that, but he got the president to bring in the French and Japanese ambassadors, the full tennis cabinet and a quorum of the real cabinet.

The stunt of bringing the Russian Giant to the White House and having the president shake hands with him is completely eclipsed, and Wells Hawks is tearing his hair over what he regarded as a brilliant play in having Maude Adams take fencing lessons with the president. Hawks is reported to have wired Secretary Loeb asking permission to give a performance of "Peter Pan" in the East room and offering to let the president play Hook the Pirate. Mr. Loeb refused to confirm the report, but the president is said to have begun reading the book of "Peter Pan" aloud, striding up and down the room and declaiming the pirate's lines to Kermit and Quentin, so there is some confidence in the report.

"Dan" Fishell is reported to have wired Loeb immediately after reading the report of Mindil's great stunt. Fishell wants to have a Barnum & Bailey performance in the White House grounds, with the president and the Japanese ambassador selling peanuts and red lemonade, and offers to let Quentin ride a hippopotamus. A counter-offer has been received, it is said, from Brady asking that Ringling Bros. be allowed to set up a monkey house in the East room for the Roosevelt children to play with, and that some special trapeze and acrobatic acts be given in the White House lot under the auspices of Theodore Jr.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS AND A WESTERN MILLIONAIRE

CHARLES F. ADAMS, a descendant of John Quincy Adams, lives on Massachusetts avenue in a house formerly occupied by Bishop Hurst. His brother, Henry Adams, has a home next to that of Mrs. John Hay. You will find descendants of the second president of the United States all over the union, and the smaller number of them bear the name of Adams. It is a prolific family and it is a standing contradiction to the statement that all of the old New England families of great prominence have died out. Over in the "Whispering Gallery" at the capitol, which, by the way, is nothing more or less than the old house of representatives, there is a little piece of metal set in one of the square blocks of the marble flooring and on it are these words: "John Quincy Adams. Here." This is the full inscription. The metal piece marks the spot where Adams fell dead after years of continued service in the house of representatives.

The value of the piece of metal is a few cents. Over in Massachusetts avenue there is the house of an enormously wealthy westerner. He built it, and as a part of the building material he used a block of rock containing many dollars' worth of gold. He glories in it and it is pointed out to Washington visitors. This westerner is a great man—in Washington society—just at present. They say that more people are interested in the millionaire's block of gold than are interested in John Quincy Adams' two inches of bronze. Adams, however, will be alive some centuries after this westerner is dead.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

Prevalency of Kidney Disease.

Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalency of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are the most common diseases that prevail, they are almost the last recognized by patient and physicians, who content themselves with doctoring the effects, while the original disease undermines the system.

What To Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

Home of Swamp-Root.

You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

SUFFERED TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

With Eczema—Her Limb Peeled and Foot Was Raw—Thought Amputation Was Necessary—Believes Life Saved by Cuticura.

"I have been treated by doctors for twenty-five years for a bad case of eczema on my leg. They did their best, but failed to cure it. My doctor had advised me to have my leg cut off. At this time my leg was peeled from the knee, my foot was like a piece of raw flesh, and I had to walk on crutches. I bought a set of Cuticura Remedies. After the first two treatments the swelling went down, and in two months my leg was cured and the new skin came on. The doctor was surprised and said that he would use Cuticura for his own patients. I have now been cured over seven years, and but for the Cuticura Remedies I might have lost my life. Mrs. J. B. Renaud, 277 Mentana St., Montreal, Que., Feb. 20, 1907."

The Most Suspicious Ever.

Henry Clews, the banker and author, was talking at the Union club in New York about a certain financier.

"No wonder the man is so successful," said Mr. Clews. "He is the most careful, the most suspicious fellow I ever heard of. In fact, he reminds me of a Staffordshire farmer my father used to tell of.

"It was said of this farmer that, whenever he bought a herd of sheep, he examined each sheep closely to make sure that it had no cotton in it."

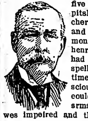
FIVE MONTHS IN HOSPITAL.

Discharged Because Doctors Could Not Cure.



Levi P. Brockway, S. Second Ave., Anoka, Minn., says: "After lying for five months in a hospital I was discharged as incurable, and given only six months to live. My heart was affected, I had smothering spells, and sometimes fell unconscious. I got so I couldn't use my arms, my eyesight was impaired and the kidney secretions were badly disordered. I was completely worn out and discouraged when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, but they went right to the cause of the trouble and did their work well. I have been feeling well ever since."

IMPORTANCE OF THE COMMA.

Getting Punctuation Mark in Wrong Place May Cause Trouble.

"Some lawsuits of the highest importance have hinged upon the right placing of a comma," said Judge F. C. Downing of St. Louis.

"When I first started to practice law a Missouri editor came to me in a peck of trouble to defend him against a threatened libel suit growing out of faulty punctuation. He had not meant to give some innocent young women the slightest offense when he wrote a story about 'two young men who went with their girls to attend a lecture and after they left, the girls got drunk.' Putting that miserable little comma out of its right place did the work, as it made the girls the ones who became inebriated instead of their escorts. I managed by proper diplomacy and the publication of a neat apology to stave off the damage suits, and afterward my editorial friend became an expert on punctuation."

DEFENSE OF THE BACHELOR.

Baltimore Man Points Out a Few Facts Generally Overlooked.

As a matter of fact, it is obvious that more crimes are committed by married men than by single men, for the simple reason that many offenses exceedingly popular among the former are entirely impossible to the latter. One such crime is wife murder. How could a single man murder his wife? There are 775 wife murderers in the United States every year, and all are committed by married men. Again, consider the crime of demonicide, or mother-in-law killing. Its practice is confined entirely to married men. And forget not the lesser felonies and misdemeanors. How could a single man elope with his wife's sister? How could he desert his children? How could he commit bigamy? How could he flirt with his wife's maid? How could he be accused of non-support? What incentive is there for him to cheat the gas meter, swindle the instalment men or rob his brother-in-law at poker? Being prosperous, well fed and happy—as all bachelors are—why should he steal, forge, embezzle, burgle or fight?—Baltimore Sun.

COMING WEST.

Shoe Industry Gradually Leaving Eastern Coast.

Massachusetts and Connecticut are generally thought of as the big shoe manufacturing states, but, as the great west has become more densely populated, these states are slowly losing prestige.

Wisconsin, for instance, has the largest manufacturer of full vamp shoes in the world—The F. Mayer Boot & Shoe Co. of Milwaukee. The market for this company's product is the great west from the Mississippi to the Pacific. Undoubtedly it is Milwaukee's nearness to this great west market which is responsible for the great growth of this concern which has been in proportion to the growth of the west. In the last 25 years they have outgrown six factories. Including the new Seattle factory nearly completed and the Milwaukee factory annex built this last year the total capacity of the Mayer Boot & Shoe Company exceeds 9,000 pairs per day, which already has been inadequate to meet the demand of the west.

A Proud Boy.

An Englishman who was traveling in Turkey last winter to study the people says that the children have very little respect for their parents compared to their conduct in other countries. On one occasion he was questioning a lad of 12, and after he had asked him if he could read and write and had received a negative answer the boy brightened up and said:

"You are a man, and I am only a boy, but I can do one thing you can't."

"Well, what is that?" was asked.

"I can swear at my mother in English and you cannot swear at yours in Turkish. I am therefore greater than you."

YOU'RE A LIAR!
SO'RE YOU!

WASHINGTON.—If there ever lived a man whose appearance would suggest that the blood had become tame and ready to wait on the judgment that man is David A. De Armond, representative in congress from Missouri, yet it was the self-contained, apparently absolutely impassive David De Armond who walked over to the desk of John Sharp Williams not long ago, called him a liar, received the retort courteous in the way of a blow and then returned in kind.

At a distance the Missouri representative looks like a man of 25; at close range he looks like a man of 75. Most people see him at a distance—the gallery distance—and these long-range observers read with absolute amazement the statement that the Missourian is 63 years old. To account for the act of the seemingly self-contained one in calling his colleague a liar there are people to declare that it was not De Armond who used "the shorter and uglier word," it was Missouri. There is something in this, doubtless.

David A. De Armond is a lawyer, one of the best, so it is said, in the congress. He was appointed one of the managers on the part of the house in the impeachment proceedings against Judge Swayne, of Florida.

Everything that De Armond says apparently is measured, but nevertheless there is no halting in his speech, and what he says is well worth listening to, and, what's more, it is listened to. De Armond is the last man in the house of representatives who would be named as one likely to be engaged in a brawl, let alone to bring on the brawl by a heated word out of his own mouth.

Opportunity for Airship Inventors

SPECIFICATIONS for the construction of a dirigible balloon for the use of the army and for which the signal service of the war department asked proposals, were issued the other day by Gen. Allen, the chief signal officer. The specifications are quite elaborate, and are framed with the view of securing the best possible balloon which the latest developments in aerial navigation can produce. The balloon is to be of silk, inflated with hydrogen capable of carrying two people weighing 350 pounds, with 100 pounds of ballast, must be capable of making a speed of 20 miles per hour in still air, though a lower speed may be proposed at reduced cost, down to 16 miles, or a higher speed up to 24 miles at an enhanced cost. It must make an endurance flight of two hours at an average speed of 70 per cent. of the trial requirements, and must maintain its equilibrium without change of position by the aeronaut.

One of the features of the specifications that will appeal particularly to inventors of limited financial means is that relative to the silk to be used in the construction of the balloon. This is one of the most expensive items in the machine, and it is stated that the material for the gas bag will be furnished by the government. The signal office has procured some samples of silk of great strength, pliability and closeness of texture. It weighs 5,842 ounces per square yard and has a minimum breaking strength of 62½ pounds per inch width. This material requires no varnish, but is to be covered with an aluminum preparation, which will not only make it gas tight, but will, by reflecting the rays of the sun, prevent a considerable loss of hydrogen, such as occurs when an ordinary balloon is suddenly exposed to the increased temperature of the sunlight upon emerging from a cloud.

Why Candler Was Turned Down

THE one Democrat in the house of representatives who has a thorough right to growl at Speaker Joseph G. Cannon is Representative Ezekiel Samuel Candler, Jr., of Mississippi, representing Itawamba, Noxubee, Oktibbeha, Tishomingo and some other counties of the good old southern state. In the last congress Ezekiel Samuel made a speech in favor of a bill appropriating a large sum of money for the improvement of the Tombigbee river. Mr. Candler came within an ace of making the Tombigbee as famous, temporarily at least, as Private John Allen, a fellow Mississippian, made the town Tupelo.

There were prose and song in equal measure in the Mississippian's plea for the Tombigbee. He wanted a huge sum of money, but prose and song failed of their purpose, notwithstanding the fact that the house had a light and an agreeable time of it for several hours while the loyal Mississippian held forth in his pleadings.

Now as for Mr. Candler's right to growl at Speaker Cannon. The Republican chieftain wants to keep down the appropriations this winter. For some reason or other he has an idea that the agricultural department is likely to have some special pleaders for money before the committee on agriculture. Representative Candler was a member of this committee in the last congress, and he wanted to be a member of it in this congress. Mr. Cannon, however, remembered the plea for the millions for the improvement of the Tombigbee river that the Mississippian had made last year with a perfect face and a perfect faith, and came to the conclusion that a man who could ask for millions as another man might ask for hundreds would be too easy a mark for the beguiling ones of the agricultural department.

Says Soldiers Want Canteen

THE abolition of the canteen has made it impossible for the United States army recruiting station to keep the army and navy supplied with able-bodied men.

This is the drift of the report made by Capt. Johnson Hagood of the coast artillery service, who was detailed a year ago to look into the reason why it is so difficult to induce men to enter the army and navy.

The publication makes a volume of 100 printed pages, profusely illustrated. The illustrations convey in the most graphic manner an idea of the slender proportions to which Uncle Sam's regular army is now reduced in point of numbers. A full page frontispiece depicts a company of infantry starting from Fort Niagara on a 21-day practice march, with nine men in the ranks, although the authorized strength was 65 men, and some of the other pictures show an even worse state of affairs.

The report also undertakes to show why soldiers will not stay in the army, some of the answers being based on demands for restoration of the canteen, less frequent change of station, fewer court-martials, building gymnasiums and increased pay.

The report shows the changes that have occurred in recent years in the expense of living at the army posts; how the value of the allowances has shrunken, how traveling expenses of officers with families have increased through abolition of passes and reduced rates of fare; how more frequent changes of post involve heavy household expenses, and Capt. Hagood points out that unprecedentedly it is now very difficult to obtain suitable material to fill the numerous vacancies at West Point.

LEAP YEAR.

SOLDIERS SENT TO MUNCIE

ADJUTANT GENERAL ASKS FOR THEM AFTER CONFERENCE.

Gov. Hanly Orders Battery and Twelve Companies of Infantry to Help Suppress Riots.

Muncie, Ind. — At a conference Friday night between Adjt. Gen. Perry, Mayor Guthrie, the sheriff, city officials and several prominent citizens, it was decided to ask Gov. Hanly to send state troops here at once.

When the day's work was ended many of the policemen who had been on constant duty for 48 hours lay down on the station floor and fell asleep. The majority of the special men who had been sworn in refused to serve longer.

As a result Gen. Perry telephoned Gov. Hanly details of the situation and he promptly ordered out battery A and four companies of Indianapolis infantry and eight companies from other cities in the state. The understanding was that martial law is not to be proclaimed unless necessary, the duty of the troops being to work in conjunction with the police in maintaining order. The troops will be brought by special cars.

Rioting was resumed Friday. Cars started to run on regular schedule without interruption and were not molested for several hours. A crowd attacked two cars in the outskirts of the city, hurling stones and other missiles, and after driving off the crews completely wrecked the cars. Squads of police were hurried to the place and over 50 arrests were made. The jail is nearly filled with rioters, and orders were repeated to arrest every member of a street gathering that contained more than three persons. There was no attempt at violence in the downtown sections of the city. Two of the rioters were badly hurt, one of them being cut in the throat with a knife, but not fatally hurt.

CHILDREN BURN TO DEATH.

Three Perish in Flames and Mother Is Badly Injured.

Collinsville, Ill.—The explosion of a lamp in the home of George Steger set fire to the house and three children perished in the flames. The victims, aged respectively eight years, four years and 18 days, were in bed when the explosion took place and scattered coal oil all over the room and saturated the bed clothing which at once burst into a roaring blaze. The mother, Mrs. Mary Steger, was seriously burned in attempting to rescue her children.

Paris Suburbanites in Riot.

Paris.—Three thousand suburbanites residing along the line of the Western railroad, exasperated by continuous delays in transit through which they allege they lose hours in pay daily and sometimes even are dismissed by their employers, Friday wrecked the offices at the St. Lazare terminus of the railroad and for an hour held the police at bay, finally being dislodged by the fire department, which played streams from two lines of hose upon them. The company says cold weather caused the delays.

Steamer Sinks; Only Three Saved.

Mexico City.—Roman Portas, second officer of the steamer Ibero, has arrived at Vera Cruz. He says the vessel sank in a storm on the night of December 2, and all on board were lost except three.

IS TIRED OF YARMOUTH.

Harry Thaw's Sister Asks for Annulment of Marriage.

London.—The failure of another alliance of the English nobility with an American woman of wealth became public Friday afternoon, when the countess of Yarmouth, who was Alice Thaw of Pittsburg, a daughter of Mrs. William Thaw and a sister of Harry K. Thaw, whose second trial for the murder of Stanford White will begin next Monday in New York city, applied to the divorce court for an annulment of her marriage to the earl of Yarmouth.

The court has ordered that the proceedings be held in camera and the papers are being kept secret. The only inkling obtainable of the charges preferred is a statement to the effect that the nature of the medical evidence to be given makes a public hearing inadvisable.

It has been well known for two years that the domestic affairs of the Yarmouths were most unhappy. The earl's companions and his manner of living were such that he could not give his wife the position in society she had a right to expect. She supplied immense sums to defray her husband's extravagances, and her friends say she has conducted herself with dignity throughout the troubles resulting from the unhappy marriage and her brother's difficulties.

MEDAL FOR MILWAUKEE MAN.

Bravery of Edward McGrath Recognized by President Roosevelt.

Washington.—The president has awarded a railroad life saving medal to Edward McGrath, station agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway at Stowell station, Milwaukee. He is a cripple.

In August last year while Mr. McGrath was on the station platform, the crossing gates being closed, Emma Hummich, six years old, attempted to cross the tracks in front of an approaching train. McGrath shouted to her, but she failed to heed his warning and was in imminent danger of being run down. McGrath ran to her aid and with great risk to himself, succeeded in lifting her from in front of the train.

EXPLOSION KILLS WOMEN.

Two Perish in Accident in a Fireworks Factory.

Rochester, N. Y.—In an explosion that wrecked a building of the Rochester Fireworks company Thursday one young woman, Sadie Ernst, was instantly killed, a second, Mrs. Lil O'Connor, recently married, was so badly injured that she died at a hospital a short time after being taken there. May Calligan was seriously burned, but is expected to recover.

The explosion occurred in the finishing room of a building of the company's plant in Main street east, and the force of it blew out one side of the building and caused the roof to fall in.

Rockefeller Gives U. of C. $2,191,000.

Chicago. — John D. Rockefeller made another princely gift to the University of Chicago Thursday. It amounted to $2,191,000. The sum of $2,000,000 is to be used for endowment purposes and is in the form of securities from which the university will realize $80,000 annually, according to the donor. This brings the benefactions of Mr. Rockefeller to the University of Chicago to a total of over $23,000,000.

MANY SEE PRESIDENT

IMMENSE THRONG ATTENDS NEW YEAR'S RECEPTION.

ALL OFFICIALDOM THERE

Brilliant Scene in the White House—Mr. Roosevelt Especially Greets Centenarian Resident of Washington.

Washington. — Theodore Roosevelt Wednesday officiated for the seventh time as president of the United States at the New Year's reception at the White House. Assisting him in exchanging the salutations of the season were Mrs. Roosevelt and the members and ladies of the cabinet.

The niceties of diplomatic etiquette were religiously observed in the conduct of that part of the reception which has grown during the past hundred years and more to partake largely of the nature of an official function. In this way, but without appearance of prearrangement, the president greeted first the vice president and the members of his cabinet, then each foreign nation represented in the person of ambassador or minister; the judiciary, through the personnel of the supreme court bench and the judges of the local federal and district courts; senators and representatives in congress; officers of the army, navy, marine corps and militia of the District of Columbia; heads of government bureaus, and members of government commissions; organizations of veterans, and Oldest Inhabitants' association of the District of Columbia.

Public There in a Throng.

Then came the public gathering in a constantly lengthening line at the west gate of the White House grounds, the people had stood since nine o'clock in the morning. It was one o'clock when the gates were opened to admit them. The line, kept intact by a special detail of police, now extended in double column for two blocks up Pennsylvania avenue and for two blocks down Seventeenth street past the state, war and navy building. It was a joyous holiday throng and left its impress of good feeling on the president, who, after more than four hours of handshaking, expressed exhilaration rather than exhaustion.

Three members of the recent Central American peace conference, who still remain in the city, were specially invited guests, including Senor Don Policarpo Bonilla, ex-president of Honduras; Senor Don E. Constantino Fialloe, minister of foreign affairs of Honduras, and senor Don Jose Madriz of Nicaragua, secretary to the conference. W. W. Rockhill, United States minister to China, also was in attendance. Assistant Secretaries Bacon, Adee and Wilson occupied themselves actively in entertaining the diplomats.

Admiral Dewey, who has just passed his seventieth birthday, headed the naval contingent, and was heartily greeted by the president.

Admiral Brownson Calls.

Rear Admiral Brownson was one of the first officers of the navy to greet President Roosevelt. To do this he left his place in the line as soon as he entered the White House and made his way through the crowd and into the red parlor, passing Rear Admiral Rixey and taking his place immediately after the army officers who preceded the navy. Admiral Brownson's hand was grasped by several of his brother officers as he was making his way ahead of them. After his greeting to the president, which was cordial, he remained in the east room for some time chatting and receiving greetings.

President Roosevelt took occasion in his New Year's greeting to Dr. Starr, who has just celebrated his one hundredth birthday anniversary, to congratulate the veteran member of the Oldest Inhabitants' association and wish him many returns of the day.

"You, sir, have seen the growth of this republic," said the president as he recognized Dr. Starr, and recalled his previous New Year's visits.

Dr. Starr made an earnest reply, whereupon the president remarked: "Any word from you, sir, will receive instant consideration."

Secretary Cortelyou, who has been confined to his home for some time past with an attack of the grip, had so far recovered as to be able to attend the reception. He was warmly greeted by the president and his fellow cabinet members.

Shakes Hands 5,645 Times.

The last person in the line, a newspaper man, asked the president if he was tired. "Not a bit," he replied, laughing. Just then Chief Usher Stone informed the president that he had shaken hands 5,645 times. Beyond another laugh the president made no answer.

Throughout the long reception Mrs. Roosevelt and the ladies of the cabinet stood with the president in the blue room. They appeared to be not fatigued by the ordeal. The reception terminated at 1:57 p. m.

TOBACCO MEN ARE UNEASY

QUIET AT RUSSELLVILLE, BUT THE WAR IS NOT ENDED.

Burley Growers and Trust Fail to Agree—Friday's Raid Will Be Investigated.

Louisville, Ky. — Although all is apparently quiet in the war between the tobacco growers of Kentucky and Tennessee against the American Tobacco company, the developments of Friday have given great uneasiness. The town of Russellville, which was raided by nightriders early in the morning, was quiet at night, but the sheriff and his deputies, the police and the citizens were on the alert to prevent any repetition of the outrages.

It was decided by the peace officers and the leading citizens in view of the improbability of another raid that the governor would not be asked for troops. State Fire Marshal Mott Ayres, however, is on his way to Russellville and will begin an immediate investigation of Thursday night's raid which resulted in the shooting of three men by the riders, the burning of two tobacco warehouses and a planing mill and the partial destruction of three smaller buildings. The county judge and court officials notified Gov. Willson that a special term of court will be called to consider the evidence brought out by the investigation and that extraordinary efforts will be made to apprehend and punish the guilty parties.

The most disturbing news of the day, following, as it did, on the heels of the Russellville raid, was the failure of the Burley Tobacco society and the chief buyers for the American Tobacco company to agree regarding the marketing of the 1907 crop held by the society. The parties met at Winchester in accordance with the terms of a compromise agreement recently brought about by Gov. Willson. The Burley men wanted the company to buy 60,000 hogsheads of tobacco from them, while the buyers would agree to take but 10,000 hogsheads. The Burley men consented to sell the smaller amount. The tobacco had already been inspected and graded. The Burley men fixed a minimum price of 15 cents a pound. The company buyers refused to give more than 12 cents.

RECEIVERS FOR SEABOARD LINE.

Federal Judge Places Road in Hands of Bankers.

Richmond, Va. — The Seaboard Air Line Railroad system was put into the hands of receivers here Thursday through the action of Judge Pritchard, of the United States circuit court, who was hurriedly summoned from Asheville, N. C.

Judge Pritchard appointed as receivers R. Lancaster Williams of Richmond and S. Davies Warfield of Baltimore. Both men are identified with banking houses in Baltimore, Williams being of the firm of Middendorf, Williams & Co., and Warfield being president of the Continental Trust company. Mr. Williams is also a partner in the firm of John L. Williams & Sons of this city. The bond of each was fixed at $50,000.

Judge Pritchard's decree gives the receivers immediate possession of the property, which embraces the main stem from Portsmouth, Va., to Tampa, Fla., with numerous branches to coast points on the east and Atlanta, Montgomery and Birmingham on the west, a total of 2,382 miles.

Famous "Fighting Surgeon" of Chicago Passes Away.

Chicago.—Dr. Nicholas Senn, Chicago's "fighting doctor" and one of the foremost surgeons of the central west, died at his residence here Thursday.

It was at the time of the Spanish war that Dr. Senn rose to national prominence. He was appointed surgeon general of the Sixth Army Corps, with the rank of lieutenant colonel and chief of the operating staff of the army in the field. He saw active service in Cuba from May until September, and after his return wrote several books.

Dr. Senn was American delegate to the international medical congress held in Berlin in 1900, and a delegate for the United States to the International Red Cross congress held in St. Petersburg the following year. He also was connected with many medical and surgical associations in this country and abroad. He was a Swiss by birth, having been born at St. Gall on October 31, 1844.

The Fertile Creamery published its annual report for 1907 last week. During the year it paid to patrons $29,221, and has remaining in bank 3,587. The expenses for the year were $2,960.

The Minnesota Mascot, published down in Lyon county is out with a boom for J.F. Jacobson as the next republican candidate for governor. It seems to be a little early to get started in the game as "the interests" will not begin to wake up until the weather gets warmer, and they have won the past two campaigns that is they won the nomination, and that's a l.

What looks like adversity is not always as bad, as it seems. On hearing of the accident to Frank Jeffers a man remarked to us the other day that if Frank Jeffers was to come back to Red Lake county on eruthe; he could have any political office in the gift of the people of the county Frank surly was and is popular with the common people of this county and who can tell but that he might come back and get into the political game again?-Plummer Pioneer.

With the coming of the new year the issuance of railroad passes to members of the legislature and others has been dis discontinued. Courtesies of this kind to newspapers in exchange for advertising were cut off a year ago, as we believe to the detriment of all concerned, in cluding the public The people are interested in the publishing of time tables, notices of special rates, etc., and we can see no objection to paying for their publication in transportation.-Ada Index.

The creamery meeting at the school house last Monday was largely attended, by share holders and others who took shares, and the new board of directors were elected. The board will meet at Highlanding to qualify next Saturday afternoon and work will commence on building this winter, and pushed until the creamery is completed. We have discovered three important facts, vis. first: That we need the creamery; second: That there is plenty of capitul interested tributary to Highlanding to build the creamery. third: That there are plenty of cows and feed to feed them tributary to Highlanding to support the creamery.

The bill introduced by Congressman Steenerson to drain the ceded lands of the Red Lake Indian reservation is, in our opinion, the most important piece of legislation ever attempted by a representative in congress from this state for the benefit of the state If it becomes a law it will add millions of dollars to the wealth of the state, and afford an opportunity for a large army of people to become wealth producers. It can be accomplished only by the government taking the initiative and furnishing the large amount of money—$1,100,000—to dig the drainage ditches and this would all be paid back to the government again by the settlers who would take these lands for homes. All the people of the state should take an active interest in seeing this law enacted.-Thief River Falls News.

The Crippla and His Father.

Not even the wide flapping trousers of his sailor suit could wholly hide the slender form wasting away from lack of use. Smoldering brown eyes illuminated the little face, made wizen by hours of pain, as he smiled up at the tall man at his side, who, broad of shoulder and strong of face, smiled back encouragingly.

A troop of small boys noisily invaded the car at the next station. Reckless in their good spirits, one of their number was roughly pushed against a crutch, causing it to fall to the floor. The man's eyes blazed more with anguish than with anger as he exclaimed harshly, "Be careful!"

The sturdy urchins, awed at what had occurred, subsided in seats opposite. The man looked over their heads into space. The child looked first at the boys, then with questioning eyes back at the man.

"Fawther," he whispered as he lightly touched his sleeve, "would you love me better if I was like those boys?"

The man gave a startled glance across the aisle at "those boys," insolent in their perfect health and boyhood vigor, then tightly grasping the hand nearest to him said: "No, son. I love you better than all the world—just as you are."—New York Times.

Risky Speculatinn.

In the days "befo' de wah" a handy negro named Jack was saving money earned at odd times with which to buy his freedom. His master encouraged him and kept his money for him. In time Jack had saved $900 and needed only another hundred to make him free. His master told him that it wouldn't be long now until he could get another hundred. Jack went out with another slave to celebrate some local festival. Returning along the railroad track they were frightened by an approaching train. Both got off the track, but Jack's companion fell and, striking his head against a rock, was killed. Jack hurried as rapidly as he could to his master's house. It was a late hour, but the master must hear him. He said, "Gimme mah money right now." The astonished master remonstrated, saying, "But, Jack, you need only another hundred dollars to get free." "I knows it, Mars' Henry, I knows it, but niggers is too onsartin. Bill jes' killed hisself by bustin' his head agin a rock, an' I ain' gwine luves' mah money in nothin' as onsartin as niggers."—Washington Herald.

Big, Big Words.

"Those who are accustomed to ridicule present day scientists because of their fondness for big words," said the etymologist, "will find them much more moderate in the concoction of words than the old timers.

"For instance, I have just come across the account of a scientific treatise published in the seventeenth century that contains words even much more cumbersome than its title, which, by the way, is 'Ponzoologicomineralogia,' a good mouthful surely, yet the meaning is easily ascertained when the word is reduced to its component ports.

"The list of long titles that were then favorites would couse the modern book clerk a sposm, yet the list could be gone into indefinitely. A play in blank verse published in the latter part of the seventeenth century hod as its alluring title 'Chrononhotonthologos,' and this wos the opening sentence:

"'Aldeborontiphoscophornio, where left you Chrononhotonthologos?'

"If the modern mouthing actor can hardly get simple Anglo-Saxon words over the footlights, how could he get along with that morsel?"—New York Herald.

How Woxall Was Named.

Near Schwenksville, Pa., is a village that bears the name of Woxall. This wonderful name was the result of an error upon the part of the postoffice department in Washington. The place was known many years ago as "Croppestettel," or "Crowtown," and later as Mechanicsville, but when a postoffice was established there in 1888 neither of these names was satisfactory, and it was decided to choose a new cognomen. Many were the suggestions submitted to the postoffice department, but all were found to be too nearly like the name of some other postoffice to be acceptable. One day the village storekeeper saw the word "Noxall" upon a piece of calico and called the attention of several friends to it. At once all agreed that "Noxall" would be a fine name for their town. So the postoffice authorities were notified. Soon a letter came from Woshington approving the name that had been chosen, but in the letter it wos spelled "Woxall." So Woxall became the name of the villoge.--Philadelphia Record

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon, to get these results—and they get them. Manufactured by Breaking the Trail.

Winter in the mountains is severe in its restrictions. Sledging and travel over the snow banked trails are limited to bare necessity. In the colder seasons the trails are kept open by shoveling and packing them down. When the runners sing intermittently in high, thin voices, the teamster, with a belt tight around his overcoat and flopping his arms to keep warm, faces his greatest hardships, but when the heavy snows and rapid thaws of spring come teaming means a battle and a venture with a sudden termination hanging just above. Thousands of tons of snow up the mountain sides hang on a trigger that can be sprung by the sigh of a breeze or the rolling of a pine cone, and in summer many a barren slope and pile of rock and timber at the bottom tells a skeleton tale of the winter's night. Floundering, swearing and persevering open the trail—a little ruffed thread of white from up above, but a hard day's work for a man.—Outing Magazine.

CATARRH MADE LIFE A BURDEN TO ME.

MISS ANNIE CATRON, 927 Main St., Cincinnati, Ohio, writes:

"As I have found Peruna a blessing for a severe case of catarrh of the head and throat which I suffered from for a number of years, I am only too pleased to give it my personal endorsement.

"Catarrh, such as I suffered from, made life a burden to me, my breath was offensive, stomach bad, and my head stopped up so that I was usually troubled with a headache, and although I tried many so-called remedies, nothing gave me permanent relief. I was rather discouraged with all medicines when Peruna was suggested to me.

"However, I did buy a bottle, and before that was finished thers was a marked change in my condition. Much encouraged I kept on until I was completely cured in a month's time, and I find that my general health is also excellent."

People who prefer solid medicines should try Peruna tablets. Each tablet represents one average dose of Peruna.

Seeking Experience.

Up to the age of 16 Dick had retained the proper scorn of things feminine. Then he went to dancing school and fell smitten by the charms of several youthful Eves. Accordingly, Dick approached his father and requested theater tickets for two.

Father complied and merely asked as he turned over the seats, "Which girl is it?"

"I'm going to take Mabel," responded Dick.

"Then she's the one you like best?" father continued.

Dick turned a superior and pitying eye upon his parent. "Oh, no! I don't like her best. You don't understand the situation, father. It isn't the girl I care about. It's the experience I want."

FOUND A WAY

To Be Clear of the Coffee Troubles.

"Husband and myself both had the coffee habit and finally his stomach and kidneys got in such a bad condition that he was compelled to give up a good position that he had held for years. He was too sick to work. His skin was yellow, and I hardly think there was an organ in his body that was not affected.

"I told him I felt sure his sickness was due to coffee and after some discussion he decided to give it up.

"It was a struggle because of the powerful habit. One day we heard about Postum and concluded to try it, and then it was easy to leave off coffee.

"His fearful headaches grew less frequent, his complexion began to clear, kidneys grew better until at last he was a new man altogether, as a result of leaving off coffee and taking up Postum. Then I began to drink it, too.

"Although I was never as bad off as my husband, I was always very nervous and never at any time very strong, only weighing 95 lbs. before I began to use Postum. Now I weigh 115 lbs. and can do as much work as anyone my size, I think.

"Many do not use Postum because they have not taken the trouble to make it right. I have successfully fooled a great many persons who have drunk it at my table. They would remark, 'You must buy a high grade of coffee.' One young man who clerked in a grocery store was very enthusiastic about my 'coffee.' When I told him what it was, he said, 'why I've sold Postum for four years but I had no idea it was like this. Think I'll drink Postum hereafter.'"

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Smallpox Regulations.

St. Paul—Warning cards for smallpox and other diseases will be distributed in a few days by the state board of health to local health officers over the state. The old style quarantine card may continue in use in the larger cities of the state, where there are active boards of health and salaried health officers, but there will be no more strict quarantine enforced in the smaller places under the new rules adopted by the state board of health. "Shotgun" quarantine is the only effective kind, say the members of the board, and that is impracticable and unnecessary if proper protective measures are followed.

The new card will be a small white one, with heavy black letters spelling the following simple inscription:

> WARNING—There is smallpox in this house.
>
> This card must not be removed except by permission of the board of health.

The prohibition against persons entering or leaving the house no longer holds, and the only rule is that the patient must remain indoors until the card is removed. There is no minimum time limit for the patient's detention either. It was four weeks under the old rule.

Potatoes.

Moorhead—Clay county, which is a part of the Red river valley, will go on record this year with a potato crop conservatively valued at $375,000. On this crop the Schroeder family, well known and extensive potato growers, had in this year 733 acres, from which they harvested 109,950 bushels. Not a bushel has been sold for less than 62 cents a bushel, and the growers are contracting for delivery next spring at 75 cents a bushel. From 238 acres of the 733 acres there was harvested 38,200 bushels, and from this particular lot there have been shipped already 94 cars. They have storehouse capacity for 50 cars.

Saloons Burn Up.

East Grand Forks—Fire destroyed the saloons of Thomas Powers, Kittleson & Holt and Hans Gustad, and the restaurant of Paul Hagen, at this place. The total loss is $25,000. The buildings were owned by Hagen, and his loss is $10,000, with insurance of $3,000. Powers had insurance of $3,000 on his stock, and the losses of the others are covered. The Grand Forks department assisted in stopping the flames, which threatened to destroy an entire block. The fire started in the basement of the Powers saloon from an oil heater used to keep the beer from getting too cold.

Iron Deposit Is Rich.

Faribault—The iron deposit on the farms of William Leary and Charles W. Marks, lying a few miles east of Faribault, has proved to be genuine, and there is a large body of ore. State Chemist Drew, of the University of Minnesota, has assayed samples of the ore taken from these farms and has found that it contained 33 per cent pure iron. The ore is near the surface and can be mined and loaded cheaply. Only the beds near the surface have been explored. Further developments are to be made to ascertain how deep the vein runs.

Lost His Legs.

Blackduck—Frank Jeffries, former register of deeds of Red Lake county, and ex-superintendent of schools at Red Lake Falls, lost both his legs here as the result of an accident, and it is probable that he will die. Mr. Jeffries, who had spent the day in the city as the sales representative of the Northwestern Publishing Company of Crookston, where he now lives, was about to board the northbound Great Northern passenger train when he fell between two coaches just as the train was pulling out. Amputation of both legs was necessary.

Nearly Starved.

New Ulm—Chief of Police Klauss saved two women from starving to death. He attacked a door of a house in North Franklin street with an ax and found in the rooms Mrs. Dora Fierle, 60 years old, and her daughter, Antoinette, 22 years old, in a stupor from hunger and cold. They had been self-imprisoned for four days, and when aroused, warmed and fed, the aged woman expressed surprise when told that Christmas was past. There was no fire in the stove and the women had eaten nothing for nearly a week.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—A real Irish play with the popular Irish tenor, Fiske O'Hara, whose rapid rise to the front ranks of the singing comedians has been a phenomenal one, will be seen at the Bijou Opera House, Minneapolis, the week of Jan. 5th. The place is called "Dion O'Dare," and in the title role that is perfectly fitted to his well known talents.

St. Paul—The Michigan Mutual Life Insurance Company of Detroit has given notice to Insurance Commissioner J. A. Hartigan of its intention to withdraw from the state.

Minneapolis—Spontaneous combustion caused a fire in the paint department at the Soo railroad shops, Twenty-ninth avenue northeast and Howard street.

DOCTOR SAID "USE CUTICURA"

In Bad Case of Eczema on Child—Disease Had Reached a Fearful State—His Order Resulted in Complete Cure.

"When I was small I was troubled with eczema for about three months. It was all over my face and covered nearly all of my head. It reached such a state that it was just a large scab all over, and the pain and itching were terrible. I doctored with an able physician for some time and was then advised by him to use the Cuticura Remedies which I did and I was entirely cured. I have not been bothered with it since. I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment but do not know exactly how much was used to complete the cure. I can safely say that Cuticura did a lot for me. Miss Anabel Wilson, North Branch, Mich., Oct. 20. 1907."

HERE GOES ANOTHER ILLUSION.

"Fiddling Bob" Declares He Has Not Played for Many Years.

Another cherished illusion has been shattered. Senator Taylor of Tennessee, lovingly called throughout the union "Fiddling Bob," doesn't play the fiddle after all. He has entered a formal denial. Pretty soon somebody will be saying that Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson of Merrimac fame never kissed a pretty young hero worshiper. Representative Hughes of New Jersey asked Senator Taylor about his musical accomplishments.

"Haven't played a fiddle for a dozen years," said the Tennesseean. "That fiddling story is all wrong. I haven't touched a bow for years."

"Maybe you play the violin, then?" ventured Hughes.

"Oh, I never even saw one of those darned things," retorted the senator.

Why Sloan's Liniment and Veterinary Remedies Are the Best to Use.

Let me tell you why Sloan's Liniment and Veterinary Remedies are the safest and most practical on the market to-day. In the first place, Dr. Earl S. Sloan is the son of a veterinary surgeon, and from his earliest infancy he was associated with horses.

He bought and sold horses while yet very young. He practiced as a veterinary for 20 years and has battled successfully with every disease to which that animal is subject.

All his remedies are the result of experiments made to save life or relieve suffering while he was practicing his profession.

Any reader, by writing to Dr. Earl S. Sloan, 615 Albany Street, Boston, Mass., will receive "Sloan's Treatise on the Horse," free. This book tells how to treat horses, cattle, hogs, and poultry.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. VII. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 17, 1908. NO. 42.

The General Demand

of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

A Busy Locality.

Jack is the eight-year-old son of a Philadelphia suburban merchant, and not long ago made his first visit to New York with his father. The strenuosity of the big town got on the boy's nerves, and by bedtime he was about run down. He tumbled into bed quite regardless of certain duties, but his father was more observant.

"Don't forget to say your prayers, my boy," he said.

"O, what's the use, pop?" responded the boy. "God's too busy over here to bother with a little thing like that."

The father was shocked, but under the circumstances he thought it best not to urge his son.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Whereupon the chauffeur replied: "Yes, them feeding-bottles do cut up the tires dreadful."

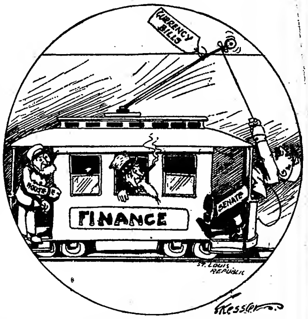
PUTTING THE TROLLEY ON!



CANAL COST, $200,000,000

CHANGED CONDITIONS CAUSE INCREASE OF ESTIMATE.

Part Will Be Repaid by Panama Government—Reasons for Raising of the Figures.

Washington.—Because of changed conditions from those existing in 1905, when the minority of the board of consulting engineers of the Panama canal submitted its report, it is now admitted in responsible quarters that the estimate made by that report for building the canal was far too low and that the cost may approximate $200,000,000.

This includes various incidental items, such as administration, sanitation and improvements aggregating several millions of dollars in Panama and Colon, which, however, will be refunded by the Panama government; the expenses of the zone government, and various expenses incidental to the relocation and acquisition of the Panama railroad. The estimate of the board in 1905 was that the cost of the canal would be $139,765,200, but this estimate did not include expenses on account of interest during construction, sanitation and zone government.

Last spring the present commission made some general estimates of the probable cost of the work which resulted in placing it anywhere between $210,000,000 and $250,000,000, but the more conservative members believed the lower figure would prove ultimately correct. Since that time some of the commissioners have found that a considerable saving can be made from the lower estimate which warrants them in placing the estimated cost at nearer $200,000,000 than a higher figure. Various reasons are assigned for the increased cost, including wider and longer locks than those proposed by the board of engineers, a greater quantity of excavation than that estimated by the board, an increase in unit prices and higher prices for labor than those thought adequate by the board. That board estimated the locks would cost less than $40,000,000, while the present commission thinks it will be between $52,000,000 and $60,000,000 with a still greater increase of ten per cent. if the locks are further widened as proposed by the navy department.

HEINZE LOSES CONTROL OF BANK

Couldn't Pay for Stock in the Mercantile National.

New York.—Being unable to meet payments due on his stock in the institution Wednesday Augustus Heinze lost control of the Mercantile National, the conduct of which as its president brought about his arraignment in the United States circuit court earlier in the day on charges of over-certification.

One year ago Heinze bought a controlling interest from the Goulds, with whom he pledged his holdings as security for his promise to pay them in full within one year. This loan of $1,200,000 was due Wednesday to Edwin Gould and William Nelson Cromwell, who was a member of the Gould party in the bank before the Mercantile was added to the Heinze-Morse-Thomas chain of financial houses.

Theater Folk Indicted.

Kansas City, Mo.—Indictments numbering 160 against persons, most of whom are engaged in theatrical work, charged with violating the state law of 1835 which forbids unnecessary labor on Sunday, were returned by the grand jury Friday. Many of the indicted persons are non-resident actors, who will either have to return here for trial or forfeit their bonds of $200 cash.

SLAYS BLIND SON ON GRAVE.

Awul Deed Committed by Edwin Collier of Ravenna, O.

Ravenna, O.—Edwin Collier, Sr., took his eight-year-old blind son, Edwin, to his wife's grave in Ravenna cemetery some time Thursday night, shot him dead and then put a bullet through his own body, near the heart. He will die.

The bodies were found late Friday afternoon. The little boy's corpse was frozen stiff. Both of the father's feet are frozen and he was unconscious from cold and loss of blood.

A letter found near the scene of the tragedy and declared to be in Collier's handwriting reads: "January 9.—Dear Friends: This is a terrible thing to do but I am tired of life and I know God will forgive me. It seems as though there has been nothing but trouble for me ever since the day I was born. I can't stand it to see my poor little Edwin go through this hard, cold world without his sight, and the doctors have told me they can do nothing for him.

"Besides I am so lonesome for my wife—my poor little Flo. So good-by all. What money is left from my insurance, it is my wish that Mrs. Ramsey have, also my personal belonging. Bury me beside my darling wife and my darling mother. Eddie."

Neighbors declare Collier has been dazed since the death of his wife six months ago. He continually talked about her and brooded over the blind boy's condition, which he had spent much money to relieve.

CURRENCY BILL BEFORE SENATE

Republican Measure Is Introduced by Mr. Aldrich.

Washington. — Senator Aldrich introduced in the senate Tuesday the currency bill which for some time has been under consideration by Republican members of the senate committee on finance. At his request the bill was read in the senate and careful attention was awarded the reading.

The bill provides for an additional issue of bank circulation which shall at no time exceed $250,000,000 upon bonds other than those issued by the government, including state and municipal bonds in approved cases. The comptroller of the currency is given discretion in the issuance of the proposed currency and is authorized to decide as to the time and the amount to be awarded to any banking institution. It is provided that the increased circulation shall in no case exceed 75 per cent. of the value of the bonds deposited.

THAW JURY IS COMPLETED.

Defendant and His Wife Are Pleased with the Panel.

New York.—The second jury to try Harry K. Thaw for the killing of Stanford White was completed late Friday and on Monday the prosecution will present its direct case against the defendant.

Five jurors in all were accepted and sworn at the morning and afternoon sessions Friday. As a whole the jury is made up of a most intelligent body of business men, most of whom are of middle age or over. When the panel had finally been completed, after many vexatious delays, and after the exercise of 23 peremptory challenges by the defense and 20 by the people, Thaw announced that he was entirely satisfied and in fact well pleased with the 12 men chosen.

Young Mrs. Thaw, who has watched the selection of the jurors with the keenest interest, also declared that she was well satisfied.

MAY FREE SCHMITZ

APPELATE COURT FINDS HIS INDICTMENT INVALID.

HIS ACT WAS NO CRIME

Abe Ruef, Former Boss of Frisco, Also Benefited by Decision—Both Entitled to Release on Bail.

San Francisco.—The district court of appeals handed down a decision Thursday setting aside the judgment in the case of former Mayor Eugene E. Schmitz, convicted of extortion in the French restaurant case. Abe Ruef also benefits by the ruling of the upper court, for, according to its decision, he pleaded guilty to an act that was no offense against the laws of the state.

According to the appellate judges the compelling of French restaurants to pay "fees" to Abe Ruef was not a crime, even though Ruef divided the "fees" with the mayor.

After discussing the point the court reversed the judgment against Schmitz on the ground that no acts constituting a crime had been proved against him. Abe Ruef, who pleaded guilty to extorting money from the French restaurants, is therefore equally guiltless.

In passing upon the legality of the indictment the appellate court said:

"The indictment is claimed to be invalid for two reasons: First, that it does not allege any threat to injure property, and, second, it does not allege that the threat was to do an unlawful injury."

The gist of that portion of the decision relating to the allegation that there was no threat to injure property is contained in the following sentence:

"There is no allegation as to any threat to injure any business in direct terms, but only the threat to prevent the parties from obtaining a license to sell liquor." A license to sell liquor is not property in the ordinary sense of the word, says the court.

Commenting on the second contention of Schmitz's attorneys that there was no threat to do unlawful injury the court declares:

"We are clearly of the opinion that the indictment is insufficient, because it does not allege nor show that the specific injury threatened was an unlawful injury." It is not an unlawful act, reasons the court, to threaten to hold up the licenses of the restaurant keepers or actually to do so.

Entitled to Release on Bail.

The decision will stop the French restaurant cases, and pending charges of extortion against Schmitz and Ruef must be dismissed. Both are now entitled to release on bail. If they obtain the necessary bondsmen they can remain at liberty until such time as a jury finds them guilty on one of the indictments charging them with receiving bribes from corporations. Owing to the number of cases against them the bail, figured at $10,000 a case, would reach an enormous figure.

Can't Get Out for 60 Days.

Schmitz and Ruef cannot take advantage of the decision for 60 days. The prosecution has 20 days in which to ask for a rehearing. Then the appellate court will have ten days to consider the application. When that is done the prosecution will go through the same procedure in the supreme court, which will take the same length of time. Consequently Schmitz and Ruef will still be kept in the county jail for two months at least.

The news of the decision of the appellate court spread rapidly over the city, causing consternation in some quarters and delight in others.

BROWNSON CASE DISCUSSED.

Comes Up When Senator Hale Introduces Navy Personnel Bill.

Washington. — The Brownson affair was the chief topic of discussion in the senate Thursday. It was brought up when Senator Hale explained the navy personnel bill which was introduced by him. The presentation of the bill led Senator Tillman to ask whether members of the committee would have an opportunity to get facts in relation to the controversy over the Brownson affair. Mr. Tillman intimated that he wished to call before the committee witnesses to testify concerning this matter. Mr. Hale replied that he thought there would be no obstacle to allowing the senator to do that.

The members of the house participated in a lottery for rooms in the new office building, and great confusion resulted.

Jones' Big Verdict Set Aside.

New York.—The appellate division of the supreme court Friday set aside a verdict for $460,000 obtained against George J. Gould and others by John S. Jones, an Ohio coal operator.

GAVE FORTUNE TO WOMEN

SENSATIONAL CHARGES IN SNELL SUIT AT CLINTON, ILL.

Son Trying to Break Will—Late Millionaire Spent Large Sums on Grand-Niece.

Clinton, Ill.—Testimony was begun Thursday in the suit instituted by Richard Snell, son of Col. Thomas Snell, the late millionaire railroad builder, in the Dewitt county circuit court to break the will which cuts young Snell off with an annuity of but $50.

Sensational statements were made by counsel for the plaintiff to the effect that Col. Snell had expended no less than $300,000 upon women during the last ten years of his life, of which $75,000 had gone to his alleged grandniece, Maybelle Snell, of Kansas City, Mo., now Mrs. McNamare.

The plaintiff stated that letters will be read to the jury that were found among Col. Snell's possessions indicating that society women had cajoled nearly a quarter of a million dollars from the late millionaire.

Richard Snell, who is president of the Dewitt County National bank, alleges that the terms of his father's will were the result of an "evil and wrongful influence" exerted over his father by Mabelle Snell, now Mrs. McNemara.

Col. Snell made his fortune building railroads, including 800 miles of the Illinois Central. During the civil war he commanded the One Hundred and Seventh regiment of Illinois volunteers. He died over a year ago at 90 years of age.

Kansas City, Mo.—Mr. James V. McNamara, formerly Miss Meybelle Snell, was married last November. Her husband is chief deputy sheriff of Jackson county, and the couple live in this city. Mrs. McNemera and her mother, Mrs. Priscilla Snell, declined to discuss the Snell will case.

Miss Snell was left $1,200 a year by the Illinois millionaire. Besides this her relatives gave her securities and deeded lands within the last four or five years amounting to not less than $25,000.

FOUR FIREMEN ARE KILLED.

Many Others Injured in Great Blaze in New York.

New York.—Four firemen went to their deaths Friday night when they responded to a fire that ruined the Parker building, a 12-story business structure occupying the block between East Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets on Fourth avenue.

Fought by half the firemen of Manhattan and apparatus that filled the streets for blocks, the flames were never controlled and only with difficulty were they confined to the building in which they originated. Floor after floor gave way and dropped to the basement and beneath these and crumbling walls no less than 30 firemen were caught and either killed outright or seriously injured. When the fire had burned itself out and the firemen's roll was called, three men of engine company No. 72 and one from fire patrol No. 3 failed to respond.

When the casualties began the Florence hotel, which adjoins the burned building on Eighteenth street, was made a temporary hospital, where fire department physicians gave immediate aid to the injured. The monetary loss was estimated at $5,000,000.

RECEIVERS FOR A RAILWAY.

Stickney and C. H. F. Smith Named for Chicago Great Western.

St. Paul, Minn.—Judge Walter H. Sanborn, of the United States circuit court, Wednesday afternoon appointed A. B. Stickney and Charles H. F. Smith, both residents of St. Paul, receivers for the Chicago Great Western railroad. A. B. Stickney is now president of the road. The firm of Kellogg & Severance of St. Paul was appointed attorneys for the receiver.

The appointment of receivers followed the inability of the company to meet obligations falling due in 1908, and the failure to secure an extension of the obligations. Loss as a result of the boilermakers' strike of last fall is given as a partial cause for the financial straits of the road. It was also pointed out in the proceedings that during the last ten years the road has spent $19,000,000 in reconstruction.

Anxiety for Jack London.

San Francisco.—Friends of Jack London, the author, are beginning to feel anxiety over his failure to arrive at the Marquesas islands, which he was expected to reach early in December. London left Hilo, Hawaii, October 7 last in his boat, the Snark, for Marquesas and is about a month overdue. It is supposed that the Snark, which is equipped with a gasoline engine, is drifting about as the result of injury to her machinery. Besides London, Mrs. London, two friends and a small crew are in the vessel.

Often The Kidneys Are Weakened by Over-Work.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases, and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

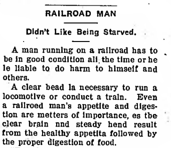
BLAMED ON THE RAILROAD.

First Thought in Irishman's Mind After the Accident.

Railroad claim-agents have little faith in their fellow creatures. One said recently: "Every time I settle a claim with one of these hard-headed rural residents who wants the railroad to pay twice what he would charge the butcher if he gets a sheep killed, I think of this story, illustrative of the way some people want to hold the railroad responsible for every accident, of whatever kind, that happens. Two Irishmen were driving home from town one night when their buggy ran into a ditch, overturned, and they were both stunned. When a rescuer came along and revived them, the first thing one of them said was: 'Where's the train?' 'Why, there's no train around,' he was told. 'Then where's the railroad?' 'The nearest railroad is three miles away,' he learned. 'Well, well,' he commented. 'I knew it hit us pretty hard, but I didn't suppose it knocked us three miles from the track.'"

SYMPATHY.



He—Yaas! Several years ago I fell in love with a girl, but she rejected me—made a regular fool of me, in fact.

She—How sad! And you've never got over it.

RAILROAD MAN

Didn't Like Being Starved.

A man running on a railroad has to be in good condition all the time or he is liable to do harm to himself and others.

A clear head is necessary to run a locomotive or conduct a train. Even a railroad man's appetite and digestion are matters of importance, as the clear brain and steady hand result from the healthy appetite followed by the proper digestion of food.

"For the past five years," writes a railroader, "I have been constantly troubled with indigestion. Every doctor I consulted seemed to want to starve me to death. First I was dieted on warm water and toast until I was almost starved; then, when they would let me eat, the indigestion would be right back again.

"Only temporary relief came from remedies, and I tried about all of them I saw advertised. About three months ago a friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food. The very first day I noticed that my appetite was satisfied, which had not been the case before, that I can remember.

"In a week, I believe, I had more energy than ever before in my life. I have gained seven pounds and have not had a touch of indigestion since I have been eating Grape-Nuts. When my wife saw how much good this food was doing me she thought she would try it awhile. We believe the discoverer of Grape-Nuts found the 'Perfect Food.'"

The holidays are over in Polk County, and there is four candidates in the field for the next sheriff of the county. We have heard of no one that is going to run in this county up to date, and if there is no one else wants it, I'll might get elected again."

The Emperor of Japan has granted permission to a few hundred emigrants to come to America, and intimates that he will not take it kindly if they are refused admission to this country. America gives them no answer, but increased the speed of Evans fleet from 9 to 11 knots an hour that are on their way to the Pacific coast.

Officers Elected.

The annual boat meeting of the Red Lake River Transportation Company was held at the school house on last Monday and the following board of Directors were elected by ballat for the coming year, viz: P C Wold, J. W. Vrolson, W.G Hunt, A.J. Wentzel, Walt McAndress, Ole Walle, George Limers, Ole O. Overum, Andrew Ellingson, Ole Howard.

There was a little dispute arose about the allowing of proxies to share holder, but it was finsly decided to go strictly according to the by laws of the association which allows, each share holder to cast one vote for himself and represent one share holder by proxie in addition. The by laws were drawn to prevent any one individual from getting a large number of proxies and taking the government of the company out of the hands of the people and turning it over to one man. The meeting was properly conducted and if there is any dissatisfaction among them who did not attend, they should understand that they must come as men and not on paper if they want to be heard in the company.

The new board of directors will meet at Highlanding on January 21st, to qualify and elect officers, that having been the date set by them at their meeting held emediictly after their election. The meeting will be at 4 o'clock P.M. and all the members of the board are requested to be preasant.

Those who expected there would be any sensations after the boat meeting of last Monday, will be disapointed, as we have recieved private information from the share holders, who sent proxies to the meeting and were turned down, that they are satisfied with the result of the election of officers, and the newly elected officers should use their best endeavors to manage the company so as to make it a paying investment for the share holders; and a convenience to the people who want to get freight up and down the river, and if they can succeed in doing that, the stock holders will be well satisfied.

Had His Revenge.

The rivalry was great at the annual cricket match police versus publicans, and many friendly bets depended on the result. When the last batsman, Police Constable Robinson, walked to the wicket the police required only two runs to win, and naturally great excitement prevailed. He batted with due care until a loose ball came, and, hitting this past mid-on, he started for an easy run. He got home comfortably before the wicket was thrown down, but to his disgust he was given out.

"Why," exclaimed the indignant constable, "I was a yard past the wicket!"

"Mebbee," said the umpire in a supercilious tone, "but, yer see, it ain't what you say; it's what I say, an' I say you'm out!"

"But"— began the irate Robinson.

"D'yer remember," interrupted the umpire, meditatively scratching his nose, "sayin' to me 'bout six months ago, 'Don't argue with the law?' Well, you was the law that time an' I was run in. Now," he added, triumphant, "I'm the law an' you're run out!"—London Tit-Bits.

Pay of Army Officers.

A glance over the army list shows that over two-thirds of the officers are receiving less pay per day than good mechanics receive in civil life. The officer has no home, but must be prepared to live in the arctics or the tropics and change from one to the other at short notice. He must have equipment for both, and while in one place the equipment for the other is stored and deteriorating. He is sent on long journeys to distant stations and must suffer banishment from his family or take them along. Either is a great expense—on one hand for travel and on the other for maintenance of two establishments. His changes of station are so frequent that he must put his children in costly private schools or see them grow up in ignorance. Because he is an officer of the United States service to use the respectability of his position to add to his income commercially is regarded as reprehensible, and if he makes an investment he must intrust his interests to an agent.—Army and Navy Life.

The Old, Old Story.

Hot, tired and dusty, the excursion was returning from the seaside day trip, and Simkins, a little bald man with big ears, overcome with his day of happiness, dropped off to sleep. In the hatrack above another passenger had deposited a ferocious crab in a bucket, and when Simkins went to sleep the crab woke up and, finding things dull in the bucket, started exploring. By careful navigation Mr. Crab reached the edge of the rack, but the next moment down it fell, alighting on Simkins' shoulder. Not feeling quite safe, it grabbed the voluminous ear of Simkins to steady itself, and the passengers held their breath and waited for developments. But Simkins only shook his head slightly.

"Let go, Eliza," he murmured. "I tell you I have been at the office all the evening."—London Pick-Me-Up.

Something Lacking.

"These big hotels are not so complete."

"What's lacking?"

"The express elevator gets you to the fifty-second floor all right, but there a half mile corridor confronts you and no cabs."—Montreal Star.

Had Heard It Before.

"She looks very young to have a grown daughter."

"Yes; she was just telling me"—

"I know. That she was married when she was just barely fifteen years old."—Pittsburg Post.

A Curious Tree.

In the village of Clynnog, Wales, there is an old cottage, formerly a country tavern, upon the roof of which there is a full grown sycamore tree. About fifty years ago a seedling from a neighboring churchyard, where other sycamores are growing, found a resting place in the corner of the wall above a slab of stone over the entrance to the building. The young tree thrived for a time on the small quantity of soil collected in the corner of the walls and finally forced its roots downward through the walls into the earth below. From the outside no trace of the roots can be seen.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Too Much to Ask.

A traveler in the highlands observed while at a tavern in a small village a very beautiful collie. At his request the owner was pointed out to him, and he asked the man what he would take for the dog.

"Ye'll be taking him to America?" the Scot asked cautiously.

"Certainly, if you sell him to me."

"I no coul' part wie Rob," the dog's owner then said emphatically. "I'm muckle fond-like o' him." And liberal offers were no inducement.

To his astonishment, the traveler later saw the dog sold to a drover for half what he had offered and after the drover had disappeared requested an explanation. "You said that you could not sell him," he remarked.

A twinkle came into the highlander's eyes.

"No; I didna say I'd no sell him. I said I couldna part wie him," he said. "Rob'll be hame in two or three days fra noo, but I couldna ask him to swim across the ocean. Na; that woul' be too muckle to ask."—Harper's Weekly.

After This Who Can Doubt the Power of Love?

George had been away on business for a whole long week, and during that time he had sent Clara ten letters, six letter-cards and 42 picture postcards.

Why, then, was there a touch of coldness in her greeting when he flew to her arms on his return?

"Dearest," he whispered, "what is the matter?"

"Oh, George," she said, "you didn't send a kiss in your ninth letter."

"My precious," he replied, "that night I had steak and onions for dinner, and you wouldn't have liked a kiss after onions, would you?"

And, such is the unfathomable power of love, she was satisfied, and nestled to him.

Where She Should Live.

"What under the sun," asked a father of his daughter who wanted her to make a match with a young man whose only qualification was the possession of a goodly fortune—"what earthly objection can you possibly find to Mr. Spriggins?"

"He has habits,' replied the daughter, "which I detest! When I marry I want a husband who does not smoke, chew, drink, swear, belong to clubs, play cards, stay out late or go motoring by himself."

The father looked at his daughter for a moment or two in silence and then said:

"My child, you are but a stranger here; heaven is your home."

NATURE

AND A WOMAN'S WORK

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Nature and a woman's work combined have produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers they relied upon the roots and herbs of the field to cure disease and mitigate suffering. The Indians on our Western Plains to-day can produce roots and herbs for every ailment, and cure diseases that baffle the most skilled physicians who have spent years in the study of drugs.

From the roots and herbs of the field Lydia E. Pinkham more than thirty years ago gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills, more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now recognized as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

Mrs. Bertha Muff, of 515 N.C. St., Louisiana, Mo., writes:

"Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my troubles public.

"For twelve years I had been suffering with the worst forms of female ills. During that time I had eleven different physicians without help. No tongue can tell what I suffered, and at times I could hardly walk. About two years ago I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice. I followed it, and can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice restored health and strength. It is worth mountains of gold to suffering women."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Muff, it will do for other suffering women.

St. Paul—The close of 1907 found the state treasury with a cash balance of $555,285.13. The statement at the close of business Dec. 31 showed an overdraft charged to the revenue fund of $324,416.03, while other funds had a total of $879,701.16, distributed as follows:

Option on Road.

Duluth—It is learned here that an official of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha road has an option for the purchase of the Duluth, Rainy Lake & Winnipeg road, which runs from Virginia, Minn., to a point near International Falls on Rainy river, and for one-half of all the timber owned by the Cook and O'Brien interest. The Cook and O'Brien people also own the railroad. It is understood that Cook and O'Brien will retain their two sawmills at Virginia, in addition to one-half of the timber, and that in the event of the road passing into other hands they are to have a fair rate for the transportation of their logs to their mills. The option for the purchase of the road and one-half of the timber expires March 1, 1908.

Section 30.

Duluth—"Section 30," perhaps the most noted and certainly about the most expensive piece of mining property in the country, has been abandoned again, and a seventh fortune has been sunk in a vain effort to extract the wealth which the mine has promised to mankind for the last twenty-five years. It is estimated that fully $800,000 has been spent in litigation over the property, and not much short of half a million more has been expended in its development. And yet, with apparently the best of reasons to expect rich returns, the men who have backed the various enterprises have been forced to retire without having so much as found what ought to be dignified by the name of "mine."

Rich in Ore.

Faribault—Since the discovery of iron ore on the farms of E. J. Leary and George Marks, south of this city, experts have been assaying and investigating to learn the extent of the deposits. Samples taken from the surface and tested show 32 to 65 per cent metal, and it is thought by the experts that there are even greater values below.

The ore was discovered on the Leary farm because of the frequency with which lightning struck in that neighborhood. Mr. Leary procured a magnetic needle and started prospecting, which ended in the finding of ore known as brown hematite. Shortly after he and his family located black magnetic ore.

Logs.

Minneapolis—The 1907 report of Fred E. Wheaton, surveyor general of logs for the second or Minneapolis district, was presented to the governor. It shows a total of 3,509,646 logs scaled on the upper Mississippi, measuring 280,180,620 board feet, and the mills sawed 364,494,090 feet of logs, producing 466,747,555 feet of lumbar, 13,283,750 shingles, and 96,542,150 lath. There were 139,900,000 feet of logs carried over, of which 110,000,000 were in the river above Minneapolis.

The Minneapolis record shows 2,337,237 logs scaled and sawed, measuring 165,833,110 feet. The mill output was 214,192,932 feet of lumber, 2,500,000 shingles and 37,883,200 lath.

Health Inspection.

St. Paul—More than three thousand inspections were made in 1907 by W. D. McCall of the health department in keeping bakers, dairymen and water companies in line with the ordinances for the protection of public health. His work covered 1,031 inspections of bakeries, 1,207 of bakery wagons, 813 grocery stores and 83 restaurants. In addition he took 1,198 samples of milk and cream for analysis and 116 samples of water.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis—August Clapper went fishing yesterday and caught a sturgeon that weighed just 125 pounds.

St. Paul—C. G. Schulz, assistant state superintendent of public instruction, is president of the Minnesota Educational association for 1908.

Little Falls—Mrs. Anna Rogers, who took carbolic acid last week while in the county jail awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of passing a forged check at the Buckman hotel in this city, died.

Minneapolis—Good, sound spankings for unruly pupils are not looked upon wholly with disfavor by Dr. C. M. Jordan, superintendent of the Minneapolis schools.

St. Paul—The residence of L. Clemens, 499 Ashland avenue, was damaged to the extent of $200 by the burning of a Christmas tree.

Owatonna—Judge Jacob Newsalt is dead after two years' illness.

Minneapolis—L. A. Lydiard, city clerk, contributed $8,887.80 to the city treasury from the receipts of his office in 1907.

Minneapolis—During the six months ending Dec. 31, 4,666 tons of outgoing mail were handled at the Minneapolis postoffice.

St. Paul—John Jerusel, 10 years old, was run down and killed by a South St. Paul street car at Water and South Robert streets.

Minneapolis—A fall of eighteen feet form the scaffolding of a new house his father was erecting on the lot adjoining his home resulted in the death of John Biedick, the 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Biedick, 3652 Second avenue south.

Mankato—The building and public improvement record for Mankato the past season is $415,000. This includes $90,000 expended on the street railway line, $30,000 for the new Methodist church, and several other large buildings and numerous residences.

Minneapolis—After having read a newspaper report of how J. E. Chase committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid in a drug store, C. P. Nordstrom, fifty-one years old, yesterday drank a glass of the same poison and soon expired in a shed at 411 Fourth street south.

Mankato—The farm residence of John J. James, in Judson township, was totally destroyed by fire starting in the woodshed. The Sutherland family resided in the house and Mrs. Sutherland was confined to her bed with illness at the time. All of the household goods were destroyed.

Minneapolis.—One of the foremost of the younger generation of actors, Joseph Santley, in his new play of the western plains, entitled "Billy the Kid," will be the attraction at the Bijou Opera House, the week of Jan. 10. The piece is said to be replete with strong climaxes and bright comedy scenes.

Minneapolis—During the month of December 265 persons died in the city of Minneapolis, 149 being males and 116 females. Pneumonia heads the list of death dealing diseases with forty-seven victims and consumption comes next with twenty-seven. Typhoid fever and diphtheria each has six deaths to answer for and scarlet fever only one.

Minneapolis—Owing to the large number of cases in the city of Minneapolis where husbands are brought before the police court charged with drunkenness, abuse of families or nonsupport, it has been found necessary to have an officer appointed whose sole duties shall be to look after all such persons who appear in court and are placed on probation.

Cokato—At the depot at Dassel, just west of here, when the Great Northern train pulled in Mr. Seafelt, a German farmer living near the town, was crossing the track near the depot and his team was hit by the locomotive. He was quite badly hurt, being thrown out of his sleigh. The horses were picked up by the locomotive and carried by the depot, the horses' legs sticking out over the platform, and a couple of men were knocked down and hurt.

Duluth—As a result of alleged wholesale "repeating" at the primary election which was held here Dec. 17 last, five indictments were returned by the grand jury today against Benjamin Vail, a barkeeper at the St. James hotel in this city, charging him with having induced a number of men to vote fraudulently. It is hinted that there are a number of other indictments out, but as service has not yet been made the names are not given.

Crookston—R. A. Lawrence, of this city, had a narrow escape from drowning. He was skating on the Red Lake river when he broke through in a thin place and the current swept him out into a large open space. He is an expert swimmer, but the strong current and the cold combined to hinder him and he was completely exhausted before he managed to get out. He was badly cut about the face and head by knocking against the sharp ice. He will be unable to work for some time.

St. Paul—The Chicago Great Western railroad was put into the hands of receivers yesterday, until arrangements can be made for issuing first mortgage bonds to cover obligations that mature this year. Application for receivership was made in the United States circuit court before Judge Walter H. Sanborn, who on the facts presented by the applicants' attorneys made an order for receivership and appointed as receivers President A. B. Stickney, of the Chicago Great Western, and C. H. F. Smith, of St. Paul, who until recently was actively engaged as banker and broker.

St. Paul—The Northern Pacific is following suit with the Great Northern and will pay the 5 per cent penalty on its gross earnings tax which was allowed to become overdue in 1905.

St. Paul—William F. Grube, the only surviving charter member of Dayton's Bluff lodge of Odd Fellows, died while he was dressing to attend the dedication of the new lodge hall.

Deer River—Woman who perjured herself in an effort to convict Judge Cockran of murder of Allen Whitt, pleads guilty and is banished from state by sentence.

REASON FOR WOMEN'S "NERVES"

In Very Many Cases It Is Weakened Kidneys.

Mrs. Frank Roseboom, 512 S. Washington St., Moscow, Idaho, says: "Inherited kidney trouble grew steadily worse with me until so nervous I could not sleep at night. I was dizzy and spots floated before my eyes. My back and hips ached and every cold settled on my kidneys and made me worse. I have used many different medicines and was discouraged when I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, but now the symptoms that alarmed me are gone."

TWO CURES OF ECZEMA

Baby Had Severe Attack—Grandfather Suffered Torments with It—Owe Recovery to Cuticura.

"In 1884 my grandson, a babe, had an attack of eczema, and after trying the doctors to the extent of heavy bills and an increase of the disease and suffering, I recommended Cuticura and in a few weeks the child was well. He is to-day a strong man and absolutely free from the disease. A few years ago I contracted eczema, and became an intense sufferer. A whole winter passed without once having on shoes, nearly from the knees to the toes being covered with virulent sores. I tried many doctors to no purpose. Then I procured the Cuticura Remedies and found immediate improvement and final cure. M. W. LaRue, 845 Seventh St., Louisville, Ky., Apr. 23 and May 14, '07."

Universal Language.

He spoke his love in German—she answered not a word. In French he tried to woo her—the maiden never heard. He tried his luck in English, in Irish—all in vain; in Greek, Turkish and Latin, and in the tongue of Spain. And then an inspiration came to the anguished youth. "The universal language," he cried, "I'll try, forsooth!" He kissed the demure maiden and pressed her to his breast; she understood that language, and—well, you know the rest.

A Sore Puzzle.

"How did that secret ever get out?"

"I can't imagine. She only told about a dozen of her acquaintances in strict confidence."

All Lost.

David Belasco, the playwright and manager, was talking about matinee idols. "Strange," he said, "the fascination that they exert upon young girls. I overheard the other day a literary conversation that is apropos. Two men were conversing. "Did you ever read Shakespeare's "Love's Labor Lost"?' said the first. 'No,' growled the second bald head, 'but I've taken my best girl to the theater, and heard her rave all through the show about the leading man's heavenly hair.'"

Millions Wanted for Next Census

HOW OLD ARE YOU MADAM?

WASHINGTON.—The next census of the United States will be taken on April 15, 1910, and it will cost $14,000,000. Plans are now being made for it.

The Constitution of the United States requires an enumeration once in ten years as a basis for the apportionment of representatives in congress. The modern American census, which collects statistics relating to every important feature of national development, is the outgrowth of that requirement. Beginning with six simple questions relating to population, the amount and scope of the information secured were steadily increased until it became too extensive to be tabulated by hand.

Nearly five years ago congress authorized the establishment of a permanent census office in Washington. The establishment of such an office was first advocated in 1888 by Gen. Francis A. Walker, superintendent of the ninth and tenth censuses. The census to be taken in 1910 will be the first since the establishment of this permanent bureau.

The director, S. N. D. North, who was an earnest advocate of a permanent office, says he believes the thirteenth census will disclose that there was neither misrepresentation nor extravagance in the claims of those who persuaded congress that there would be an economy of expenditure, time and service, in keeping always on hand a skeleton organization for the decennial rush.

Odd Items on Senate Expense List

BRING ME ANOTHER BOTTLE OF INK
YAS SAH

ONE would think United States senators drank ink and bathed in mucilage, and that they were mighty curious "critters," to judge by the microscopic explanation of senate expenses which has just been issued. Some rattle-brained reformers are seriously advocating abolishing this august body. If it were wiped out of existence it would save the tax payers just exactly $1,640,354.60 every year, for that is what it cost to keep the sagacious lawmakers during the last fiscal period.

Even the layman can understand why thousands of dollars should be paid for telegrams sent by senators to each other, or to friends, or to members of the cabinet, for even a United States senator must have his lines of communication in good working order, but apparently it would tax the ingenuity of a fortune teller to explain what these distinguished statesmen could possibly do in the course of 12 short months with three dozen packs of cards and half a dozen opera bags. These things appear on the expense account, but the uses to which they were put are not explained.

If a man should rush up to you in the street and ask in a hurried whisper what a "tatum adjustable punch" is one would probably call a policeman and endeavor to escape from the madman. Yet the senate used one of these mysterious things, and "one tatum adjustable punch" is duly itemized. Somebody drew a silver purse at $5, and eight dozen corkscrews were purchased to open the ink, mineral waters and mucilage and other liquid refreshments which were bought in such quantities as to suggest a drought at the north end of the capitol. Safety razors, razor blades, scissors, handbags, eyeglass cleaners, headed bags, photo frames, pocketbooks, adhesive tape, picture baskets and rubber shoes figure in the list of senate necessaries. The senate expense account is the most curious document issued by the government.

Asks Statue to Hero of Lundy Lane

I'LL TRY SIR", MILLER.

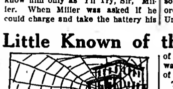
SENATOR JACOB H. GALLINGER of New Hampshire was born in Canada, where his mother and father were born before him. This fact has not prevented Mr. Gallinger from introducing a bill in congress for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller, the hero of Lundy's Lane. In pretty nearly every school history of the United States is told the story of Gen. Miller's charge on a battery and his capture thereof. If memory serves, Miller at that time was a captain, but the chances are that most Americans remember neither his title nor his first name, but know him only as "I'll Try, Sir," Miller. When Miller was asked if he could charge and take the battery his answer was "I'll try, sir," and the answer has stood him as a front name ever since.

It may be that some of Senator Gallinger's immediate ancestry fought on the British side against Scott and Miller and the rest at Lundy's Lane, but back of the immediate ancestors the senator had other ancestors who fought on the American side in the revolutionary war. He gets his Americanism from an original pure font.

It may be that memory is faulty, but if it isn't, "I'll Try, Sir," Miller was a man of decided opinions, and after the war of 1812 he had a few rows with the authorities which made the Washington officials angry with the hero.

Recollection also has it that he went to Peterboro in a sulky mood and lived there for a long time before he came out of it. His service to his country at Lundy's Lane, however, makes him more deserving of a monument that are many other heroes and some near-heroes who have been honored in stone at the expense of the United States.

Little Known of the Louise Home



MRS. LETETIA TYLER SEMPLE, daughter of President John Tyler, died a few days ago at the Louise home in this city. The Louise home is a large brick building standing in fairly spacious grounds at Massachusetts avenue and Fifteenth street. It was founded and endowed by W. W. Corcoran as a home for southern gentlewomen who had become impoverished

The home is filled with occupants, and there is a long waiting list, and yet in four winters' time I never have seen one of the old ladies looking out of a window at the sunlight, nor have I seen one of them entering or leaving the place. All through one month of June when the session of congress was delayed, the great shady garden of the home was deserted.

There is an apparent ignorance in Washington outside, of course, of the immediate friends of the occupants of the Louise home, as to who these occupants are. One never hears nor reads of individuals until the day of death comes, and then the world learns that some old southern woman of distinguished name and family, who in her time bore active part in the social world, while her husband or father bore an active part in the political world, has passed away. I heard when I first came to Washington that a daughter of a former president was living in the Louise home. I asked some people who had lived in Washington all their lives and most of the time not a stone's throw from the home, if this were true. The answer was that John Tyler's daughter formerly had lived in the home, but that she had been dead six years. This president's daughter was buried the other day.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

SEEKS SOUTH POLE

Lieut. E. H. Shackleton, M. V. O., the young British officer, introduced several innovations when he started for the south pole with an English party recently. Profiting by past experience, he went practically without vegetables, it being found that they do not keep well, and carried only the best of meats. He will use a specially built automobile for the earlier stages of the journey and, instead of relying on dogs for the final dash over the snow and ice, he will rely mainly on the hardy little Siberian pony.

As commander of the expedition he has taken with him 28 men. "Success" has been painted on the funnel of the old Newfoundland sealing vessel, Nimrod, whose name has been changed for the trip to Endurance, and Lieut. Shackleton expects to plant on the south pole itself the union jack, presented to him by Queen Alexandra.

Shackleton's vessel sailed from Lyttleton, New Zealand, and is expected to reach King Edward VII. island February 1, which will be midsummer in the Antarctic region. The vessel will then return to Lyttleton and wait until January, 1909, before going to the base of operations on King Edward VII. island to bring the explorers back to civilization. The motor car is not built for speed. It will carry the provisions.

Lieut. Shackleton went with Capt. Scott five years ago in the latter's historic dash to the pole, in which a record for "furthest south" was established. During the 96 days' journey over the ice Lieut. Shackleton was stricken with snow blindness and so had to be fastened to the sledge, when all the dogs were dead, in order to do his share of the pulling. He spent Christmas day, 1902, 300 miles from the ship, and the party had a plum pudding which weighed only nine ounces. On his return to England Lieut. Shackleton was made a member of the Victorian order.

DEFENDER OF ROCKEFELLER

Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago, comes forward as the defender of John D. Rockefeller, whom he represents as the burden-bearer of the community, conveying inferentially the impression that the multi-millionaire takes the money of the American people with a sole view to using it for the best interests of humanity by establishing universities at Chicago, general educational boards and institutions of research. And Dr. Judson is no doubt sincere in the opinion he expresses, for he is a man of considerable independence of thought and not a mere truckler to the money power.

He comes of an old American family that was mainly instrumental in organizing the Baptist church in America, a family that was of considerable importance in the early days of New York state. Incidentally, he is a nephew of Grover Cleveland, but he does not trade upon that.

The doctor was born in Jamestown in 1849 and was graduated from Williams college in 1870. He was for 12 years assistant principal of the high school at Troy, N. Y., and in 1885 accepted the chair of history and a lectureship on pedagogy in the University of Minnesota. Seven years later he went to the University of Chicago as assistant professor of political science, and was shortly afterwards promoted to head of his department. The administrative qualities he displayed while acting president during Dr. Harper's illness caused him to be selected as president of the university at the latter's death.

NEW OKLAHOMA CONGRESSMAN

That he is seven-sixteenths Chickasaw and Cherokee Indian and nine-sixteenths Scotch-Irish is the boast of Charles D. Carter, new member from the fourth Oklahoma district. His paternal ancestor, Nathan Carter Sr., was captured when a small boy by Shawnee Indians at the Lackawanna valley massacre, when all of the other members of the family except one of Nathan's sisters were killed. Nathan Carter was afterward traded to the Cherokees, one of whose full-blooded squaws he married. Mr. Carter's father, a captain in the confederate army, added to this strain of Indian blood by marrying a one-fourth breed Chickasaw woman, a sister of Gov. Guy, chief of the Chickasaws.

The new representative was born in a little log cabin near Boggy depot, an old fort of the Choctaw nation, 38 years ago. When seven years old he was taken by his parents to Mill Creek, a stage stand and postoffice on the western frontier of the Chickasaw nation. When 11 he started to school at a log school house nearby. When 13 he entered the Chickasaw Manual Labor Academy, where he finished when 18. Two of these five years at the academy he missed in order to work as a cowboy on his father's ranch.

As a cow-puncher and broncho-buster he began life for himself at "Diamond Z" ranch, where the city of Sulphur now stands. He was then 18. When 20 he accepted a position in a store where he advanced from clerk to bookkeeper, cotton buyer and cotton weigher. When 23 he was appointed auditor of public accounts for the Chickasaw Nation, and three years later became a member of that nation's council. From this position he advanced to superintendent of schools and mining trustee of Indian territory.

THAW TRIAL JUDGE

Victor J. Dowling, justice of the supreme court of New York, who is sitting as trial judge in the Thaw murder case, is one of those judges who believe in deciding every question as it arises, promptly and definitely, and allowing no criticism of his ruling afterwards. At the last Thaw trial Justice Fitzgerald allowed the lawyers the fullest latitude in arguing every little point of law, and after he had decided the point would permit them to carry on another long drawn-out debate. This is a thing that Justice Dowling has never been known to tolerate. He holds the record for the shortest murder trial in New York. By holding the attorneys down to the case and excluding all extraneous matters he had a verdict in 40 minutes from the time the case was started.

Dowling studied law in the office of Justice Fitzgerald. At the University of New York he won many honors, particularly the Devlin prize for classics, and also prizes for both the best written and the best oral examinations. From the beginning he has been an ardent politician and he has served two terms in the state senate, besides being for several years one of the party leaders and one of the secretaries of the Tammany hall executive committee. In 1905 he was elected by a handsome majority justice of the supreme court, the term for which is 15 years and the salary $17,500 a year.

The judge is 41 years of age. He is a recognized authority on constitutional law and is the author of the Dowling anti-gambling bill, which he presented while in the senate.

Huge Growth of Crime in Gotham

NEW YORK.—Many interesting details regarding the work done by the New York police department during the last year are contained in the annual report of Police Commissioner Bingham. The commissioner says that there has been marked improvement in the efficiency of the department during the year. According to the statistics tabulated by the commissioner, this was an exceedingly careless and lawless town during the 12 months of 1907.

The arrests for felonies were twice the number of those in 1906. The arrests made by the detective bureau were several thousand greater than those of the preceding year, and almost three times those of 1905. The fines imposed by the courts were correspondingly greater. The pictures added to the rogues' gallery were twice those of 1906, and treble the number of 1905. Twice as many persons were reported missing in 1907 as in the preceding year.

As the result of an investigation into the advisability of using police dogs, the commissioner announces that trained muzzled dogs are being experimented with in the suburbs. The commissioner says that no further disciplinary legislation for the police department is needed at present.

The commissioner makes the following recommendations: "Pawnbrokers, of whom there are 150 in Manhattan alone, should be required to furnish the police daily with a written report showing articles pawned with them and by whom.

"At present all the machinery of primaries and elections is placed in the hands of the police. How is it possible then for our citizens to expect members of the force to be free from political influence? While it is probably hopeless to mention the subject, it is none the less true and should none the less be realized by the citizens of this city that if the police are to be removed from political influence the whole election law will have to be radically changed."

At the opening of the year the number of policemen of all classes in the department was 8,873, while at the close of the year there were 9,410 on the force with four vacancies and 51 men on probation.

New Law May Stop Women Smokers

WOMEN who are fond of an after-dinner cigarette have secured freedom to indulge in it at certain Broadway restaurants, only to lose it again, according to the fathers of an ordinance which will soon be introduced at a meeting of the board of aldermen. On New Year's eve one of the big Broadway restaurants took down the bars to women smokers, and two or three of the others immediately followed suit.

But the indulgence in a habit which has long been recognized in Europe does not meet the approval of certain of the city fathers and as a result an attempt will be made to put an end to it before it has hardly begun. The ordinance will provide for a fine or imprisonment for the proprietor of any hotel, restaurant or other place of public gathering who allows a woman to smoke, even a little gold-tipped cigarette, in his establishment.

The privilege of smoking was a New Year's gift to the women of New York by Proprietor Martin of Martin's cafe. If it worked well the rule was to be made permanent. "Smoking by ladies is never objectionable," he said. "The smartest women in New York smoke, so why should Puritanical proprietors rule against this mode of procedure any more than against the drinking of cocktails or highballs? Why not be honest? One thing I want to emphasize. I mean by this announcement that ladies may smoke. Some women who smoke are quite as offensive to the eye as when they drink. A lady smoking a cigarette is not so objectionable as another kind of women drinking a cup of tea."

Subway Cars Not Lodging Houses

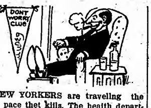
HAVE A SMOKE OLE MAN

THE subway is no longer to be a nickel lodging house for persons, who, by paying a single fare, have been able to sleep all night in the cars while the trains ran up and down the line. Early in the history of the subway it was discovered by the underworld that, instead of shivering on park benches, a far more attractive and comfortable manner of passing the winter nights was to pay a nickel to get into the subway and then ride in lighted and heated cars as long as desired, an arrangement made possible by the changing from local to express trains.

One could literally ride forever for five cents, with plenty of newspapers dropped by other passengers to read and the enticing chance of picking up a valuable bundle forgotten by some other traveler. As a result an army of "subway sleepers" sprang up, many of whom waited for certain guards with whom they were familiar, to insure a peaceful rest, giving them in return a cigar or a dime.

At the height of this practice it was estimated that subway trains were accommodating more sleepers than even the biggest hotel in the city. But, as usual, a good thing was worked to death, and hereafter no one can ride farther than the end of the line without the payment of another fare. Would-be sleepers will hereafter be rudely thrust forth into the night.

Citizens Are Traveling Killing Pace



NEW YORKERS are traveling the pace that kills. The health department finds that they are living too fast, worry too much and don't exercise enough. All this, they say, is causing an epidemic of heart disease. The statistics for 11 months of 1907, published the other day, show 1,246 more deaths from heart disease than last year. With what figures they have at hand for this month in the bureau of vital statistics it is known that the number of deaths from heart disease for the entire year of 1907 was almost 1,500 more than in 1906.

"This record is most surprising," said Dr. Darling, the health commissioner, "but I don't see what is to be done about it. The only way to bring about any change in conditions is to let the public realize the extent of this enormous increase, and people may possibly mend their ways. Of course the grippe epidemic is alarming this year, and undoubtedly has had much to do with the increase. I am afraid the citizens of New York city are traveling a little too swift and would do well to put on the brakes and slow down. Lack of exercise, over-eating, intemperance, and, generally speaking, high living, are responsible for the remarkable increase. Folks don't walk enough nowadays. We have become so accustomed to the pellmell rush of the age that our bodies are being neglected. Rapid transit facilities have probably caused us to jump into subways or on elevated trains and surface cars in our hurry to reach a point, and we have entirely forgotten the habit of walking. We worry too much in the present day. That is responsible for heart weakening."

ANARCHISTIC PLOT IS FOILED

THE OBJECT OF THE PLOT WAS TO DESTROY PART OF AMERICAN FLEET.

The Conspiracy was Foiled by the Prompt Action of the Brazilian Police. Anarchists of Different Nations Involved.

Rio Janeiro, Jan. 20.—The Brazilian police have discovered an anarchistic plot here, having as its object the destruction of part of the American fleet.

The conspiracy, while centering in Rio Janeiro and Petropolis, has ramifications in Sao Paulo and Minos Geraes. A man named Jean Fedhar who resided in Petropolis, was the chief conspirator here, although it is understood that foreign anarchists are deeply involved in the plot.

Fedher is believed to have fled to Sao Paulo, and the police, who know him, have been sent to that place for the purpose of apprehending him. One of the detectives, who was well acquainted with Fedher, having served on the police force at Petropolis for some time, returned from that place to-day, after having made investigations here, and had a long conference with the chief of police at Rio Janeiro. The chief stated later that the Sao Paulo police are on the track of the arch conspirator and expect to arrest him soon.

In an official note which the chief of police sent to the correspondent of the Associated Press he says:

"Some time before the arrival of the American fleet at Rio Janeiro the Brazilian government received information from Washington and Paris that anarchists of different nationalities intended to damage one or several of the ships of the American fleet. The names and addresses of the conspirators were indicated by information which the police here had received previously from France and Germany.

The police of this district are working with the police of Sao Paulo and Minas Geraes and I am sure every precaution will be exercised and the most rigorous vigilance observed both on land and at sea to prevent any injury being done."

The chief of police authorized the statement that the plot was organized by Fedher, and he added that the people could rest easy, as all of the conspirators had taken refuge in the interior.

COAT OF TAR FOR EDITOR.

Attacks on Lodges Are Followed by Night Assault on Mr. Rockwell.

Farmington, Iowa, Jan. 18.—Last night a crowd of men and boys went to the home of Ed Rockwell, editor of the Farmington Herald, and took him to the edge of town and gave him a coat of tar and feathers. He was left out in the cold, but finally made his way back to town wearing only the tar and feathers.

Rockwell for two years has been making attacks on local business men, councilmen and secret lodge men, and has brought intense dislike upon himself. Last Wednesday he wrote a long and objectionable account of a lodge initiation which created much anger among lodge men, and it is thought to have precipitated to-night's action.

DEFENDANT IN MURDER CASE AS HE LISTENS TO THE TESTIMONY IN COURT.

BURY HOLOCAUST VICTIMS

BOYERTOWN, PA., HEARS LAST RITES OVER THEATER DEAD.

Fatalities from Awful Playhouse Disaster Likely to Reach 180, Say Officials.

Boyertown, Pa. — This little borough, which lost one-fifteenth of its population in the opera house horror, Thursday turned to the task of burying its dead. Because of the condition of most of the bodies the borough authorities have asked the bereaved relatives to bury the dead within three days. All night long scores of men worked in the morgues preparing the identified bodies for removal to their late homes or to the cemetery. A long line of death wagons moved here and there about the town distributing the corpses and by nightfall most of the dead were ready for interment.

There was a slight hitch in the work of removing the remains from the morgues, through the action of Coroner Strasser forbidding the removal of any bodies during his absence. It rained slightly Thursday, and there was a little fall of snow, but this did not deter the work of digging graves. A force of men started to dig graves in Fairview and Union cemeteries and they were relieved at intervals. The borough has decided to buy eight lots for the burial of the unidentified dead. In the center of the plot sufficient space will be left for the erection of a monument.

The death list continues to grow, and it is now feared that the number of victims will reach 180, and possibly higher. Thursday Mrs. James Fryer, who was injured by leaping from the burning building, died, making the total number of known dead 172.

Druce Witness Arrested.

MOROCCAN REBELS ROUTED.

Great Victory is Gained by French in Desperate Battle.

Tangier.—News has reached here of a terrific ten hours' engagement in a ravine near Settat Wednesday between a French column under the command of Gen. d'Amade, and a column commanded by Mulai Rachid, one of the chiefs of Mulai Hafid's forces.

The French gained a splendid victory in the face of heavy odds, succeeding in dispersing the enemy and occupying Settat. Twenty of the French soldiers were wounded, but many of the Arabs were killed. The latter not only offered a dogged and fearless defense, but returned repeatedly to the battle after they had been routed, and attacked the French from three sides.

In the later hours of the fighting Mulai Rachid's column was suddenly re-enforced by the powerful Chaouia tribe, which figured in the massacre at Casablanca and which had arrived from the mountains at the very moment when Mulai Rachid was about to retreat.

Under the combined charge of the now confident Moors, the French not only held their ground, but steadily threw back the enemy, driving them eventually in mad haste to the hills. The engagement between the French and the Moors followed immediately upon a 25 hours' march of Gen. d'Amade's column, and under these trying circumstances the French forces are considered to have shown more than ordinary stamina and bravery. The French wounded include three officers.

After destroying the camp of the enemy at Settat, Gen. d'Amade pushed forward and occupied Kashah Ber Rohid.

TOO BAD FOR PUBLIC

JEROME WANTS EVELYN THAW'S STORY TOLD IN PRIVATE.

DEFENSE VERY WILLING

Young Wife Begins Testimony, But Prosecutor Tears It to Pieces—Prisoner's Mother Takes Witness Stand.

New York.—A series of surprises brought the Thaw trial near a crisis Friday. Both Evelyn Thaw, the wife, and Mrs. William Thaw, the mother of the defendant, were on the witness stand, and just as the former was about to relate anew the story of her life, as she told it to Thaw in Paris in 1903, District Attorney Jerome arose and suggested that in the interest of public morals all persons save those immediately interested in the case should be excluded from the courtroom during the recital of what he termed "a horrible tale." The defense agreed and Justice Dowling adjourned court until Monday morning, when, he said, he would decide the matter.

Suggestion Is a Surprise.

The district attorney's suggestion was a distinct surprise and called forth the remark from Justice Dowling that it would have come with greater force at the first hearing of the case. When Mr. Jerome arose it was generally believed that he was about to contend against the admissibility of young Mrs. Thaw's testimony on the ground that it could not have had a very serious effect upon the mind of the man who subsequently became her husband, inasmuch as the homicide did not occur until three years thereafter.

Mr. Jerome had previously objected to Mrs. Thaw detailing conversations she had with Thaw three years prior to the tragedy, but Justice Dowling ruled that the declarations of the defendant were admissible on general principles and without any reference to the Wood case, under which the evidence in dispute was admitted last year, and which Mr. Jerome had been expected to ask a construction of this year.

"I will not except to your honor's ruling," said the district attorney as he took his seat after his objection, "for the state has no power of appeal."

Tears Evelyn's Story to Pieces.

Then Mr. Jerome attacked the witness in another way and, by standing immediately in front of her and objecting to practically every question which Mr. Littleton asked in his preliminary examination as to her early history, cut the young woman's recital from the effective narrative form it assumed last year into a hundred fragments. Many of the objections, based upon irrelevancy and immateriality, were sustained by the court. When these failed the prosecutor was ever ready with others until the testimony fairly was torn into shreds and had lost entirely the many little touches of human interest which were a part of the narration last year when no objections were offered. Mr. Jerome said his objections were intended to cut out all stories about pet cats "and a lot of other stuff" which had no place in the trial.

Elder Mrs. Thaw Testifies.

The day, however, was one of good progress for the defense. The elder Mrs. Thaw, pale and weak from her recent illness, was assisted to the witness chair and repeated a large part of the testimony she gave a year ago. Her appearance and the sincerity of her evidence as she told of her son's strange conduct after meeting Evelyn Nesbit and hearing her story had a marked effect upon all who listened. On account of her weak condition her examination was interrupted by consent, to be resumed some time next week, when she will tell of Thaw's infancy.

District Attorney Jerome's manner while the mother was on the stand was all deference, and it was his suggestion which led to the respite in her ordeal. But when the young wife took the stand the change was marked. Jerome glared at her from the very first and his objections were fairly shouted in her ears. Well accustomed to court usage from her former experience, the young woman waited patiently for a ruling as to each objection. When they were sustained she was silent; when overruled she was ever ready with her response.

GOTHAM BANKER INDICTED

PRESIDENT MONTGOMERY OF THE HAMILTON IS ACCUSED.

Is Released on Bail—Charged with Irregular Acts While Vice President of Institution.

New York.—The special grand jury which was sworn in to investigate the conduct of certain banks in New York county returned two indictments Wednesday against William R. Montgomery, president of the Hamilton bank.

The charges, involving over-drafts and over-certification, have to do with acts alleged to have been committed by Montgomery while he was vice president of the institution. When E. R. and O. F. Thomas retired from their banking interests Mr. Montgomery succeeded the former in the presidency.

The Hamilton bank suspended on October 23 last. Recently the courts decided that the receivership should not be made permanent. The decision was made the occasion of a joyful demonstration on the part of the depositors who, headed by a band of music, marched to the home of the president and cheered him until he responded with a speech in which he declared that his personal vindication as an officer would follow the investigation of the bank's affairs. At the time Montgomery had been accused of lax management by Receiver White.

Montgomery was present when wanted Wednesday and in the criminal branch of the supreme court pleaded guilty with the usual reservation of his right to change his plea or demur to the indictments. The $5,000 bail required was furnished by William H. Birkmire, a director of the bank.

One indictment charges that on August 29 last Montgomery drew a check for $12,950, payable to B. F. Strasshurger, a Maiden Lane jeweler, and caused it to be certified. This transaction, it is alleged, constituted an overdraft of $12,869.

The second indictment sets forth that on September 5, last, the defendant drew a check to the order of Dr. L. C. Warner for $21,000, at a time when the maker's balance in the bank was only $5,918. This balance, it is charged, had been further reduced to $154 when the check in question was presented three days later and was paid by the bank.

REAL LEAP YEAR WEDDING.

Minneapolis Romance Is to Culminate in the Jail.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Miss Emily Steger, 729 Fourth avenue south, Thursday took out a license to wed Charles Eakin, and Minneapolis' first real leap year wedding ceremony is to be performed in the county jail. Eakin, the groom, is serving a five months' term in the jail on a charge of grand larceny in the second degree. Miss Steger is 22 years old. Eakin's age is the same.

The wedding will come as the culmination of a friendship which has lasted since their childhood and which developed into love only after Eakin had been convicted. Unwilling to ask the woman of his choice to marry a man who had been convicted of crime, Eakin believed that he and Miss Steger would never be wedded. It was here that leap year entered the romance. Miss Steger visited Eakin in the jail, told him that she would marry him if he wished, and when he had consented she arranged the details of the jail wedding.

RENT RIOT IN NEW YORK.

Officers Attempt to Evict Tenants and Are Mobbed.

New York.—Forcible resistance by tenants whom an upper East side landlord was trying to evict resulted Friday in the gathering of a crowd of 2,000 or more sympathizers in the neighborhood, who made so much trouble for the police that the precinct reserves were called out. During the rioting four women and a number of men were taken into custody.

The immediate purpose of the demonstration, however, was effected, the marshal deciding not to attempt the serving of more dispossess warrants at the time.

ITCHING HUMOR ON BOY

His Hands Were a Solid Mass, and Disease Spread All Over Body—Cured in 4 Days By Cuticura.

"One day we noticed that our little boy was all broken out with itching sores. We first noticed it on his little hands. His hands were not as bad then, and we didn't think anything serious would result. But the next day we heard of the Cuticura Remedies being so good for itching sores. By this time the disease had spread all over his body, and his hands were nothing but a solid mass of this itching disease. I purchased a box of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment, and that night I took the Cuticura Soap and lukewarm water and washed him well. Then I dried him and took the Cuticura Ointment and anointed him with it. I did this every evening and in four nights he was entirely cured. Novel Trio.

"Do you like ensemble music?" the city girl asked young Nathan Hobbs of Willowby, who was trying to entertain her at the church "social." Nathan looked bewildered.

"I mean do you enjoy hearing several instruments played together?" asked his new acquaintance, taking condescending pity on his ignorance.

"I guess I do," said Nathan, brightening at once, and speaking with enthusiasm. "Sy, you just wait till you hear Etta Willis on the organ with Ed Holmes playing the harmonica and Sadie James the triangle. It's great."—Youth's Companion.

"What in the world is the matter, Harold?" anxiously inquired the pretty girl. "Why, you seem too nervous to sit down a minute."

"You'll have to pardon me," responded Harold Hathand, with an eye on the window, "but—er—I just saw your father prowling around with a bird gun."

"Oh, nonsense! Why, father likes you. Didn't I hear him say that you were good enough to eat?"

"H'm! That's just the reason why he might try to pepper me."

BANISHED

Coffee Finally Had to Go.

The way some persons cling to coffee even after they know it is doing them harm, is a puzzler. But it is an easy matter to give it up for good, when Postum Food Coffee is properly made and used instead.

A girl writes: "Mother had been suffering with nervous headaches for seven weary years, but kept drinking coffee.

"One day I asked her why she did not give up coffee as a cousin of mine had done who had taken to Postum. But Mother was such a slave to coffee she thought it would be terrible to give it up.

"Finally, one day, she made the change to Postum, and quickly her headaches disappeared. One morning while she was drinking Postum so freely and with such relish I asked for a taste.

"That started me on Postum and I now drink it more freely than I did coffee, which never comes into our house now.

"A girl friend of mine, one day, saw me drinking Postum and asked if it was coffee. I told her it was Postum and gave her some to take home, but forgot to tell her how to make it.

"The next day she said she did not see how I could drink Postum. I found she had made it like ordinary coffee. So I told her how to make it right and gave her a cupful I made, after boiling it fifteen minutes. She said she never drank any coffee that tasted as good, and now coffee is banished from both our homes." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Michigan.

How to Sift "Sure Things"

Crafty Investment Swindlers Who Prey Upon the Credulity of the Laborer to Defraud Him of His Hard Earned Savings.

BY ROBERT B. ARMSTRONG,
Former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The cleverness and boldness with which the up-to-date investment swindler plies his craft are almost incredible. Wherever you find a fraudulent investment scheme you will find both of these elements present in some degree—but the comparative proportion of one to the other is generally determined by the element of time of operation.

For example, if the projectors of a scheme are old hands at the game and have established records of the wrong sort, then the idea of quick results is not only attractive but often imperative. There are many "old offenders" in the profession of investment swindling who have been convicted and have "done time" in jails and penitentiaries but have not yet learned to prefer straight to crooked finance.

Men of this character realise that a "quick get-away" is a cardinal essential of success; they must complete the transaction and get in the harvest before there is time for the public to wake up and do any investigating. Consequently, boldness is the big element in operations of men of this class. And, although they may be immensely clever, daring rather than cunning will be the dominant characteristic of their scheme.

The length to which the bolder spirits in this class will go almost surpasses credibility. Here is an example of the tricks to which they will resort in order to create the impression of having the backing of men or institutions of strength and character:

Through introduction by social friends the local representative of an investment scheme was able to open a checking account with a banking and trust company in a big city—a company of so high a standing that it is very widely known outside of financial circles and among people of small means. Its endorsement was worth "ready money" to any enterprise and the fact was keenly appreciated by the "fiscal agents" of the Brite & Fair Bonanza company.

After the opening of his personal checking account, the fiscal agent lost no time in cultivating the acquaintance of the trust officer of the banking institution, which did a very large business in the discharge of trusts. One day the depositor came to this officer and explained that he had a very simple little trust which he wished to have executed. Finding it necessary to leave the city for a few days he wished to provide for the delivery of a sealed package, containing "valuable papers," to a man whose name and personal description was given. The person to call for the package would leave a certified check, in the amount of $1,000, which was to be placed to the credit of the "fiscal agent" of the Brite & Fair Bonanza company, whose business connections were unknown to the trust officers of the banking and trust company.

Weeks later the trust officer was astonished to receive from an old personal friend, who was knocking about in the west, a circular of the Brite & Fair Bonanza company, in which the big trust company was designated as "trustee" for the "B. & F." stocks. As the friend who forwarded the circular knew something of the wildcat nature of the Brite & Fair enterprise, his comments on the folly of the bank's accepting such a "trust" had an edge on them. When the matter was investigated it was found that the whole plot had been carefully concocted and worked up to; that the circulars had been printed and put in directed envelopes ready for mailing in advance of the placing of the so-called "trust," and that when the trust officer of the solid financial institution had given his receipt for the "sealed package said to contain valuable papers," a telegram had been sent by the "fiscal agent" to "mail out trustee circulars." The man in this scheme of course believed that, as the circulars were being mailed out into a territory about a thousand miles from the city in which the banking and trust company was located the trust officer who had been imposed upon would never hear of the misuse of his receipt for a "dummy" package which actually contained certificates of the mining company's stock.

Why did the men who worked this scheme to steal the moral support of the big trust company go to so great pains to get it; to make the transfer of a sealed package containing its bonds? Because fake investment operators have found it profitable to take every precaution to give the color of legality to their acts; they have found it profitable to hire shrewd legal pilots to tell them just how far they may go in a given direction without running upon the reefs of the United States post office's "fraud order" or upon the rocks of a "conspiracy" prosecution. These pilots for the fleets of the investment pirates make a professional study of the art of steering their craft just outside the line of successful criminal prosecution. Take it in the incident which I have related: had these men been prosecuted for falsely using the name of the trust company or for obtaining moneys by misrepresentation (the claim that the trust company was acting as trustee on the Brite & Fair securities), an able lawyer could have made out of the "trust" to transfer a package of unknown contents, a very plausible defense. Again, the mining company was able to make valuable use of the trust company's receipt for the package by having facsimiles of the receipt printed and distributed among solicitors for the stock who were canvassing persons not at all familiar with legal documents—and who, under the statements and arguments of the agent, would see in the receipt an acknowledgement that this great trust company and its millions were behind the securities of the Brite & Fair Bonanza company.

So far as the writer knows, there has never been a fake investment concern exploited which has not tried to steal moral support under the name of some "guaranty," "trust," or "securities" company. In most cases, perhaps, these companies are as thorough fakes as the company which they are supposed to guarantee, and are the creatures and creations of the same men. But so many instances of this shallow deception have been shown up in criminal prosecutions that a little variation has been found desirable. Instead of owning a fake "guaranty" concern, the exploiters of the fake companies have recently come to regard it as a better practice to claim connection with some genuine company doing a general trust business.

This brings us straight to the practical point in the matter: Never go into an investment until you first find out for yourself, by direct and first-hand investigation, what the "references" named in the literature or advertising matter of the company have to say about it, and also how much the references themselves amount to.

Promoters of wildcat investment enterprises have used hundreds of names as references which they had not the shadow of right to use—calculating that persons credulous enough to be interested in the proposition would also be credulous enough to say "these references will speak well enough for the enterprise, else their names would not be given out for this purpose" and to act without making any inquiries of them. Again, some man of prominence and great faith may have been, at the start, a believer in the enterprise and willing to say, within certain limitations, that he believed the venture could be made a success if conducted according to certain plans and under given restrictions. This does not signify that he will continue to retain that confidence or that he is willing to be understood as giving the venture his unqualified endorsement or to say to the public which respects his name and position: "Come and share this enterprise with me; put your money into it, for it's a good thing." But you may be sure that his name will always be used to create this impression if there has ever existed a shadow of warrant for using it, under whatever restrictions.

Therefore, take nothing for granted with regard to references or other names which appear in the advertising matter of a concern which applies to you for the privilege of spending your savings.

But let me place special emphasis upon the crafty use which these companies make of the names and the services of reputable "trust" companies. I use the word "services" because a trust company may execute a "trust" in connection with bonds, stocks, property or securities, without really assuming any general financial or moral responsibility for those securities or without becoming a sponsor for them. In a word, the trust company may engage to act as an escrow agent to see that a certain technical transaction is completed and nothing more. That means this: The trust company consents to hold the stakes between two parties but without the slightest responsibility as to the value of those stakes or what may be done with them after the stipulations as to the conditions precedent to delivery have been fulfilled. Because a trust company acts as the trustee of a certain bond issue there is no warrant for a prospective investor to feel that the resources of the trust company are in any sense behind those bonds as a guarantee of value. There are almost as many different kinds of "trusts" as there are different transactions; the trust company undertakes the responsibility of doing a certain definite and particular thing and nothing more: It may be to foreclose if a mortgage is not paid, or it may be to issue so many shares of a certain stock to a certain person when a stipulated number of shares of another issue are surrendered.

But there are very few men even fairly familiar with business routine who do not form an impression that, somehow, the big trust company is behind the stocks for which it acts as transfer agent or perform any other act of trusteeship. It is almost impossible to drive this idea out of the minds of men who are not really familiar with corporation matters from an inside viewpoint. They will insist upon attaching to a limited service an unlimited moral and financial responsibility that does not exist.

It is, therefore, of the highest possible importance if you find yourself tempted to go into an investment, that you learn from the trust company mentioned in the literature of the venture exactly what "trust" it has undertaken to perform. If it is a really reliable and established trust company with a genuine financial standing it will make the limitations of its trust very clear to you; it will take special pains to make you understand, for example, that its only function in the matter in question and in connection with the company concerned, is the purely technical one of seeing that a certain issue of bonds is made "in form" when the technical preliminaries have been complied with and that it does not give an ounce of its prestige or moral support to the bonds themselves or stand legally bound for a penny of responsibility in connection with them. Another word of caution: Whenever you see the name of an educator, a pastor or a popular politician or any other leader having a hold on the sentiment of a community, used in connection with an investment offering, look into it carefully and take no step until the person mentioned has been questioned directly by you.

I know of an instance where the poor people of a parish were victimized because the unscrupulous agent had attached to his prospectuses and circulars the name of a popular priest of that region. These poor victims, instead of going to the "reference," simply said: "If the father's in it, sure it's all right," and they were relieved of their savings before the father learned of the use of his name—which was wholly without his knowledge.

The solicitors for this swindle had played a bold game and banked on their knowledge of human nature to the effect that most persons will take a "reference" for granted instead of using it for the purpose of seeking information. There are very few of the lists of men and business or financial houses named as references in the literature of scaly investment concerns, which do not contain some unauthorized names—names of some persons who, if questioned, would have given a warning instead of an endorsement.

The N. P. Pays Up.

St. Paul.—State Treasurer C. C. Dinehart received from the Northern Pacific Railway company a check for $11,880.63 in payment of the 5 per cent penalty for the failure of the company to have its taxes for 1904 fully paid up on March 1, 1905.

Several other roads were found to have been delinquent in the payment of their taxes for several years, and upon notification of the imposition of the penalty prescribed by law some of them have already paid up, while there are still several who have not, and suits will be started against these roads for the enforcement of the penalty.

The Northern Pacific did not put in an answer to the suit brought against it but agreed to pay the amount. The Great Northern answered, setting up an understanding with former treasurers that the taxes might be paid in installments, beginning two months before the taxes became due, and that the payment of the balance would not then be required on the date specified by law.

The State Wins.

St. Paul.—The state has again scored a victory in its fight for about 185,000 acres of swamp land in the northern part of the state. Gov. Johnson received a letter from James Rudolph Garfield, secretary of the interior stating that he has decided not to reopen the decision of his predecessor in the matter. The former decision affirmed the title of the state in the lands, and all that now remains is to select the tracts coming under the grant.

This matter has been pending since 1903, when the state made a request upon the interior department for patents to the lands involved. The state's right to the land rests upon the swamp land grant of 1860, and included large tracts which a few years later were made a part of the Indian reservations of the Mississippi, Chippewas and the White Earth Indians. They lie in Itasca, Cass and Beltrami counties.

Freezing in Haystack.

Winona.—Had it not been that the hay in Fred Denzer's barn, near Minnesota City, had been all used, necessitating him and his son to make a trip to the haystacks in the meadow a mile and a half away, Michael Socal would have been frozen to death. When Denzer arrived at the stack he found that a hole had been dug into it and there, partly covered, was the unfortunate man almost dead. He is a Bohemian, and has been in this country a short time. He had been a charge on Wabasha county until recently. He had wandered thirty miles down the river, until overcome by hunger and cold, when he crawled into the haystack to die. He will be sent back to Wabasha.

Done in Anger.

Mankato.—Charles Miller, a farmer living near Louisville, Martin county, is in a local hospital recovering from severe burns on his head, hands and arms that he sustained in the burning of his barn. His statement is that in a fit of anger or madness he set fire to the hay in the barn and then ran out through the fire, perhaps repenting his rashness. He was saved, but the structure and its contents were consumed.

He claims not to know what actuated him in starting the fire, but says that he "must have been crazy." As the barn and contents were the property of his wife, he has paid her $420 for the damage that he did.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul.—The report of statistician Moersch shows that the recent financial stringency has scarcely affected the number of men employed in St. Paul industrial establishments.

The Socialists.

Minneapolis.—In convention assembled the Public Ownership party of Minnesota made the first nominations of candidates for the state officers to be elected at the polls next November, but only five selections were made because it costs each nominee $50 to file, and a full ticket was considered too expensive a luxury.

The ticket, as far as it goes, is made up as follows:

Governor—Beecher Moore, Minneapolis.

Lieutenant Governor—J. E. Nash, Robbinsdale.

Secretary of State—John Lefevre, Grand Rapids.

Treasurer—John Kolu, Hibbing.

Attorney General—A. W. Uhl, St. Paul.

Twine is Cheaper.

Stillwater.—The state board of control announces the following prices on twine manufactured in the state prison to be effective during the coming season: Standard, 500 feet to the pound, 7¾ cents a pound; sisal (white) 500 feet to the pound, 7¾ cents a pound; standard Manila, 550 feet to the pound, 8¾ cents a pound; Manila, 600 feet to the pound, 9¾ cents a pound; pure Manila, 650 feet to the pound, 11 cents a pound. All these prices which are f. o. b. Stillwater, Minnesota, are exactly one cent lower than the prices quoted for the same grade of twine manufactured at the prison last year.

Duluth.—Hearing on free winter storage of goods for Twin City jobbers by railroads is being begun here, and it is brought out that custom is continued because the lines fear each other.

Mankato.—A settlement was today reached in the affairs of the Lake Crystal Milling company, bankrupt. The stockholders all consent to a 50 per cent assessment on their stock to be made at once.

St. Paul.—A state warrant eighteen years old was presented at the state treasurer's office for collection. It was issued to Adam Stodock of Sibley county Nov. 2, 1889, for a tree-bounty claim. The amount is $6.

St. Paul.—While the ticket seller at the Majestic theater, was engaged at one window a boy reached his hand thru the other window and, seizing a handful of money, made away with it. Between $25 and $50 was secured.

Minneapolis.—Lottie Williams, one of the cleverest musical comedy comediennes on the stage, will be seen in her big musical comedy drama success, "My Tomboy Girl," at the Bijou Opera House, the week of January 26th. The piece is in four acts and is thrilling in its fullness of human interest.

Duluth.—Somewhere in the woods about the town of Zim, Jack Ward, an insane man, is either running aimlessly about with the idea that he is being pursued by somebody with murderous intent, or, exhausted by his efforts to escape an imaginary evil, he has lain down and succumbed to the exposure.

Pipestone.—The jury in the case of Susie McGuire against the Great Northern Railway company returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $14,982.08. The plaintiff is the widow of P. F. McGuire, who was burned to death in a boxcar on the Great Northern road in North Dakota in March, 1906, while on his way with his goods from Iowa.

Numerous entries from local yards and from abroad are coming in. D. E. Hale of Windom, a member of the American Poultry association, has been engaged to judge the birds.

Mapleton.—The "lid" was discussed at the council meeting an evening or so ago, and the statement was made that the law was being violated. The councilmen were of the opinion that it would not be exactly a square deal to single out the saloonkeepers for minor violations when other citizens violated other ordinances, such as keeping stocks within the corporate limits, stacking hay and straw contrary to the ordinance, throwing ashes into the streets, etc.

St. Vincent.—Marshall Heard arrested the supposed partner of Edward Rose, who was arrested yesterday for burglary, and took him to the Hallock jail. The man had a stick of dynamite, a revolver, several gold watches and maps and $150 in cash.

NEW BUREAU CHIEF

CAPT. J. E. PILLSBURY SUCCESSOR TO BROWNSON.

Knows All About Bureau of Navigation—Did Effective Work as Commander of Dynamite Cruiser Vesuvius in Spanish War.

Washington.—The vacancy in the important office of chief of the bureau of navigation, navy department, which was vacated by the resignation of Rear Admiral Willard H. Brownson, has been filled by the appointment to that office of Capt. John Elliott Pillsbury, at present on duty in this city as a member of the general board of the navy, and also as a member of the army and navy joint board. Capt. Pillsbury notified the president that although he did not seek the office he appreciated the honor implied in his selection and would perform its duties to the best of his ability.

The selection of Capt. Pillsbury to be chief of the bureau of navigation is at best only a temporary measure of relief for the friction between the line and staff which is now distressing the navy. Capt. Pillsbury is, perhaps, more acceptable than any other line officer (and the vacancy in this case must be filled from the line under the terms of the law) with the officers of the staff, though he is by no means lacking in popularity with his brethren of the line. Yet he can exercise his good offices as a pacifier for a comparatively short time only, unless the president should decide to again have recourse to the doubtful expedient of commissioning a retired officer as chief of a bureau. For Capt. Pillsbury was born in Lowell, Mass., December 15, 1846, and will consequently have to retire on account of age December 15 next.

Combining in his record long sea-service with much work in the naval bureaus, especially that of navigation, the new head of the bureau is peculiarly fitted to dispassionately judge upon their merits the various issues between line and staff that are constantly arising in the department.

CAPTAIN PILLSBURY

Capt. Pillsbury occupies an exceptional position in the navy for a man of his rank in being practically out of line for promotion to the grade of rear admiral, though in his capacity of chief of the bureau of navigation he will temporarily enjoy that title.

The beginning of the Spanish war found Pillsbury a lieutenant commander, and because of his tendency toward high explosives he was placed in command of the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius, then regarded as extra hazardous service. That little boat was then an unknown quantity in naval warfare. She was sent down to join Sampson's fleet in front of Santiago, and it is believed by military experts contributed largely to bringing about the surrender of that stronghold by the moral effect produced by her creeping under the fortifications in the shadows of night and hurling huge projectiles charged with gun cotton over the hills and into the harbor lines, to the great terror of the besieged Spaniards.

Since the war Capt. Pillsbury has had service at the Boston navy yard, on the general board at Washington and on the army and navy joint board. He knows the duties of the chief of the bureau of navigation thoroughly, having served as assistant to Rear Admiral Converse when he was head of that bureau, from November, 1903, to July, 1904. His last duty before coming to Washington was as chief of staff to Rear Admiral Evans, in command of the Atlantic fleet, in organizing which into its splendid state of efficiency he was a potent factor.

It is known that Capt. Pillsbury did not seek his new duty, but he has the reputation in the navy of refusing to apply for any special duty and always assuming any assignment without protest. It was that characteristic that led him to undertake the command of the little fleet headed by the cruiser Prairie, which was assigned to the duty of endeavoring to successfully run the blockade on the New England coast during recent naval maneuvers. It was a foregone conclusion that the defending fleet would discover the approach of the pseudo hostile fleet in season to defeat the projected movement, yet Pillsbury accepted the unpopular task of commanding the blockade runners.

Not Too Cold For Him.

The unconscious humor of the English peasantry is shown in a story told by the London Tribune. A Lady Bountiful was calling on a devoted old couple with such creature comforts as the doctor said were suitable for the old man, who was dying and being tenderly nursed by his consort. Entering the cottage, she saw the old dame leaning over the fire. "Ah, Susan," she said, "and how's John?"

"He be goan, mum; he be goan," muttered the old lady. "Leastways I can't say that for sartain sure, but he did seem a-gwine just now. But, there, it's that mortal cold up there that I had to come down to warm my hands."

A Curious Tree.

In the village of Clynnog, Wales, there is an old cottage, formerly a country tavern, upon the roof of which there is a full grown sycamore tree. About fifty years ago a seedling from a neighboring churchyard, where other sycamores are growing, found a resting place in the corner of the wall above a slab of stone over the entrance to the building. The young tree thrived for a time on the small quantity of soil collected in the corner of the walls and finally forced its roots downward through the walls into the earth below. From the outside no trace of the roots can be seen.

Awful Blunder.

Newspaper Office Boy — Oh, there's been an awful time up in the editorial room today! Business Manager—Eh? What's the trouble? Office Boy—The hall porter made a mistake and put the "No Admittance" sign at the subscription office and the "Welcome" doormat in front of the editor's room.—London Tit-Bits.

A Delicate Hint.

Two very cadaverous looking tramps looked in at the window of a railway station where a telegraph operator sat at his key.

"Say, pardner," one of them said in a very husky voice, "report a couple o' empties goin' east."—Harper's Weekly.

The Orphan.

"Please, sir, will you give a penny to a poor orphan?"

"Certainly, my boy! Has your father been dead long?"

"No, sir. He's the orphan. This money's for him."

To Talk About.

"No? Then what are they for?"—Puck.

Had His Revenge.

The rivalry was great at the annual cricket match police versus publicans, and many friendly bets depended on the result. When the last batsman, Police Constable Robinson, walked to the wicket the police required only two runs to win, and naturally great excitement prevailed. He batted with due care until a loose ball came, and, hitting this past mid-on, he started for an easy run. He got home comfortably before the wicket was thrown down, but to his disgust he was given out.

"Why," exclaimed the indignant constable, "I was a yard past the wicket!"

"Mebbee," said the umpire in a supercilious tone, "but, yer see, it ain't what you say; it's what I say, an' I say you'm out!"

"But"— began the irate Robinson.

"D'yer remember," interrupted the umpire, meditatively scratching his nose, "sayin' to me 'bout six months ago, 'Don't argue with the law?' Well, you was the law that time an' I was run in. Now," he added, triumphant, "I'm the law an' you're run out!"—London Tit-Bits.

Pay of Army Officers.

A glance over the army list shows that over two-thirds of the officers are receiving less pay per day than good mechanics receive in civil life. The officer has no home, but must be prepared to live in the arctics or the tropics and change from one to the other at short notice. He must have equipment for both, and while in one place the equipment for the other is stored and deteriorating. He is sent on long journeys to distant stations and must suffer banishment from his family or take them along. Either is a great expense—on one hand for travel and on the other for maintenance of two establishments. His changes of station are so frequent that he must put his children in costly private schools or see them grow up in ignorance. Because he is an officer of the United States service to use the respectability of his position to add to his income commercially is regarded as reprehensible, and if he makes an invention he must intrust his interests to an agent.—Army and Navy Life.

The Old, Old Story.

Hot, tired and dusty, the excursion was returning from the seaside day trip, and Simkins, a little bald man with big ears, overcome with his day of happiness, flopped off to sleep. In the hatrack above another passenger had deposited a ferocious crab in a bucket, and when Simkins went to sleep the crab woke up and, finding things dull in the bucket, started exploring. By careful navigation Mr. Crab reached the edge of the rack, but the next moment down it fell, alighting on Simkins' shoulder. Not feeling quite safe, it grabbed the voluminous ear of Simkins to steady itself, and the passengers held their breath and waited for developments. But Simkins only shook his head slightly.

"Let go, Eliza," he murmured. "I tell you I have been at the office all the evening."—London Pick-Me-Up.

Something Lacking.

"These big hotels are not so complete."

"What's lacking?"

"The express elevator gets you to the fifty-second floor all right, but there a half mile corridor confronts you and no cabs."—Montreal Star.

Butchery in War.

In one of Du Guesclin's victories so many English were taken captive that even the humblest soldier among the French had one or more prisoners. The victors, however, fell to quarreling, and, ill feeling becoming rife in the French army in consequence of these quarrels over the prisoners, Du Guesclin ordered all the captives to be butchered, and the brutal order was carried out.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Omens of Bricklayers.

Bricklayers believe it is unlucky to lay the top brick at the north corner of a building. Some of them would lose a day's pay rather than imperil their future by doing such a piece of work. A bricklayer often bricks up in the hollow of a wall a horseshoe with a cent tied to it. This be does for good luck. To lay the first and last brick of any building but a church brings good luck to the bricklayer. Churches are the luckiest buildings to work on; theaters are the unluckiest. Miss Hope and Miss Desire

By Frederica Edmunds

(Copyright.)

Mr. John Mellin paced his small library, his hands clasped under a frayed smoking jacket—which was almost the only article in the room that did not betray excessive newness.

This cosy room, the luxurious furnishings, the fresh papers and magazines which justified the name of library, were all his—aye, other equally well-appointed rooms and prospective dinners as good as the one just eaten; he who had scarcely owned anything before but his clothes and his tobacco-pouch!

And this good fortune had come to him in his prime—for he was not half through his third score of years, and a man is still young at 50. It had come as a blessed bolt out of a clear sky, for who could have foretold that Cousin Tom, who had dug his own gold from Californian gullies in the sweat of his back, would have made John Mellin his heir?

Mr. Mellin soon became interested in his neighbors. The lady in the garden hat who occasionally came from the cottage next door was more than passably fair. A back-yard altercation between his dog and her cat one day served as a slight introduction.

The acquaintance thus brought about by Browser and Mouser progressed as naturally as the growing things of that early summer-time. Mr. Mellin good-naturedly repaired the rotting palings through which Browser had made so rude an entrance, and this time he was prettily thanked by a lady in another style of garden-hat and a lavender dress, apparently the sister of his first acquaintance. He began to wonder how he had endured his prosaic life before this interesting episode.

Next, Mr. Mellin's good offices were acknowledged by the presentation—through the lady in green—of a few choice flowers made into a stiff pyramidal bouquet and tied with pink cord. The gentleman was, of course, pleased to return the compliment—to her in lavender—by a dish of strawberries from the old bed he had been so glad to find.

Then one day when Mr. Mellin had heard the sisters' voices in the garden deploring a windstorm which had broken down their Canterbury bells, he was non-plussed to find himself offering his services to a lady in a neutral tint of gown and with brown, uncovered hair.

"I have brought a few stakes, Miss Cummings," he said—for at least he had learned the family name. "If you will just allow me—oh, no trouble at all. Down, Browser, sir! I think your sister has spoiled him a little, madam, with the bones. And neither he nor I always know which is Miss Cummings." With this explanation he proceeded to make himself useful.

The lady laughed so gayly that he was sure it was the lavender one.

"I am Miss Hope," she said. "Call my sister Miss Desire if you choose."

And so throughout that charming summer Mr. Mellin grew daily more interested in his fair neighbors, or rather neighbor, for the two he never saw together, nor ever quite felt he knew them apart.

At last came an October evening when an almost summer heat hovered in the air, and large, golden stars peeped through shriveling vines at Mr. John Mellin on his piazza.

A wooden screen at the end of his balcony cut off the sight of the corresponding excrescence on the other house, but a gentle rustle of feminine skirts had already been heard thereon, bringing a wild and daring thought to the mind of the lonely bachelor. If he only could—if he only might—just make a neighborly call, and for once compare the sisters side by side.

But now there was the sound of china and glass adjusted upon a hard table. The Misses Cummings were evidently about to refresh themselves in some dainty feminine way. It was too late, even had he dared to venture.

Suddenly the grave voice of Miss Hope broke the mellow silence.

"And, dear, we must have patience to endure this as other trials over which we have been so lovingly guided, but I admit it is hard. Some retrenchment indeed we could bear without complaint, but to think of leaving this house, this garden where we have been so happy this summer. Oh, it—is—hard. You have been such a dear, good, patient sister, such an angel in all that we have been called upon to bear; sometimes it makes me feel very foolish when I think of your fortitude and courage."

The voice, which had begun with such trustful exhortation, trembled more with each succeeding clause, finally breaking into stifled sobs.

Mr. Mellin, an involuntary eavesdropper in the perfect quiet of the night, clinched his hands and gritted hard his teeth, while beads of moisture not directly traceable to the heat stood upon his brow.

Could it be that she—they—were going to leave their home? Could it be that next summer there would be no neighboring with Mouser's sweet mistresses? Impossible! Insufferable! But what was he to them? And which was she, the siren, who had so strongly drawn his heart?

Miserable Mr. Mellin! Never had distracted lover a harder problem to solve. The only thing was to go over at once, acknowledge his eavesdropping, and offer help. But with what right? His dilemma might still exist! And what was he to them—her? Yet might he not serve as a friend? But, no, he would not go now.

And then Mr. Mellin, mortal like, contradicted his own decision by acting quite the contrary. His face grew pale even in the sight of Miss Hope Cummings who admitted him. Manlike, he did not know what explanation to offer and his heart beat like a trip-hammer.

It was she who had to smooth the awkward meeting.

"Be seated," she said, "and let me thank you for coming. To-night I feel I need a friend."

And then Mr. Mellin blundered into his confession.

"I heard," he said. "And indeed I want to be a friend. Nothing will make me happier than to be of service to you, and I trust you will feel that you can open your heart to me."

"Be Seated," She Said.

"I am in difficulties," explained Miss Cummings, gently, "in which I have no one to advise me," and then, impulsively as it seemed, she entered almost eagerly into full details.

Mr. Mellin listened, dazed and divided in mind. At last he asked, hesitatingly: "But your sister, Miss Desire? Surely this affects her?"

The light from the candelabrum plainly showed a change in Miss Hope's face. There was a thrill, too, in her voice, almost of supplication, as she said:

"I still have an explanation to offer, a confession which I owe to you before I can accept the least of your good offices, Mr. Mellin. I have no sister. I live alone and have done so ever since my brother Duncan died, 12 years ago. Desire is but a creature of my own imagining, into whom I would gladly have breathed the breath of life. My brother and I were left alone, and he, poor soul, was very deaf. There had never been much in common between us, and with his affliction—you understand. Then came his decline in health, and my heart smote me. He would have no help for his ears, so I knew I must have it for my overweak voice. I tried every known system for strengthening the vocal organs. Constantly, by myself, I talked to keep in practice. It was a help, and I know the reading and my music helped poor Duncan through those last three years." Miss Hope paused a moment as though to control a reminiscent agitation, then continued:

"I think I hardly could have endured my solitude afterwards but for that other self to whom I had talked so long. I have kept up the habit, and Desire has been the greatest comfort to me—sister, friend, and almost mother.

"And now you have my story, Mr. Mellin," she concluded. "Forgive me if I have seemed to play a double part. I feel that I have no right to your friendship, you who are so good and noble, when I have deceived you as I have, but really I had no such intention in the beginning; it was merely the carrying out of the happy delusion with which I had consoled myself for so long."

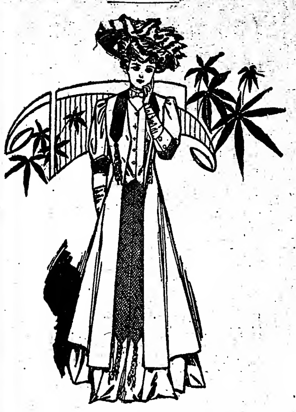
But Mr. Mellin's usually ruddy face had paled with something that was not anger. Had he not been admitted into the penetralia of most sacred associations while listening to the unfolding of the simple domestic mystery? Now he trembled almost visibly as he leaned forward to take the white hand held out.

"I thank you, I thank you," he said, "for the confidence you have given me. Let me be your friend until—" and then he stopped.

But it was not long before John Mellin was able to finish that sentence, saying, proudly: "Until now that I have this assurance that my Hope and my Desire are one."

For Miss Cummings, too, had found an answer to a quite undreamed desire.

For the Street



A seven-eighths coat and full pleated skirt form the foundation of this tailored gown. The material is navy blue cloth of fine quality and wide bands of black braid finished with tassels form the trimming. The vest and undersleeves are of deep crimson with buttons of the same. The hat is trimmed with changeable red and blue silk fringed at the edges. The combination will prove a pleasing costume.

Handkerchiefs Used to Finish Waist

Most every woman has at least one or two waists in her wardrobe which she thinks unbecoming, or which she thinks is not dressy or trimmed enough. A pretty and at the same time an extremely inexpensive trimming for such waists is made of two handkerchiefs and some ribbon. Handkerchiefs which just about match your waist in texture should be chosen. If the blouse is of sheer, fine material choose a dainty handkerchief with an edging of dainty lace. Handkerchiefs which have a tiny colored border should be chosen if the waist is not of as dressy a make.

The handkerchiefs are folded diagonally from about an inch above one corner to an inch above the other. If folded correctly one corner of the handkerchief will fall about an inch inside the corner of the other. Six little rosettes of ribbon a quarter of an inch wide are made. Two for the back are connected by two little straps of the ribbon an inch and a half long. One of these rosettes is fastened to a folded corner of each of the handkerchiefs. The handkerchiefs are then laid over the shoulders, with the corners falling slightly over the sleeves and the folded line nearest the neck. Two rosettes are then fastened on a folded corner of each handkerchief in the same manner as the back was fastened. Two straps of ribbon an inch and a half long join the ruche of the two opposite bows.

The straps on one side should be fastened with small hooks and eyes so that the handkerchief bertha may be put on and taken off without having to slip it over the head.

The handkerchiefs which one girl used in making this exquisitely dainty little garment were monogram handkerchiefs edged with lace, and the result was quaintly charming.

Handkerchiefs.

Possibly the English women and those of France love the colored handkerchiefs more than Americans. American women will wear the colored ones with tailored frocks, but leave them severely alone for other purposes. Where one does not care to have a colored one of solid effect, there are some styles in white showing barred lines of mauve, brown, purple, red and blue outlines. There is no denying the fact that the pure white linen handkerchief has established itself too firmly to be ousted by the faddish little bits of color, though why must one hang so tenaciously to a certain style, for to take up with a fad makes one appreciate all the more the simple styles when they are again adopted.

Chamois Lingerie.

This is a new notion that has come in with the demand for supple, close-fitting combination undergarments.

The most usual "combination" is a corset cover and petticoat in soft satin. It ends at the knees and is lengthened to the ankles only by a plisse of chiffon without foundation, and over this is worn the absolutely unlined broadcloth or velvet skirt.

But the newer combinations appear in fine supple chamois or suede in many colorings, lengthened by a plisse of mull to match; for this is very warm, and with a woven silk combination suit under the corset is considered warm enough for coldest weather.

Skirt Trimmings.

The black hem at the foot of skirts, without losing any of its popularity, is being gradually extended to other colors. For instance, a white skirt with a broad hem of Nattier blue is considered very smart, this shade being also employed on black materials or tulle.—The Housekeeper.

Oatmeal the Best of Skin Beautifiers

"Did you know that common oatmeal, the kind that you have on the breakfast table every morning, is the best skin whitener in the world?" asked the beauty doctor. "Women think they must have salves from the Orient and lotions from the Antilles before they can be beautiful, but my experience is that this climate grows just as good beautifiers as any other. Just take a heaping tablespoonful of soft creamy oatmeal from the breakfast table to-morrow morning and smuggle it to your room. Then pour over it a teaspoonful of oil of sweet almonds and rub the two up into a nice thick paste for your hands and arms."

"But isn't it awfully sticky?" queried the perplexed patient.

The beauty doctor laughed. "You wear it under gloves," said she. "There's nothing better, by the way, for just this purpose than that pair of chamois gloves that you used to wear in here last summer. I suppose they have seen their day now, so you can put them on night duty. Simply coat the hands and arms with the oatmeal paste and then slip on the gloves last thing before you hop into bed."

"But don't I have to wash my hands in something special first?" asked the worried beauty seeker.

"It's a good plan to use soap and water on the hands now and then," admitted the doctor. "If the water is hard, soften it with a pinch of borax, but not any more, as it dries the skin terribly. Your hands are quite free from hairs, so you can use plain white castile soap on them. Castile is oily, you know, so it encourages any tendency that you might have to fuzzy arms. If ever you are troubled, just try rubbing them with powdered pumice stone."

"My sister tried that," said the patient, "and it took all the skin off."

"That's because she got so interested in seeing the hairs come off that she forgot it was her arm and not the floor she was scrubbing," replied the beauty specialist. "You have to go at these things carefully. Mix the pumice with cold cream and use a flannel rag. Don't try to do it all in one day. Scrub a little every night, using the oatmeal and almond oil afterward, and the skin won't come off."

Reseda Cloth with Black Soutache Embroidery.

Correct Street Garb.

To be quite up to date the walking dress should be black or darkly tinted, very well cut and made after rather severely tailored lines.

Catarrh and La Grippe.

Rev. Geo. A. E. Troutman, Mt. Washington, Mo., writes: "My wife and I are strong believers in Peruna. I was cured of a bad case of catarrh when nothing else that I tried had any effect. My wife was cured from a severe case of la grippe, and we feel that the least we can do is to gratefully acknowledge the merit of Peruna.

Throat Trouble.

Rev. H. W. Tate, 920 Lincoln Avenue, Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "For several years I have been troubled with a peculiar spasmodic affection of the throat. It would seize me suddenly and for a few minutes I would be unable to speak audibly, and my breath would be greatly interfered with. I would be obliged to gasp for breath.

"I finally concluded that it was some catarrhal affection which probably excited the spasm. It interfered with my vocation as a preacher, attacking me occasionally in the pulpit.

"I had heard so much about Peruna as a catarrh remedy that I determined to try it. After taking two bottles, my trouble has disappeared. I feel sure that Peruna has greatly benefitted me."

Rev. P. E. Swanstrom, Swedish Baptist Pastor, Box 228, Grantsburg, Wis., writes that from the use of Peruna he is perfectly well, entirely cured of chronic diarrhea and catarrh.

This woman says that sick women should not fail to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she did.

Mrs. A. Gregory, of 2355 Lawrence St., Denver, Col., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I was practically an invalid for six years, on account of female troubles. I underwent an operation by the doctor's advice, but in a few months I was worse than before. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to perfect health, such as I have not enjoyed in many years. Any woman suffering as I did with backache, bearing-down pains, and periodic pains, should not fail to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Ring Watches Popular.

Swiss watchmakers are reported to be busy filling English and American orders for finger ring watches. The ring watch, though little seen, is no novelty. The manager of an old London watch-making firm says that he saw them more than 14 years ago. Queen Victoria had three or four. The simplest ones—a plain gold ring with the watch inserted—cost about $100, but with diamonds or other stones, $5,000 to $10,000 may be paid.

Reform in Earnest.

Mrs. Crossway was shedding tears of joy.

"I just can't help it," she exclaimed. "My husband has sworn off."

"Why, I didn't know he drank," said Mrs. Kawler, greatly astonished. "Was he—was he much given to the use of liquor?"

"O, dear, no! He didn't use it at all. He has sworn off from buying things we don't need and paying for them on the installment plan."

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

A HOME-MADE ROAD ROLLER.

Implement Which Will Help Put the Road in Good Condition.

If you need a road roller get a heavy sheet iron cylinder, stand it on end and place a length of 1½ or 2-inch pipe through the center. The end should be placed on planks which are well soaked or oiled, and the pipe braced to keep it exactly in the center. Fill the cylinder with good concrete, and when it has set tip it over and build a frame for it, so you can hitch a removable tongue at either side. The frame should be made of good, strong hard wood well braced. The cuts show plainly just how the roller is made and put together.

HUMUS FOR THE SOIL.

Necessity of Restoring This Element Where It Has Been Exhausted.

An extensive chemical survey has been taken of the soils of Tennessee, and it has been found that humus is one of the principal factors in soil fertility found to be lacking in that state. Commenting on the loss of humus and the means of replacing it, the investigator, Charles A. Mooers of the Tennessee station in bulletin 78 lately issued makes these observations:

One of the soil constituents which is well known to decrease under usual cultivation is humus, as the dark-colored organic substances which result from the decay of vegetable matter, etc., are called. The value of vegetable matter in the soil can hardly be overestimated. Especially is this true in the south, where the climatic conditions through a large part of the year are favorable to oxidation and consequent loss of humus from the soil.

In addition, the prevailing soil texture, and the hilly and rolling nature of the country, are such that except on well-set grass land there is a continual loss of the best of the soil by washing. This loss of surface soil may have something to do with the maintenance of the mineral plant-food supplies, which are, to a certain extent, renewed in this way; but, on the other hand, it takes away the humus and its chief plant-food constituent, nitrogen, both of which are found in only meager quantities in the subsoil.

Furthermore, with this loss of humus there is a decided deterioration in which structure, or tilth, of the soil, which dries out sooner, bakes worse, and is more troublesome to handle than when first cultivated.

For these reasons particular attention should be given to the building up of the soil by the incorporation of vegetable matter, and to its retention by deep plowing to prevent washing, by the growing of cover crops, and in some cases by the use of embankments and the like.

The disfavor with which many farmers look upon commercial fertilizers comes as a result of relying too much on small applications of the mineral elements without either making adequate applications of farmyard manure or following a system of cropping which would in and of itself do much toward the maintenance of soil fertility especially with respect to the supplies of both vegetable matter and nitrogen.

ITEMS.

Pleasant, friendly, unselfish ways carry their own welcome with them wherever they go.

Know that you know something, and you'll then have someone who will believe that you know it.

The farmer can better afford to pay $75 for a good cow than $25 for a common cow, but it is impossible to make some farmers see the point.

A cow is a mere machine for the conversion of food stuff into condensed product, and if the best results are desired from the food the sow eats she must be kept quiet, contented and above all things comfortable.

Believe in the betterment of the human race and while believing make it so as far as you are concerned. There will be one knave less to cope with, and therefore you will have made a success of your belief.

Butter Flavor.

Not so very much is known about the causes which affect the flavor of butter. The latest investigations conclude that it depends upon bacteria, which after using some of the materials in the butter, form a by-product and gives its odor.

ROAD DRAGS.

Good Work in One Illinois County an Example of What Can Be Done.

Forty-three reports from McLean county rural mail carriers, to the Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph, show that the King road drag has been used on 212 miles of road in the latter part of November and that there were 364 road drags owned upon these routes. These reports represent two-thirds of the rural routes of McLean county.

Every carrier who in any way indicated the results of road dragging—40 out of 43—gave a good recommendation of the drag, many of them in strong terms, and not one of them had a word of failure to report when the drag had been properly used.

While the report shows that one-third of all the drags were not in use, there was a special reason for this condition; this was in the rush of corn-husking time, and no doubt many of these drags will be put to work now that husking is finished.

This report from a limited territory shows as much road dragging and more than twice as many drags as were reported for this county a year ago by the Illinois highway commission.

An examination of the 43 reports shows that some dragging was done upon 31 routes, the smallest amount being one-half mile, and the largest 18 miles, the latter being the route out of Covel.

Nine routes had each ten or more miles of dragged road and the average number of miles dragged upon the 31 routes was six and three-fourths. In Normal and Dry Grove townships all the roads of principal travel are to be dragged, and Hudson township is seeking to do the same thing.

Very significant is the many times repeated remark of these carriers that the road drag is a good thing "if used" or "if properly used." Several of these reports show that winter and spring use of the drag, especially when the roads are wet enough for the mud to smear, bake and harden, is much better than dragging when the roads are dry enough for the dirt to roll up or crumble.

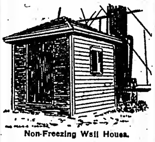
One of the lessons that has been learned in McLean county is that the road should be dragged when the surface is in a paste-like condition.

The most progressive of our road draggers are learning the exceeding value of dragging the road just before a freeze, and during the winter whenever it thaws enough so that the surface can be smoothed by the drag. This cheap, simple implement is working itself into favor with the people wherever it is properly used, and it can no longer be said that there is no sure and economical way of great improvement to our earth roads.

NON-FREEZING WELL HOUSE.

One Which Can Be Built Away from Framework of the Windmill.

Where it is not convenient to construct a well house inside and to the framework of the windmill the accompanying illustration will furnish some excellent suggestions for the construction of a building that will serve the purpose. The well proper is located inside of the windmill derrick, but by the employment of a walking-beam the pump is set outside of the derrick inside of the well house.



Non-Freezing Well House.

The building is 9 feet square with 7-foot posts. The framework was constructed out of rough 2x4 material. The building is located upon a solid concrete foundation about 6 inches above the surface of the ground.

The siding is first grade pine shiplapping. The roof is shingled. On the inside of the building a sheet of building paper was put on next to the studding and sealed with second grade pine matched sheeting. This makes a very warm building and one that will resist freezing in the coldest of weather.

The door is double sheeted with an air space between so that it is tight, explains the Prairie Farmer. The windows are double glass and well packed. I have been in this well house when the weather was 12 degrees below freezing and the pump was in the best of working condition.

Marks Her as a Failure.

If a cow appropriates all the nourishment taken from her food to build up fat cells and does not divert it to the udder to be drawn off in the form of milk, she is a failure as a milker and belongs nowhere else than with the beef cattle. On the other hand, if a cow has the milk-producing qualities, is small of stature and appropriates practically all of her food to the cause of increasing the milk supply, she is pretty apt to be a success as a dairy cow and a safe investment for speculation in that particular class of specializing.

Feed Clover on Farm.

It is believed that the fertility resulting from feeding clover hay is equal in value to the price of the hay itself. Therefore all the clover hay possible should be fed on the farm.

FIVE GIRL WAIFS ARE FOUND ON TEXAS PLAINS

FAMILY OF ORPHANS HAVE NARROW ESCAPE ON WAY BACK FROM NEW MEXICO.

Weatherford, Tex.—Exhausted in resources, with a broken-down team, and miserable beyond expression over their destitute condition, five girls were found in a wagon several miles out from Midland, on the plains of west Texas, a few days ago and brought to town by Mrs. H. N. Garrett, wife of a leading ranchman of that section. The girls ranged in age from 17 down to three or four, and gave the name of Rogers. It is a pitiful story they recited.

Several months ago the Rogers family left Texas and went to New Mexico, where they settled on a government land claim. The mother soon sickened and died amid those inhospitable surroundings, and the disgusted and discouraged father gathered up his orphan girls and started back to Texas over the long plains road which appeared to have no ending. Reaching Shafter Lake, just over in Texas from the New Mexico line, the father became desperately sick and could go no farther. The family was absolutely penniless, and at Shafter Lake the children were told if they could reach Midland they could doubtless find assistance.

The Girls Found by Mrs. Garrett.

With brave spirits those five girls hitched up their tired horses and started on the long drive to Midland. Day after day the exhausted horses toiled along the dim highway across the plains, until their strength gave out entirely, and they stopped to die a few miles from the desired goal.

The girls were unable to go farther, and there they stayed in their miserable camp until found by Mrs. Garrett and brought into Midland, where a considerable sum of money was raised for them.

Not knowing they were in the vicinity of Midland, the girls were preparing to start back on foot in search of Shafter Lake when they were discovered, and must have inevitably perished but for the providential appearance of the wife of the rancher upon the scene.

THOUGHT MULE WAS BEAR.

Negro Runs Three Miles in Terror to Escape Animal.

Port Jervis, N. Y.—Erastus Warfield, residing on the Plank road, eight miles north of this city, was the most frightened negro in that section the other night.

He was on his way to a neighbor's to ascertain whether he had any cure for a sick mule and had proceeded only a mile when he discovered that he was being followed by something.

A bear had been killed in the neighborhood a month ago and visions of another bear rose up before the excited darky. Although he is 75 years old and afflicted with rheumatism, he started on a keen run.

The patter of feet behind him made Erastus wild with terror, and he fairly flew over the ground, reaching the neighbor's house in remarkably quick time.

Without asking permission he pushed open the door and, rushing in upon the startled household, yelled: "Bear!"

Going to the door the neighbor found Warfield's mule there. The animal had followed its master out of the barn when he started for medicine and had run behind him all the way.

Erastus does not like to hear any one ask him why he ran three miles to escape his own mule instead of a bear. It makes him wrathful.

Hen's Leg Convicts Thief.

Watertown, S. D.—Through the medium of a hen with a broken leg, the state's attorney of Codington county has run down a chicken thief who has given his neighbors considerable trouble for some time past. The outcome was the conviction in police court of Peter Schaak, a young married farmer, who paid $60 for his petty depredations.

During the trial the state produced an old hen that wore a big bandage on one of its legs. This hen, one of the witnesses swore, had been her property. The deputy sheriff found the hen in the defendant's possession a day after a big bunch of poultry disappeared from a farm home near the Schaak place.

The hen with the broken leg was the sole means of identifying the stolen property.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist Is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Across India with Peeps at Missionaries at Work

Calcutta, India.—Beautiful, dirty; splendid, squalid; rich, miserable—such are the contrasting adjectives which one may apply to this third largest city in the British empire, seated on the banks of the Hoogli river, whose shifting currents are her best defense against an invading fleet. It is a city of color, from the fat, shiny, black babu, scantily clad only in a few yards of purple cheese cloth and dazzling yellow shoes, to the pale and immaculate Briton, in top hat and frock coat. It is a city of historic interest; everybody goes first to see the famous Black Hole.

But to all the world that is in any way interested in missions this is remembered as the scene of the labors of William Carey, the father of modern Protestant missions, who did his lifework at Serampore, a few miles from here. In the cathedral also one sees a fine statue of Reginald Heber, the famous missionary bishop of the Church of England, and author of the most widely-known missionary hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

Dusky "Europeans."

My work deals with to-day, so I must introduce the reader instead to the most curious company of "Europeans" he has ever met, as they are gathered for worship, several hundreds of them, in the fine big church of the American Methodist mission. These dusky "Europeans" are mostly half-castes, Eurasians, but they dislike the latter name and are at all pains to claim identity only with their white ancestors. Thus a dark brown man, three-fourths native, will speak ostentatiously of going "home" to England, though he never saw England, and only one of his forbears for centuries past has ever been outside of India.

This very pride indicates that the Eurasian has certain qualities which go with white blood, and this self-supporting, aggressive church, with refinement written on the faces of many of its members, indicates the importance of this branch of the Methodist Episcopal mission. The Methodists have been very successful throughout India in this work for Eurasians, and for the whites who have married native women, thus losing social caste. In addition, other white people who do not care for the established church services, attach themselves to these churches for Europeans.

The Really White Europeans.

If the blended brother is a problem in India needing the missionary's attention, no less is the simon-pure white man. And I must say that, so far as I could learn, the life of the Europeans (as all Caucasians are designated east of Suez) is more wholesome and normal in India than in the far east. This is doubtless due to the fact that British influence is altogether dominant, and British ideals have followed the flag. The white people generally attend the established churches, just as at home, as a matter of course.

For the young men—who are everywhere the crux of the social problem—I found the Y. M. C. A. doing a conspicuously successful work. In the farther east it has been a failure so far as the white men are concerned, although its work for the natives, as these articles have reported, has been of a high grade. Here, however, the association is "good form," and the larger Indian cities have fine buildings, veritable gentlemen's clubs, with chambers for any number of men from a score to a hundred, and in general doing a sort of Christian work which deserves great praise. It would cause an American secretary to lift his eyebrows were he to see the number of men in evening clothes (including, of course, the local secretary himself) to be found of an evening in the Calcutta or Bombay association. Therein, though, is a sign of success, for that is the very crowd that the association needs to reach here. The work for the native Indians, conducted in separate buildings, of course, is equally notable.

There are white women in the east, as well as native and half-caste women, needing the peculiar sort of help which the Y. W. C. A. affords. I was greatly struck by the hold that this organization has taken in India; there is a sanity, a careful, confident facing of actual conditions, and an effective aggressiveness about it which should place the association very high in the rank of missionary agencies.

One sort of work open to the Y. W. C. A. is illustrated by the following incident. Every ship sailing to India from England carries young women going out to be married, and to live with fathers, brothers, or other relatives. Not always do the relatives turn up, or the bridegrooms prove available; in which case the young woman sadly needs womanly help and safe shelter. On the ship in which I went to Calcutta were three such young women; one of them discovered that her uncle had gone to Japan and she was penniless, half a world from home. At the first opportunity, after learning of the efficiency of the Calcutta Young Women's Christian association, I put the secretary into touch with the stranded girl, but almost too late, for a day later she attempted suicide.

"Behind the Curtain."

High-class Hindu and Mohammedan women are kept "purdah," that is "behind the curtain." The precautions that are used to keep them from the gaze of all men save their families seem ridiculous to a westerner. One such woman was put into a railway compartment next to mine, with the most elaborate precautions. But when we stopped at a small station I caught a glimpse of her face through the window and—well, she would never be kidnaped for her looks! This sequestration of the women leads to all manner of evils; and the lot of the poor creatures is narrow and pitiable, indeed.

Now the women missionaries are penetrating "behind the curtain," taking with them medical healing, the schoolbook and the Bible. The Woman's Missionary Union of America is especially diligent in this zenana work, having missions in five cities, and their range of activities includes visitation to the homes, day schools for children, orphanages, rescue homes, a hospital and a high school and college. As I talked with two bright American girls at Allahabad, Miss Wishard and Miss Bertsch, about their work, and heard how they had rescued 23 ill-treated and widowed Brahmins during the first four months of the year (they teach 500 women a week) I could not but agree that this was a womanly work for women, affording a career such as should satisfy any college-bred girl.

A Tomb for a Home.

The woes of women, and especially of widows, in India are too well known to need rehearsal here. They afford endless scope for missionary service. Thus, at Lucknow the Methodist Episcopal mission has converted an old Mohammedan tomb into a home for homeless women. It was rather interesting to learn that a large part of the cares of the charming young woman in charge is the endeavor to find husbands for as many as possible of the 50 women who come under her oversight every year.

In this same city of Lucknow I found another flourishing institution for women, the Isabella Thoburn college, said to be the oldest college for girls in India, having been established in 1870. It is affiliated with the University of Allahabad, and has more requests than it can meet for graduates to fill governmental and private teaching positions. The college has won favor with high-caste natives, and its nearly 200 students represent all classes of society. I could not see that the life differed greatly from the life of American college girls.

As I watched a file of these lustrous-eyed, graceful, white-robed girls cross the campus of the Presbyterian girls' school at Allahabad, on their way to chapel, it seemed to me that the spectacle was rather more picturesque than anything an American college can boast. This building is the gift of Mr. John Wanamaker. A Christian Endeavor meeting by the girls was quite a model meeting of the American type. Christian Endeavor appears to be especially effective among the Indian churches. Even a slight association with the students here seemed to show in their character a reflection of the charm of Miss Forman, their principal. The caliber, culture and character of some of the American women to be met on the mission-field are altogether beyond the imagining of the public at home.

New India in the Making.

Among the Indian reformers there is discernable a movement looking toward the nationalization of India's varying creeds, which is a step essential to political unity. The national creed is not intended to be Christianity. The one conspicuous agency offsetting this tendency is the mission school. Up and down the length of India are schools conducted by missionaries and attended by the children of Christian converts (for they are part of the machinery which must produce the next generation of native preachers), by the children of low castes, who are thus equipped to rise in the social scale and, to an increasing extent of late years, by the children of the higher castes. It is almost hopeless to attempt to enumerate these; I might specify the fine big Reid Christian college at Lucknow of the Methodist Episcopal church, situated on ground made historic by the mutiny, equipped with imposing buildings, attended by 500 students in dormitory, from a wide region of which Lucknow is the center, and administered to by men of ability and breadth of vision. Both collegiate and commercial courses are given here.

Early this year many Methodists from America journeyed to India to attend the jubilee of Methodist Episcopal missions at Bareilly, where 50 years ago Rev. William Butler established the work of the Methodist Episcopal church, which has now grown to a force of 5,000 workers and 200,000 native members. At this celebration, which was attended by 2,000 native Christians, 500 converts were baptized on a single day, a unique feature of the baptismal service being the cutting off of the tuft of hair, the loss of which means separation from Hinduism. The occasion focused the attention of the religious world upon the fact of Methodistism's aggressive, diversified, far-ramifying and successful work in India. Thirty-seven different languages are used by Methodist missionaries in this country.

Allahabad, the university center of India, boasts another great educational institution of the western type, the Allahabad Christian college, of the Presbyterian mission. Its buildings are in quadrangle form about an immense and symmetrical banyan tree. One of the buildings is Princeton hall, a gift of Princeton alumni. An inspection of this plant impresses a visitor with the thoroughness of the standard maintained. The principal, Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Ewing, is rightly reckoned one of India's great educational leaders. In the big preparatory school for boys, which is a part of the institution, I had a chance to test all the classes in English, and I cannot imagine a school in the homeland emerging from this sort of ordeal more successfully.

The Living Dead.

At Allahabad is situated a large leper asylum, maintained jointly by the government and by the beneficent Mission to Lepers in the East. It is managed by Mr. Samuel Higginbottom, of the Presbyterian mission—one of the innumerable extras that I found missionaries everywhere carrying. "Salaam, sahib," the lepers would cry as we passed, lifting pitiful stumps of fingerless hands to their foreheads. A more desolate spectacle than a leper asylum can scarcely be imagined; yet here was to be found, in some cases, the grace of Christian resignation, with cheerfulness, which is not always present amid scenes of health and prosperity.

Not all lepers are in asylums; unnumbered thousands roam the streets at will. While attending the daily clinic of Dr. Charles R. Cook, of Lucknow, the only missionary in all India of the Reformed Episcopal church, I sat within five feet of two lepers crowded in the press. Next to one of them was a man whose family was suffering with the plague, five having died, and four being ill at the moment. Another one of the patients had, within a few days, lost a baby, a wife and four brothers, and his father lay dangerously ill, all with the plague. One convalescent plague patient, whom the doctor had cured, was mildly rebuked by this quiet, unruffled missionary for leaving his bed too soon. A boy smitten with the plague was brought by a mother with dread-filled eyes, and carefully examined by the bare hands of the doctor.

This one doctor, with a single native assistant, had 61,638 cases last year, including a few in his well-kept little hospital. All classes, rich and poor, Mohammedans, Hindus and Christians, come for help. I counted 30 crowded into the small room at one time, while outside a larger crowd of waiting patients was listening to the native preacher.

A Medaled Missionary.

One of the star missions of the American board is at Ahmednagar, where Rev. Dr. Robert A. Hume is senior missionary. Dr. Hume is less widely known as the recipient of a medal from King Edward for his famine relief work than as the author of "Missions from the Modern Viewpoint." That he and his associates stand high in native esteem was evident from the constant salaams he received as we rode about the city together in a tonga, or native cart. Many non-Christian natives have given largely to this mission work for Indians, and the government also contributes to the industrial school.

I found all sorts of educational and industrial enterprises under way, some of them, from a bicycle repair shop to a tract depot, being wholly or in part self-supporting. The big church in native style, where even Hindus have been known to worship unknown gods, interested me less than the extensive industrial establishments where oriental rugmaking, weaving, woodcarving, carpentry and brass and silver working are carried on for the market, under the direction of D. C. Churchill, of Oberlin college and the Massachusetts Institution of Technology, and J. B. Knight, of Amherst college, and an agricultural college—types of the nonministerial, college-bred missionaries who are doing pioneer work for the orient. Mr. Churchhill has invented a new hand loom that is within the compass of the average Indian mind and purse.

Miss Emily R. Bissell and her brother, Rev. H. G. Bissell, carry on in this mission the work which their mother, who had been 54 years in India, laid down last year. While watching the arrival at the hospital here of a woman patient in a bullock cart I saw Miss Moulton comforting the weeping husband, a Christian teacher, in a manner which revealed to me the beautiful devotion of the missionaries to this people.

It takes devotion of an unselfish sort to do this work, especially among the villages. One Sunday morning I sat, with Rev. Mark Keaslar, of the Agra Methodist Episcopal mission, in blistering, life-shriveling heat, in a low, dirty, malodorous dwelling on the outskirts of the city, while he told a crowd of hookah-smoking natives the gospel story and answered their interested questions; which looks romantic and picturesque from this distance; but is work to take the heart out of anybody less devoted than a missionary; and it is the work which many hundreds of missionaries are doing all over India to-day.

TRAPS FOR UNWARY

ADVERTISING TRICKS OF MAIL-ORDER HOUSES.

GOODS PRICED BELOW COST

Articles of Standard Value Frequently Sold at Cost to Create False Impression of Cheapness—Unthinking People Victims.

The theory upon which a great number of mail order concerns proceed is to select a certain number of articles, those of standard values and well-known, and mark them down to wholesale prices or lower. This is for the purpose of "baiting," as well as to give the impression that regular dealers are selling goods at prices too high. On many widely advertised goods which are in constant demand the mail order house advertises prices much lower than the actual cost of the goods to the house. This is done with a view of catching customers, killing off the trade of local dealers, and with hopes of selling other goods at enormous profits. Then the advertising part of the deal is of some value.

People like to buy goods at the lowest possible cost. They get impressions of low prices from comparison of goods of which they know the selling price. If a certain rifle is always sold in the gunstores at $14 and the catalogue house sells the same at $11, the average man realizes that he is getting a bargain, even though the concern may lose a half dollar in the transaction. But the man is also impressed with the idea that prices are just as low on other goods of which he has little information as to values. It is knowing this fact that causes the mail-order houses to resort to this trick. Then there is difference in quality of goods. In the different lines there are different grades. It is not long ago that a United States district court grand jury returned an indictment against a large mail-order house on three different charges of fraud. In each case there was misrepresentation. One of the charges was that "pure white lead" paint, supposed to be manufactured by the concern, did not contain a trace of white lead, and was manufactured by contract by another concern. The other charge was that jewelry was misrepresented. In the matter of jewelry there is great chance for fraud. That which is called solid gold may be not over one-tenth gold, a little better than brass. Gold always has a certain value. Whether it is in jewelry or in a coin of the realm, the value is just the same. Its purity and weight is what counts. It is curious how intelligent people who know of the fixed value of gold will take the word of a mail-order schemer as to quality, when the article is sold at a less price than the metal which it is claimed is represented in it can be bought for in the markets.

Low prices are generally quoted upon goods which the average people understand, and are acquainted with, and the loss is made up on the classes of goods which allow the practice of deception, of the value of which the people little know. People who patronize mail-order concerns should understand that in the majority of cases they are paying more than they would be compelled to pay if they made their purchases at home. Then there is involved the principle of sending money away from the neighborhood where it is earned.

If the people who patronize mail-order houses would only buy such goods as they know are priced below cost to the concern, the mail-order houses could not continue in business a year. But these concerns know that Mr. Barnum was about right when he said that the "American people like to be humbugged." They transact their business accordingly. The home merchant must go ahead on a different basis. He depends upon his reputation for square dealing. He knows that he must be honest, whether he is inclined to be or not, or that he will soon be compelled to get out of business for lack of patronage. The mail-order concerns look for a new crop of "suckers" every year, and they find more or less of a crop.

Economy in Home Trade.

In an address made some years ago before congress the late Thomas B. Reed said: "Which is it better for the farmer to do—send his supplies a thousand miles to the seacoast, 3,000 miles across the water and sell it to the mechanic who gets less wages, or sell it right here at home to the mechanic who gets more wages?" Reed's logic is sound, but he might have gone a little further, and shown the farmer how important it is to have the home market right at his door; how by the building up of the commercial and manufacturing importance of his home town, he widens the market for his products, and that the livelier and better the home place can be made, the better will be the prices he will receive for his products.

Demand Home-Made Goods.

One western state that is giving a wholesome example to other states in the matter of patronage of home industries is Colorado. A movement has been well started for a campaign in behalf of Colorado manufactured goods. Even the big department stores in Denver, Pueblo and other cities of the state advertise Colorado made goods, and extol their merits. Colorado people are becoming such advocates of home trade as to ask for articles manufactured in their state, and refuse to take substitutes manufactured elsewhere.

WHOLE IDEA IS A FALLACY.

Systems of Co-Operation Weak Theoretically and in Practice.

One of the spirits of the age is organization and co-operation of those who are engaged in the same lines of trade, industry or profession. It has been proved beyond cavil that men have a right to thus organize and pursue any system in business, or in their special fields that they desire as long as their methods are not unjust toward others. From many organizations comes much good. From others things that are harmful.

It must be remembered that there are fundamentals in all systems that cannot be ignored. There are principles which must be observed, or failure will be sure to result. Within the past dozen years numerous alleged co-operative organizations have been formed within the United States. These organizations have been of a kind that involves certain benefits to members—the elimination of profits to middlemen, the distribution of earnings to members, etc. Not one in fifty of these organizations has been successful, and the reason for failure is that the systems followed were not in harmony with economic laws.

In the world of commerce there are three important factors—production, distribution and consumption. Were there no consumption there would be no need of production or distribution. But civilized people must be fed and clothed and their other wants supplied, and as long as intelligent man exists there will be need and methods to supply his wants. Thus we find the producers, the distributors, and the latter class divide into groups known as factors or jobbers, their agents and the so-called retailers who directly supply the consumers.

The common co-operative plans deal with cutting out the distributors, the elimination of that cost in products which represents the compensation of merchants whether they be wholesalers or retailers. The present system of distribution has evolved from an experience covering some thousands of years. It is based upon equity and upon the soundest principle of economy. The system cannot well be changed unless the whole field of human endeavor be modified. People must be employed in gainful occupations, or they become burdens upon the classes who are earners. All cannot be producers, but all can perform an important part in production, in manufacture and in distribution. The co-operative system that means the elimination of the factors in commerce excepting the manufacturer means the robbing of a large class of a means of earning subsistence and an encroachment upon other fields of labor that are now well equalized. The present system of distribution is the most economical that can be devised. No manufacturer of food products, unless he have a monopoly, can maintain exclusive distributing warehouses. Thus we find the jobber a co-operator merely, working in harmony with a multitude of manufacturers and for them conducting a general warehouse, guaranteeing the collection and payment of bills due them and for his services receiving a small commission. His agent or traveler sells a hundred kinds of goods instead of one particular kind. Here again we find co-operation in its highest type. The retailer carries a variety of goods, representative of, perhaps 200 or 300 manufacturers; here again is co-operation, and it may be said that the earnings of all engaged in distribution represent a small commission for performing a service, and the aggregate of the earnings of any one of them—the jobber, his agent and the retailer—is dependent upon his labor and his business sagacity. When these three factors in distribution be cut out just as expensive a system must be substituted. In case of the manufacturer who sells his products direct to the consumer, he has large advertising bills to pay, and a hundred little expenses which the manufacturer who sells his products through regular established channels does not have to bear.

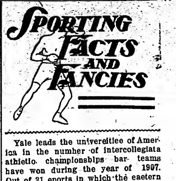
When a co-operative store is established with a few hundred stockholders as its patrons it is generally found that it cannot be operated at lower expense than if conducted by an individual, and it soon ceases to exist.

Editor Realizes Situation.

It has come to a time when the business man must take note of the mail order concerns. They are continually growing larger and taking more trade out of the smaller towns. Of course we all know that it is not right for Wilkinsburg people to send their money to Chicago or New York or other places for their groceries, dry goods, etc., when we have people, neighbors and friends selling the same goods right at home. The local merchant has no one to blame but himself for the condition which now exists. This may be a little hard, but it is true. Many of the local merchants do not let their old customers, and prospective new ones, know of the articles they keep by advertising them. The mail order houses are the largest and most successful advertisers in the world, and without advertising they could do no business. Now, if they can afford to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars a year to keep their old customers informed and to get new ones, the local merchant could put a big "kink" in the mailorder business by adopting the same method on a smaller scale.—Wilkinsburg (Pa.) Call.

Lincoln's Wise Saying.

Home-traders should always bear in mind the saying of President Lincoln: "If we buy a dress in London, we have the dress, the Londoners have our money; if we buy a dress here, we have both the dress and the money."



SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

Yale leads the universities of America in the number of intercollegiate athletic championships bar teams have won during the year of 1907. Out of 21 sports in which the eastern colleges have held championship meets the Elis are supreme in 6, and if Yale chose to dispute Cornell's right to the rowing honors she could claim a tie in this sport. Yale was first in football, basketball, shooting, water polo, wrestling and golf. But in justice to the Elis it should be said that there were four of these sports in which they did not compete. Cornell ranks next to Yale in the number of championships won, the Ithacans capturing the title in three and tying for a second. Pennsylvania and Princeton are tied for third with 2½ each, while Columbia follows with 2, the other champions being content with 1 each. If each intercollegiate championship were counted as 1, the standing of the eastern colleges would be as follows: Yale, 6; Cornell, 3½; Pennsylvania, 2½; Princeton, 3½; Columbia, 2; Haverford, 1; New York university, 1; Annapolis, 1; Harvard, 1. The following table gives the result of the championship fights in 21 sports:

Sport.	College.
Football	Yale
Track athletics	Pennsylvania
Rowing	Cornell
*Baseball	Cornell-Princeton
Bowling	Columbia
Cross country	Cornell
Association football	Haverford
Basketball	Yale
Cricket	Pennsylvania
Shooting	Yale
Lacrosse	Cornell
Swimming	Princeton
Hockey	Princeton
Water polo	Yale
Wrestling	Yale
Gymnastics	New York University
Fencing	Annapolis
Golf	Yale
Tennis	Harvard
Chess	(1) Columbia, (2) Pennsylvania-Brown

*Tie for first.
Two tournaments.

Barry McCormick, the clever Milwaukee second sacker, has been made manager of the Milwaukee American association team to succeed Jack Doyle. McCormick has seen long years of service in the big leagues, and at one time was a member of the Chicago Nationals. As a second baseman he won the distinction of being one of the fastest men in the business when it came to assisting in double plays. Barry is one of the headiest players on the team and many fans believe that he will make an excellent manager. He surely knows the game from A to Z and is chuck full of experience. McCormick is a steady going sober-minded fellow off the field, but he does not lack the necessary aggressiveness of the game. As a player he is popular with his teammates. McCormick's home is in Chicago.

BARRY McCORMICK.

In view of the determined attempt that is to be made by the Intercollegiate Athletic association to eradicate or at least modify the playing of summer baseball by college students the ideas of Dave Fultz, former center fielder of the Highlanders, are interesting. During his day as a student at Brown university Fultz was one of the best players in the college ranks. During his career as a successful professional player Fultz often spoke interestingly on the aspects of college baseball. Fultz is a practicing lawyer and a lecturer in the religious field. Fultz' views follow:

"I see no reason why the bona fide college student of good standing, good moral character, who engages in athletics for money during the summer months as a means of obtaining his education should not represent his college. Our students sing in churches or in summer opera companies and then return to college and sing on our glee clubs; the writer may contribute to newspapers, magazines and still write for our college publications. He of much wisdom may coach the delinquent student and still represent our debating club. All this is done for money, but the ethical status is never questioned."

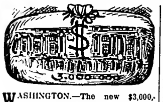
Gossip of Washington

What Is Going On at the National Capital.

Palatial Offices for Congressmen



WASHINGTON.—The new $3,000,000 office buildings for congressmen, now almost completed, will make life very easy for the men who make laws. So easy, in fact, will their existence be, that they will not even have to walk from their offices to the senate chamber or hall of representatives. A private underground electric railroad will be provided for that purpose.

There are two of these new office buildings, one for the senate and one for the house. They are exactly alike in their architecture and general equipment. Each will cost $3,000,000, not counting furnishings. Each covers a full city block.

This is how it will work: Congressman Humphrey is in his mahogany trimmed marble suite signing the voucher for his increased salary.

An electric bell tells him that the house has been called to order and that he is liable to be marked absent if he does not respond to the roll call. He steps into the hall and boards the elevator. This drops him to the subway level, where he finds a red plush-lined gondola in waiting.

He steps aboard and is shunted rapidly to the capitol building, where he enters an elevator which opens into the private lobby of the hall of representatives. The official porter takes his hat and coat; the official barber touches up his hair, and he steps in and responds to his name. His day's work is done.

The building for members of the house is so far done that the rooms have been apportioned and will be occupied this session. The senate building is not yet under roof. There are in the house building 397 suites, one for each member, with one to spare.

In addition there are elaborate "conference rooms," private dining rooms, official barber shops, where members are shaved and trimmed free (at government cost), baths, electric sprays, private bars, and, in fact, everything necessary to this brand of "the simple life."

The buildings have been arranged in every way so as to enable the member to sidestep the outside world. He can go and come without meeting a constituent. Private cloak rooms and lounging rooms are provided with luxurious leather chairs, thick brussels carpets, and other appointments like an up-to-date club.

United States Navy as a Health Resort

MUCH interesting information in regard to the navy is found in the recent annual report of Surgeon-General Rixey.

With an average strength, including the marine corps, of about 42,000, both afloat and ashore, the total number of deaths in the navy for the year was 241; a ratio of 5.66 to the thousand.

It is natural that a picked class of men under constant surveillance should make a better record than the heterogeneous population of a city, but even so the contrast between a rate of 5.66 in the navy and a rate of from 10 to 35, or even higher, in the cities is a good showing for the former.

Of the 241 deaths only 144 were from disease. The remaining 97 were from injury, including poisons.

A rather surprising fact is that 907 applicants for enlistment were rejected on account of color blindness. This made a color blind rate of over 28 to the thousand of all applicants. One in every 15 of those rejected was color blind.

The question of the employment of woman nurses in naval hospitals was submitted to the last congress, but the members did not see it in the same light as the medical bureau does.

It is urged that not only are women better fitted for nursing than men are, but also that in time of war their services are absolutely necessary. In that event male nurses would be needed at sea and the hospitals would have to call in women.

Not only are women actually needed now, but if taken into the hospitals at present they would become accustomed to the administration of naval hospitals and would form "an organized nucleus, capable of easy expansion" if the need should arise.

A Hard Year for Counterfeiters

THE annual report of John E. Wilkie, chief of the secret service, shows that for the year closing with June 30 last 216 arrests were made. Of this number 125 made and passed counterfeit silver coin. Ten made and endeavored to pass counterfeit paper money, while 25 raised bills. Of the arrests referred to 115 were convicted, 25 are awaiting the action of the courts, 36 are awaiting the action of the federal grand jury, 22 were acquitted, two were ignored by the grand jury, four were nolled, one is awaiting sentence and two were ordered discharged by order of federal attorneys. Of the total number arrested 182 were native born Americans. Italy comes second with 21.

Chief Wilkie says that with one exception the counterfeits of the year suggested the work of novices or ignorant foreigners, and that the volume of circulation, both of coin and notes, was smaller than for many years. He further states that there was a satisfactory diminution in the volume of raised notes, which may be attributed largely to the arrest and conviction of the dangerous criminal and note-raiser, Irving Tolley, who was thrice captured, but who usually managed to escape.

He is now undergoing a long term of confinement at the federal prison in Atlanta, Ga. He was responsible for 50 per cent. of all raised notes reported.

Reception to the Diplomatic Corps

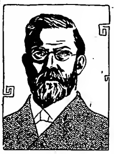
PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT gave a reception to the members of the diplomatic corps and to several hundreds of other invited guests the other night. Ordinarily the big, jamming, crushing social function, whether it is at the White House or at any other house, is a temper-trying, body-racking affair, utterly void of joy. The man who loathes anything in the social line bigger than a dinner party of 12—with a good dinner—nevertheless will have a good time, to the forgetting of all discomfort, at a presidential reception to the representatives of kingdoms and republics.

The diplomatic reception was attended by more people than have been at the White House on any occasion in years, excepting of course on the occasion of the New Year's day reception, when the latchstring hangs out to the world. Every ambassador, every minister, every naval and military attache and every secretary to the last degree of secretaryship was there, all in the raiment of rank, and no lieutenant-general of the armed forces of the United States is arrayed like one of the under-secretaries of the European powers or as the sublieutenant who does duty as military attache.

The larger percentage of the military attaches of the European government does not need ramifications of uniform and equipment to make it physically presentable. In fact, if some of the Englishmen, Russians and Germans would take off some 20 or 30 pounds of decorations, strip off 18 or 20 yards of fur lining and take a reef or two in their sashes—those of them who wear sashes—they would appear to a more militant advantage. Fully the half of them are magnificent specimens of manhood.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

THE CZAR'S BEST ENEMY



Prof. Paul Milyoukov, formerly of the University of Chicago, member of the third duma for St. Petersburg, and leader of the constitutional democrats of Russia, at the solicitation of the civic forum of New York city came from his home to address it upon the topic, "Constitutional Government for Russia."

He traveled more than 5,000 miles to present, in a single address, the cause of popular government in Russia, and judging by the applause which greeted his words from the 4,000 present, the mission of the distinguished legislator was fulfilled.

Milyoukov has suffered in liberty's cause if any man has. In 1898 he was inculcating a spirit of reverence for constitutional liberty in the minds of the students of Moscow university when the police suddenly snatched him out of his chair and railroaded him to Siberia after a summary trial. He utilized his time writing "The History of Russian Culture." After two years of close confinement he was liberated, but on his return to European Russia he was deported to Bulgaria and an expatriation warrant issued against him. Denying the right of the government to drive him out of his own country, he returned and was promptly sent to prison without trial. Here he remained five months and was released on condition that he leave the country. He came to America, where he preached the doctrine of liberty. Then came the upheaval in Russia, and a general amnesty was forced upon the czar. He took advantage of this to return to Russia.

Milyoukov was a candidate for the first and second dumas, but the government on some technicality declared him ineligible. Not daunted by government hostility, he presented himself again for the third duma and was elected. He was at once chosen as the leader of the groups which stand for the constitution as granted by the czar, the groups which committed the unpardonable impertinence of taking it for granted that the czar meant what he said when he made the promise.

NEW OWNER OF LONDON TIMES

Cyril Arthur Pearson, the new proprietor of the London Times, is one of the greatest newspaper owners in the world. Besides the Times he controls the Standard, the Express, the Evening Standard and the St. James Gazette, all leading London dailies, five dailies in other cities, four weekly newspapers, nine weekly periodicals and six monthlies. He is believed to be to-day a multi-millionaire, yet 12 years ago he was earning $1,500 a year. He was then manager of Tit-Bits, of which Sir George Newnes was the proprietor. Tit-Bits had started a general information competition, the prize being a $10 a week job in the office. Pearson took part in it and used to ride on his bicycle to Bedford to consult the library there and then return on his wheel at night, a round trip of 60 miles. He won the prize and found the job a sinecure, but he made it something different. He acted as understudy for everybody until he had the whole details of the business at his finger ends. In two years he was made manager.

A fortunate trip to America aroused his ambition for bigger things. He found young men of his own age managing big businesses, and could not see that they were any more intelligent than himself. On his return he threw up his job and started Pearson's Weekly, which was a money-maker from the beginning.

His keen eyesight (aided by his spectacles), an excellent memory and quick decision are three of the qualities to which he owes his success.

When he was in America Pearson heard of a certain railway that was likely to be bought up. He invested every cent he had in its stock and before he returned he had cleared $24,000 by the deal. He has never been afraid to take chances. Pearson is now in his fortieth year, and looks even less.

HEAD OF SUGAR TRUST

Washington B. Thomas, who has been designated as head of the sugar trust, to succeed the late H. O. Havemeyer, is one of the most remarkable figures in Boston's social and business life.

Mr. Thomas, who thus becomes chief executive of a $90,000,000 corporation, will draw a salary at least twice as big as that of the president of the United States, in addition to his dividends as a stockholder, which in themselves represent a handsome fortune annually. Yet Mr. Thomas is less proud of his money and supremacy in the business world than of his two beautiful daughters and his skill as a golf player.

Society still is talking of the splendor of the fete at the Somerset given by Mr. Thomas in honor of one of his debutante daughters some months ago. Rumor placed the cost of the evening's function at fully $30,000. Mr. Thomas laughs when asked about it, and doesn't care. Money to him is of value only for what can be done with it; in consequence he is one of the most liberal figures in Boston's ultra-exclusive society.

He dwells in pastoral simplicity at Pride's Crossing and in urban splendor in winter in the old Frederick Ames mansion in the Back bay. He is a Harvard man, has seen 52 summers, works ten hours every day when he's working and plays golf ten hours every day when he's playing.

CHICAGO'S PAROLE JUDGE

Municipal Judge McKenzie Cleland's efforts to redeem the fallen of Chicago, through the parole system, ended recently with his transfer from the Maxwell street branch to the civil branch of the tribunal. He was switched because, it is said, the other judges did not approve of his methods.

Many who never before had entered a police court were present at the last session. There were wives whose homes, they said, had been redeemed from the curse of drunken husbands and fathers through Judge Cleland's plan of reformation. Some said their own reformation was due to his system.

Judge Cleland inaugurated his project December 27, 1906, and since then 1,231 have been released "on promise." Of these it was necessary finally to send 74 to the bridewell, but 1,145 "made good." Twelve have disappeared.

Judge Cleland's daring and originality when he first took office was something of a shock to Chicagoans. He began by fining and sentencing to jail a number of saloon-keepers for violations of the law. Mayor Dunne promptly pardoned the liquor men and Judge Cleland then subpenaed the mayor and certain aldermen for contempt of court.

It was shown the mayor had the right to pardon and the affair was settled, but the judge had clearly shown that the political interference with the administration of his office would not be tolerated.

Musings of the Metropolis

News of New York Town Outlined in Brief Form.

Glory of New York's 400 Dimmed

NEW YORK.—The glory of the 400 of New York is fast becoming dimmed. No longer are its varied and original entertainments the talk of this country and Europe. Harry Lehr, or some other creator of original entertainments, must bestir himself or the fame of the ultra-fashionable in this city will not extend beyond the confines of Manhattan.

Now Chicago is forging to the front as a city where society folk have developed a penchant to expend great sums of money and arrange affairs not in the calendar. Its series of musical pantomimes in which the most fashionable women of the Windy City appeared in classical and costly costumes is the talk of the smart set here. Why doesn't New York have something like this, is asked, and in the same breath the lack of some men or woman with a mind to create such is deplored.

Not only Chicago has stirred New York. Staid old Philadelphia has occasioned no end of surprise. "Millionaires there are spending money like they hailed from Pittsburg," is the way Gothamites refer to the coming out in the City of Brotherly Love, which have caused no end of comment. Live song birds flitting through forests and gold fish darting about in clear lakes to be caught by the fair women present! Such was the scene presented at the ball given when Miss Dorothy Randolph made her debut.

Such extravagance, cry some. Why the reason? The Randolphs had to "see" the Pauls, and society here, as well as in Philadelphia, it is reported, generally agrees that the Randolphs are entitled to the palm. The party of the Pauls, however, was as grand as it was original. At that gay function, 1,500 live butterflies were given their freedom to fly about the room and alight upon the stunning dresses of the misses and matrons present, as well as upon their beautiful shoulders and persons.

These for Philadelphia, living pictures for Chicago, nothing for New York. It is no wonder members of the 400 feel they must bestir themselves.

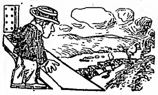
Poor Multi-Millionaire Is in Trouble

PITY the sorrows of a poor multi-millionaire. W. A. Clark, ex-United States senator from Montana, owner of the richest copper mine in the world, part owner of the Los Angeles & San Pedro railroad, and several million dollars' worth of other things, has suffered the ignominy of having his palatial office furniture here seized to satisfy part of a judgment of $44,894 which a mining expert, George Treadwell, has obtained against him.

If Mr. Treadwell's representatives could have done so they would have seized the $5,000,000 palace owned by Mr. Clark at Fifth avenue and Seventy-ninth street. But when they would have laid hands on it they found it had been incorporated, with all its contents, into the W. A. Clark Realty Company, and had thus been protected.

The $44,000 judgment which brought on all the turmoil dates back eight years to the date that, Treadwell asserts, he discovered the $300,000,000 United Verde mine in Arizona. Treadwell says he was paid for his prospecting by the owners and presented with 100 shares of the company's stock. At that time the stock was quoted at $10. A little later, being cramped for cash in London, Treadwell hypothecated the hundred shares. Then Clark stepped into the situation. Treadwell says the ex-senator reorganized the company and froze him out completely. For eight years he fought for it. Finally Judge Davis handed down an opinion in which he declared that the copper king must turn over the stock with interest to pay the penalty.

Wide Variations in Rise of Streets



CONTRARY to the generally accepted opinion at home and abroad, Manhattan island is far from being level, and the records of the city highway department show that few cities have more variations in the altitudes of their streets. There are real hills of considerable size to be encountered in all parts of the island. While it is necessarily at sea level all around its borders, the moment tidewater is left considerable elevations are encountered.

A man with a level, standing at the Battery, will find himself at the sea wall only five feet above the sea line, but as he goes northward he is gradually ascending until he is 36 feet above it when the city hall is reached. Then he continues to go up very slowly, excepting for a depression at Canal street, where once a deep ditch ran, emptying into the Hudson river, until he reaches Twenty-third street, where he is 33 feet above his starting point. At Central Park plaza, at Fifty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, he is 47½ feet above the sea, and adds 29 feet to his altitude if he goes to Central Park circle.

The water level in the reservoir of Central park is 112 feet above the sea, and the top of the hill in Mount Morris park is only 12 feet lower. The summit of Morningside park rises 132 feet above the waters of the bay, and Broadway and One Hundred and Eighteenth street is three feet higher. At Kingsbridge road, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street is 200 feet high, and from there to Washington Bridge road is up hill to the highest point on the island, 250 feet above the sea.

Boy Has an Underground Speedway

GEORGE A. FULLER, JR., ten years old, a grandson of the late George A. Fuller, who was the head of the Fuller Construction Company, builders of skyscrapers, received a unique Christmas present. It is an automobile speedway, 60 feet below the level of the street, for his exclusive use in a specially constructed motor car.

The automobile, which is many sizes smaller than most of those seen in the streets, was built for the boy at the order of his uncle, Harry S. Black, president of the United States Realty Company.

The lad keeps the car in the engine room of the Plaza, which is 48 feet below street level, and he drives it there and in the sub-basement, 60 feet below the level of the street. The machine is propelled by a one-horsepower motor, driven by a 200-ampere storage battery. Its owner has traveled in it at the rate of 12 miles an hour.

In inclement weather his favorite speedway is the basement of the Plaza. Here where the big engines which are needed in the operation of the hotel do their work the boy has a running track seven laps to the mile. It circles the walls of the structure.

In keeping with the lad's taste the body of the automobile is painted black. The running gear is red.

In all its parts the automobile is as perfect as the larger machines. The tires were made by a maker who supplies many for man-sized cars. It is finished in every detail exactly as high-priced automobiles. The battery is charged in the power plant of the Plaza, and one of the blue-coated electricians attached to the hotel is detailed to inspect it regularly and keep it in order.

PUT DYNAMITE UNDER THE HOUSE

ANOTHER OUTRAGE ON THE IRON RANGE FAILS BECAUSE FUSE GOES OUT.

Eighteen Persons in the House. None Would Have Escaped if House of the Mine Boss had Blown up as Intended.

Hibbing, Minn., Jan. 27.—The fuse went out before the dynamite that had been placed beneath the house was exploded, and that was what saved the lives of eighteen people residing in Matt Kronic's boarding house, a mile west of here Thursday night.

Four large sticks of the explosive wrapped in a piece of underwear had been placed directly under the house and the fuse was lighted, but went out when only about three inches of it remained.

There was enough dynamite to reduce the boarding house to kindling wood and nobody in reason could have been expected to escape alive.

The news of this latest dynamite outrage on the range became public today when Nick Brickerch was arrested. Suspicion rested on him because the piece of underwear is similar to some of his. The prisoner was formerly employed by Kronic, who is a mine boss as well as a boarding house keeper.

Kronic says that Friday morning he found the banking about the house torn up and a space under the house large enough for a man to get through. Upon investigation he found a fuse partly burned leading to a bag in which there were four sticks of dynamite and beside it were unburned matches.

Kronic suspects Brickerch. For some time prior to last October Brickerch had been employed under Kronic, but had been discharged. Since then Kronic says he has been having trouble with him.

A few days prior to the outrage Brickerch had a suit of underwear identical with that wrapped about the dynamite washed at the Kronic house, according to Kronic.

Practically all the homes of superintendents and mining captains are now to be guarded. The detectives say there was a general conspiracy among the anarchists and is one of far-reaching proportions.

GUILTY OF CONTEMPT.

Sherman Smith, Prominent Minneapolis Politician Found Guilty.

St. Paul, Jan. 25.—Sherman S. Smith of Minneapolis was found guilty of contempt of court by Judge Page Morris in the United States district court, and he was sentenced to serve ninety days in the Ramsey county jail. A stay of execution for thirty days was granted to permit Mr. Smith's attorney to take steps to have the judgment reviewed by the United States supreme court.

Mr. Smith has been a prominent Republican politician. He has served in the legislature and during the late session he was the speaker's clerk. Since this charge was brought against him he was elected vice president of a Minneapolis ward club.

The contempt charge grows out of the case against alleged officers of the Wisconsin Grain and Stock company, who were charged with using the mails to defraud.

RUN SALOON FOR CHARITY.

West Virginia Mining Town Will Have Novel Liquor Store.

Huntington, W. Va., Jan. 25.—Holden, a mining town near here, will after Feb. 1 have a saloon, the profits of which will be devoted to charity. Representatives of the United States Coal and Oil company, operating at Holden, were granted a license and protests were made.

Attorneys for the applicants replied that it was not the desire to operate the saloon as a money-making venture but that it is impossible to keep miners where drink cannot be procured.

The attorneys offered to enter into a written agreement to operate the saloon on a strictly business basis and to turn the profits over to such charity as the court may direct.

The proposition was accepted and the license granted.

Instantly Killed.

Minneapolis, Jan. 25. — Alighting from his hose cart after a spectacular run up Nicollet avenue yesterday noon the midday crowds being at their height, Capt. Charles H. Bradley of Engine Company No. 3 swung directly in the path of a steam fire engine drawn by four plunging horses, was hurled to the pavement and the massive wheels of the ponderous vehicle passed squarely over his head, death being instantaneous.

PORTLAND HAS BIG BLAZE

CITY HALL AND PUBLIC BUILDING IN MAINE CITY BURNED.

Seven Hundred Persons at Pythian Jubilee in Peril—Property Loss is $1,000,000.

Portland, Me.—A fire which caused a property damage of $1,000,000 Friday destroyed the city hall and police buildings and endangered the lives of more than 700 persons. Although known as city hall the building was divided between city and county offices, while the police building sheltered the supreme, judicial and municipal courts in addition to the police department. One of the most valuable libraries in the state, the Greenleaf law collection, was completely destroyed, with a loss estimated at $10,000.

That there were no fatalities is remarkable, as there were more than 700 persons attending the Western Maine Knights of Pythias jubilee gathered in the auditorium of the city hall when the flames were discovered. Only a few persons were hurt, Chief Engineer Melville Eldridge being the only one known to be seriously injured, and he was able to direct the fight against the flames throughout, being supported by two assistants.

Baltimore, Md. — Fire Friday took heavy toll of the members of the fire department of this city, three being dead and 16 others more or less seriously injured. The list of the latter includes the name of George Horton, chief of the fire department. He has a badly lacerated scalp and internal injuries. The first hasty examination indicated that his skull was fractured, but a more careful investigation showed this not to be the case. The dead are: Lieut. Frederick Harman, William B. Pugh, Charles Frilman, all firemen.

The financial damage is estimated by Mayor J. Barry Mahool, who was on the scene, at $100,000.

PLOT IN PORTUGAL FOILED.

Conspiracy to Proclaim a Republic is Failure.

Lisbon.—An abortive attempt to overthrow the monarchy and proclaim Portugal a republic was nipped in the bud Wednesday night by the prompt action of the government. The plot was organized by a small group of advanced republicans, the leaders of whom were arrested.

As near as can be ascertained the plan was to assassinate Premier Franco and then depend for success upon street risings, supported by secret, republican and labor organizations, armed with bombs and revolvers.

Leslie M. Shaw Resigns.

New York. — Leslie M. Shaw has resigned the presidency of the Carnegie Trust company, which he assumed early last March on his retirement from the treasury portfolio at Washington.

In explaining his resignation Tuesday Mr. Shaw said that he had "small differences" with Charles C. Dickinson, the organizer and chief owner of the trust company. Of his future plans he would say nothing beyond this statement. "I may shy my castor into the political ring."

Bomb Wrecks Italian Bank.

New York.—An exploding bomb Thursday night wrecked the front of an Italian bank building on Elizabeth street, briefly exposing $40,000 in silver and gold which the bankers, Pasquale A. Pati & Son, had piled in the windows as ocular proof of their ability to pay depositors on demand.

It is supposed robbery was the motive, but that the robbers lost courage and fled.

Rio de Janeiro.—To the booming of guns and the cheers of thousands on the accompanying pleasure craft, the American warships sailed from Rio Janeiro Wednesday afternoon, bound for Punta Arenas.

TO GUARD CROP STATISTICS.

Giving Them Out in Advance Made Criminal Offense.

Washington.—At the close of a day of excitement in the house of representatives an amendment was added to the penal code bill, making it a criminal offense for any officer or employe of the government to give out advance information regarding any crop statistics authorized by law to be prepared.

The necessity for its adoption was conceded by nearly every member who addressed the house, and its safe running of the gauntlet was greeted with applause.

Earlier in the day interest attached to a tilt between Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania and Mr. Randell of Texas, over the latter's amendments prohibiting senators or members from being employed by public service corporations. Believing that Mr. Randell had insinuated that he represented such corporations at this time, Mr. Dalzell grew indignant and declared that he had not been employed in such capacity for 20 years.

The climax of the debate came when Mr. Clark of Missouri announced, amid thunderous Democratic applause, that William J. Bryan would be nominated at the Denver convention, while Mr. Boutell of Illinois aroused the members on his side of the house to a high pitch of enthusiasm by stating that Speaker Cannon would be the Republican nominee at Chicago in June.

EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY.

Severe Shocks Do Much Damage in Calabrian Villages.

Reggio di Calabria.—A strong earthquake shook this province Thursday. No report of loss of life has been received. The shocks were particularly severe at the villages of Bianco, Brancaleone, Bruzzano and Ferruzzano. Terrified, the people rushed from their houses to the open fields or took refuge in the nearby subterranean grottos.

Later in the day another shock was experienced considerably more severe than the first. Many buildings were damaged, a large number of houses being rendered uninhabitable. The municipal building at Bianco Nuevo collapsed.

Notwithstanding the intense cold, the people are camping in the open. The municipal authorities have set up tents in the fields, which to some extent will alleviate the sufferings.

POISONS HER LITTLE SON.

Woman in Burlington, Wis., Then Attempts Her Own Life.

Burlington, Wis.—After administering a huge dose of laudanum to her young son Kenneth, Mrs. George Stetson drank the remainder of the vial in an attempt at suicide Friday. The boy, aged nine, is dead, and the woman probably will not survive.

Since the departure of her husband, who went to Little Rock, Ark., in an attempt to regain his health, Mrs. Stetson has made her home at the residence of her father, Richard Ball. Despondency over her financial condition and the continued illness of her husband is thought to have induced the woman to commit the act.

Afraid to Test Fire Hose.

New York.—Startling testimony to the effect that the hose used by the New York fire department had never been tested for fear it would burst was had Wednesday from Fire Commissioner Lantry, who was a witness in the inquiry concerning defective hose used in fighting the fire in the Parker building, in which three firemen lost their lives. Commissioner Lantry declared that 41 lengths burst at the Parker building fire.

Nevada Police Bill Wins.

Carson, Nev.—The Nevada police bill passed the senate Friday without a dissenting vote and went to the assembly. In the assembly there was a test vote on the union strength. A resolution was introduced by Mr. Vaughan, one of the union men, asking that members of the contesting factions at Goldfield be heard upon the floor of the house. After a lively debate the resolution was lost by a vote of 31 to 7. This majority is even heavier than had been relied upon by the supporters of the measure.

JURY FREES DETSCH

STORY THAT HE THOUGHT FERREE A BURGLAR ACCEPTED.

WIFE'S NAME PROTECTED

Defendant Denied Police Claim That He Was Actuated by Her Misconduct with Man He Killed.

Philadelphia.—After a trial of three days Andrew Jackson Detsch, who was charged with murdering Harry Ferree in a boarding house in this city last November, was acquitted late Friday afternoon.

The jury was out nearly three hours. The announcement of the verdict caused an enthusiastic demonstration in the courtroom. The killing of Ferree was sensational and, owing to the peculiar circumstances, the case created great interest. Detsch claimed he killed Ferree in mistake for a burglar and the jury took this view of the case.

Detsch, who is 23 years of age, lived with his young wife and child in an uptown boarding house. On the night of November 5 policemen heard shots and traced them to the house. They forced an entrance and on the third floor hallway, in front of the door of the Detsch apartments, they found Ferree dead with three bullets in the body. He was in his stocking feet.

Ferree was about 50 years of age and had occupied a room on the second floor. Detsch told the policemen that he heard some one trying to get in the room and, thinking it was a burglar, shot four times through the door.

The police were inclined to accept this explanation, but in searching the effects of Ferree they found many letters that had passed between Ferree and Mrs. Detsch and a number of suggestive photographs. The police then charged Detsch with having deliberately killed Ferree. They contended that Detsch learned of alleged misconduct between his wife and Ferree, that Detsch caused his wife to lure Ferree to her room, and that Detsch fired the shots when he heard Ferree place his hand on the door knob.

Detsch maintained during the trial that he did not know that the man outside the door was Ferree and that he thought he was shooting at a burglar.

He flatly denied that at the time he suspected his wife's chastity, and refused the opportunity to plead the "unwritten law," preferring to protect his wife's reputation at the risk of his neck.

USE CLUBS ON JOBLESS.

Police Break Up a Parade in Streets of Chicago.

Chicago. — Several hundred men were clubbed by the police and a number were more or less seriously hurt in the loop district shortly after two p. m. Thursday when 200 uniformed patrolmen and detectives, under personal command of Chief Shippy, charged an "army of the unemployed" in efforts to disperse them.

The "army" was marching toward the city hall to demand work. It was finally disrupted effectually by the police.

Two attacks on the mob were made and thousands of persons were attracted to the scene by the shouts of the men and the bluecoats as they struggled in the streets.

Dr. Ben L. Reitman, self-appointed leader and friend of the "jobless," was arrested and taken to Chief Shippy's office. He was charged with inciting a riot.

During the disorder a number of women were knocked down, They were given immediate attention by the police.

Cashier of Defunct Kansas Bank Commits Suicide.

Great Bend, Kan.—W. Leo Bockemohle, cashier of the suspended Bank of Ellinwood at Ellinwood, Kan., under arrest for making a false statement of the bank's condition in December, shot and killed himself Friday night.

The suicide took place at Bockemohle's home in Ellinwood. He had given bond several days ago to appear in court Saturday. His bondsmen had surrendered him and were leaving the house after notifying him of their decision. As they reached the gate he called out: "Wait a minute." They turned and saw Bockemohle shoot himself in the head with a pistol and fall dead on the porch.

The Bank of Ellinwood was founded 23 years ago by Bockemohle's father, now dead, and until lately was considered a strong institution.

DELAY IN THE THAW TRIAL

WITNESSES FROM EUROPE ARE UNABLE TO REACH LAND.

Jerome Fails to Learn Their Identity—Case May End by Next Saturday.

New York. — The blinding snowstorm which swept New York Friday caused the first serious interruption of the second Thaw trial. It put an embargo on practically all the shipping in the lower bay and prevented the big steamer Adriatic from reaching her dock.

On board the liner are four physicians and a trained nurse from Europe, who, Mr. Littleton declared in court, are important witnesses for the defense and whose testimony he desires to place upon the record before propounding hypothetical questions to the three experts who will swear that when Harry K. Thaw shot and killed Stanford White he was so mentally deficient that he did not know the nature or quality of his act or that the act was wrong. The request for an adjournment until Monday, made upon the opening of court, was granted by Justice Dowling.

Mr. Littleton promised to have the long hypothetical question ready immediately after his few remaining witnesses of fact have testified on Monday, and unless Mr. Jerome's cross-examination of the experts is unexpectedly long, the defense will rest by Monday night. The prosecution will proceed on Tuesday with its rebuttal case and should not occupy more than a day and a half. The surrebuttal by the defense will be brief and the case should end by Friday or Saturday of next week.

The witnesses who are to land from the Adriatic are expected to tell of alleged irrational outbreaks by Thaw in Europe long before Evelyn Nesbit came into his life. The district attorney tried to secure the names of the witnesses from Mr. Littleton Friday, and there was a lively exchange of words for a few minutes, ending with the identity of the newcomers as much of a mystery as ever.

MITCHELL REFUSES MONEY.

President of Miners' Union Declines Gift of $2,700.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Perhaps the most eloquent speech President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers ever made in his life was Tuesday afternoon, when he declined to accept a personal gift of $2,700 tendered him by the miners of Montana and Wyoming as a token of their appreciation of his efforts to make their condition better.

As he spoke, trying to check his emotion, tears came to his eyes.

John Mitchell.

"Give it to Mrs. Mitchell and the children," he said, trembling with emotion. Big, hardy miners shed tears with him.

Thomas Gibson, president of the Montana miners, had come to the platform carrying a draft for $2,300. He said the draft was backed by a smaller amount which would bring the total up to $2,700.

The draft will be sent to Mrs. Mitchell.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs, causing catarrh of the bladder, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles almost always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. An Ursine Checker Player

A Veracious Nature Story

By
Edwin J. Webster

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Mighty few men are good players of both checkers and poker," said Uncle Zack Rogers pensively. "So it seems to me that Elder Allison was harsh in his severe condemnation of his pet bear when he found that once pious animal had mixed up the two games. The bear might have been redeemed from paths of sin if the elder hadn't been so hasty. As it was, the bear, after enduring a few hard buffets from the good elder, fled to a life of careless vice. And he was such a good bear at first.

"Elder Allison had picked up the bear when only a cub in the woods one day. Some hunters had shot its mother, and it was a very hungry and lonely furry baby. The elder took the bear home with him, fed him, and sort of adopted him as a member of the family. When the bear began to grow a little it was evident that all bets on bear intelligence wanted to be coppered if they were made against the elder's pet. He had the rest of his kindred cheated to the post when it came to knowing how to do things, and to do them well. Ordinary bear tricks were so easy for that intelligent animal that he never had to be shown them more than once; but Elder Allison, who was a pillar in the village church, wouldn't teach his pet any ordinary bear tricks. He said they were frivolous and an abomination to the truly good.' And Elder Allison ranked class A in that division.

"The good elder had only one real diversion, and that was playing checkers. Any time he could get up a game of checkers he was a happy man, especially if there was a small bet on the side. Some of the church people were sort of scandalized at the elder's taking these bets; but the good man defended himself against any charge of gambling.

"'What's your definition of gambling?' he asked, anxious like, of the minister, when that worthy man took him to task for betting on his favorite game.

"'Gambling is betting on a game of chance,' answered the minister prompt like.

"'To be sure, to be sure,' said Elder Allison in mighty satisfied tones. 'That was what I thought myself. Well, it isn't any game of chance when the boys around here play with me. The only reason they win at all is that I like to make things a little interesting and keep them at the game. I was sure in my own mind that I wasn't gambling, but I'm mighty glad to have your indorsement, pastor.'

"And Elder Allison marched off with the satisfied air of a man who has got the commendation of the church on an innocent recreation. The pastor seemed puzzled and not wholly satisfied.

"After awhile it got so that all the boys were sort of reluctant about playing checkers with the elder. Even when there wasn't any betting on the game they didn't care to play, for the elder always won. The elder found it sort of lonely without his favorite game. One evening the thought came to him that he could teach his pet bear to play the game. The more he pondered over the scheme the more satisfied he was that it was a success.

"'Checkers isn't a game to be lightly approached by man or beast,' he remarked sort of doubtfully to the bear; 'but you seem to have the intelligence of two ordinary men, my furry pet, and, besides, have had the benefit of association from cubhood with one of the worthiest men in this part of the state. I don't see why, with a little practice, you couldn't become the second best checker player in town. It would be a pleasure for me, a privilege for you, and perhaps, if later on we could get some of the boys to make a few small bets against you, there might be profit in it for the good man who owns you.'

"The bear nodded his head at the end of this little speech, as if he understood every word of it.

"'How much sharper than a serpent's tooth is an ungrateful bear,' the elder used to sigh after the bear had won a victory over him at checkers. 'Probably you cheated when I wasn't looking, or you couldn't have won that game. I guess you had better go without breakfast to-morrow to teach you that the way of the transgressor is hard when he is found out.'

"Anyone who could have cheated the elder in a game of checkers could have stolen a buzz-saw in motion; but as the elder had charge of the rations, the good bear soon learned that such victories were unprofitable.

"Just about the time the elder thought he had his bear well trained at the checker game, and that it was about time for him to try and get a few bets from the rest of the boys against the bear, he was called to the city on important business which would probably keep him away about three months. He couldn't very well take the bear with him, for, even if the railroad company wouldn't object, it would look queer to go trapeeing about the city followed by a big and unusually intelligent looking bear. So the elder hunted up Deacon Stebbins, and confided the bear to his care.

"'That precocious animal is the apple of my eye,' said the elder earnestly, as he turned the bear over to Deacon Stebbins. 'Guard him tenderly, and be especially careful that he doesn't get into any bad habits. Intellectually he can look out for himself, but I'm afraid for his moral nature after my guidance is removed.'

"Followed by a Big and Unusually Intelligent-Looking Bear."

"Deacon Stebbins promised he would be a father to the bear during the elder's absence, so the elder went on his journey rejoicing in the thought that he had left his pet in worthy hands.

"Now Deacon Stebbins, while a good man in many ways, was a sort of a whited sepulchre, too. He was one of the pillars of the church, and generally strong in reform movements, but the deacon had a weakness for the national game of poker. Once or twice a week he used to drop down to Hal Jenkins' tavern and take a hand in a little game in one of the back rooms. The game was kept very much on the quiet, so this never injured the deacon's reputation, although it often dented his bank-roll, he not being the player Hal Jenkins and some of the rest of the boys were.

"At last Hal tried to buy the bear, but of course Deacon Stebbins had no authority to sell the elder's cherished pet. Then Hal wanted to rent the bear at a mighty liberal figure until Elder Allison returned; but Deacon Stebbins wouldn't hear of this. He sort of hinted, too, that he was afraid the pious bear's morals might be corrupted by too much contact with Hal, whose heart was rather set on things of this world. This didn't please Hal overmuch and made him more determined to get the bear.

"So Hal took two or three of the rest of the boys into partnership, and they laid for the good deacon. As a result of having so many house-players against him, it wasn't long before the deacon had lost most of his ready money. Then Hal loaned him some. This went, too. Hal kept this up until he had the deacon pretty well tangled up in debt. Then one day he suggested, casual like, that he needed the money. The deacon didn't have it.

"'Then I'm afraid I'll have to sue for it,' said Hal, in a kind of ugly way.

"Of course this landed right hard on the good deacon. Hal probably couldn't recover a gambling debt, but he could put the deacon's reputation with the truly good back a good many miles. After Hal had the deacon well scared, he sprang his proposition on him.

"'I tell you what I'll do, deacon,' he said in a more kindly tone. 'If you will let me have that bear until Elder Allison returns, I'll call our little account square. When the elder gets back, I will turn the bear over to you, and the elder won't know he has been absent from your foster-leg care.'

"Deacon Stebbins was pretty joyous at getting out of debt on these terms. He turned the bear over to Hal Jenkins, remarking as he did it that the bear's long suit was playing checkers. Hal snorted at this.

"'Checkers!' he said, mighty contemptuous like. 'That's no game for either man or bear of his talents. I'll teach this cherished pet of Elder Allison's how to play a man's game. When the elder returns and finds his bear the best poker player in the county his heart ought to bubble over with gratitude towards Hal Jenkins; but I ain't by any means sure that it will.' And Hal chuckled in a pleased way to himself, there being small love lost between him and the elder.

"Of course, as soon as the bear was a little used to his new home he was wanted to show off his talents in the checker-playing line, being justly proud of them. But Hal just laughed at the good bear. The intelligent animal went around for a few days with a grieved and hurt look on his face. But Hal fed him well and patted him, and, to make up for the loss of checkers, started in to teach the bear poker. Maybe he was a bad bear at heart, and maybe it was just his wonderful intelligence; but it took the bear even less time to learn to play poker than it had to learn checkers, and he seemed to enjoy it a good deal more, too, which makes me think that at the bottom he was a sort of Tenderloin bear and not the truly good creature he appeared at first acquaintance. Anybody who doubted the bear's ability as a poker player had only to sit in a game with him once. He didn't need to sit twice.

"'Such a bear! such a bear!' said Hal Jenkins in an admiring way one evening after the furry gambler had bluffed him out of a big pot. 'No one would think to look at your innocent, bland countenance that you possess the guile you do. If you had only lived in old Mississippi river steamboat times you would have been worth a fortune to the man who owned you.'

"And just as the bear was about developed into the best poker player in town, Elder Allison returned from the city.

"Of course there was nothing for Hal Jenkins to do but to return the bear to Deacon Stebbins, who turned him over to the elder. The elder took his pet home with him, the faithful animal showing signs of unfeigned joy at the return of his old master. That evening the elder thought he would have a game of checkers.

"'Now we'll have a little game,' he remarked complacent like, 'just to see how much you have deteriorated during my absence.'

"The bear trudged over to the place where he knew a pack of cards was kept. In the meantime the elder got out the checker board and set the pieces. The bear shuffled the cards and dealt out poker hands. Each was busy and did not notice what the other was doing until the good elder moved one of his pieces—he always liked to have the first move. Then each looked at the other mightily amazed.

"'You may think we need the cards for counters,' snarled the elder, sort of impatiently; 'but we don't. We'll only play two or three games, and of course I'll take them all.'

"'I see the one check you have bet,' he seemed to be saying to himself, 'but why do you scatter the rest about the board instead of stacking them up like a Christian?'

"The bear never was much of a conversationalist. He took another peep at his cards. Then he gathered up his checker pieces, slid out one by the piece the elder had put forward and stacked up ten others alongside of it. It was plain that he was seeing the elder's supposed bet and raising it ten.

"The elder looked at this strange proceeding in amazement. Then he noticed the five cards the bear was holding and the way the checker-men were stacked up. His look changed to one of holy horror.

"'Wicked, depraved bear!' he thundered. 'Is this the way you put in your time while I was away? Learning games of chance, after my careful efforts to keep you from gambling! It's penitence and a short chain, and hard bumps that will be coming to you until you appreciate that the way of the transgressor is hard, and that it is the duty of every good bear to stick to the game at which his master can win.'

"At this the elder grabbed a big stick and began pounding the bear. At first the bear seemed hurt, mentally as well as physically. He had been mighty proud of his poker playing ability, and now to be pounded for it! But the elder kept on showering hard words and harder blows. At last the poor bear gave a sort of sullen growl and rushed out of the doorway, but even then he turned back in a doubtful way, as if he hated to leave his old master.

"Leave My House Forever!"

"'Leave my house forever,' shouted the elder, who had evidently been to the theater while in the city. 'Never darken my door until you have forgotten all you know about poker and can bring forth fruits worthy of repentance in the checker playing line.'

"The outcast bear looked down the village street. He could see the lights of Hal Jenkins' tavern. There he would not be beaten and abused. There his talents as a poker player would be praised and appreciated. He looked back once more at the house. The elder continued his abuse. The once good bear gave a little bear sigh. Then he shambled off towards the tavern, no longer the pet of a pillar of the church, but a poker playing, gambling bear, the last addition to the ursine Tenderloin."

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Averts a Panic.

Duluth.—James J. Landargan, stage manager at the Lyceum theater, did the right thing at the right time and avoided a possible panic at a critical time in the progress of the show, "The Rollicking Girl." An audience, with the terrible disaster at Boyertown, Pa., fresh in mind, saw a serpent of flame shoot up above the stage but before a panic could be started the fire was extinguished in a rather remarkable manner by Mr. Laudargen.

There is a swinging scene in the play in which girls occupy swings wrapped in imitation moss, illuminated by electric lights. One of the light bulbs burst and instantly the moss was in flames.

In the moment of suspense, big James Laudargan walked calmly upon the stage, and as if it were what he was accustomed to do every day seized the burning rope, climbed it hand over hand until he reached the fire and extinguished it with his bare hands.

He descended and walked off the stage as calmly as he had entered it, although his hands had suffered in extinguishing the fire.

This Deer Needs a Lid.

McKinley.—The people of McKinley believe this town has the most wonderful deer in existence. The animal is the property of Joseph Ahlin, village alderman, and could easily be made an issue in the nature-faking discussion. This animal is one of two deserted doe fawns that were picked up in the woods near here early in the spring.

In its earliest infancy the animal displayed a pugnacious disposition, and later through the connivance of local persons acquired a taste for lager beer. Now the deer visits certain saloons daily, has knocked down and badly injured a boy that teased it, has whipped a terrier dog belonging to the mayor, Dr. J. C. Farmer, has made trips of a week into the woods and then returned safely to town, and in addition has won the hearts of the people, who vow vengeance on the hunter who shoots her.

Narrow Escape.

St. Paul.—Five little children had a narrow escape from burning to death when the home of Elmar Dazalle, So. St. Paul, was completely destroyed by fire, the result of a gasoline explosion. The house was burned to the ground and only a few pieces of furniture were saved.

The little children were playing in an adjoining room when the stove exploded. It is thought, from a leak. Mrs. Dazalle, who was getting supper, made a rush for her little ones, and by the time she had taken two of them outside of the house the flames had spread into the room where the others were. Grabbing them the best she could the frantic mother dragged the small children out of the burning house just as the flames took possession of the room. The family was taken care of by the neighbors.

Income From Mines.

St. Paul.—State Treasurer C. C. Dinehart received about $12,000 in checks for royalties on ore taken from mines owned by the state and other sources made the total about $37,000. The Consumers' Oil company of Cleveland contributed $8,560.87 in royalties and the Albert Iron company $3,831.64. These amounts cover the royalties on ore taken out during the last quarter of 1907.

The grain inspection department turned in $16,650.35, and the hay inspection department $309.75.

A check for $7,475 was received from the federal government for aid for the soldiers' home.

Those Dams.

Washington.—So much interest has been awakened in the various propositions advanced for modifying the project relating to the dams in the Mississippi river between St. Paul and Minneapolis and the utilization, if possible, of the surplus water for power purposes that efforts have been made by Representative Stevens and Nye to obtain from the engineer officers of the war department expressions as to the existing status of the improvement, and what would be necessary in the way of legislation to accomplish the objects desired.

Shows Falling Off.

Northfield.—The thirteenth annual convention of the Minnesota state dairymen opened here with about 150 members of the association present. The programs are being held in the Ware auditorium and the dairy hall is in the Holland block on Division street. President L. A. Sweat of Fairmont presided at the meeting. Rev. W. R. Keesey of the local Methodist church made the invocation and Mayor Ferguson made the address of welcome, which was responded to by Secretary Morley in the absence of S. B. Schilling of Chicago, who was called West by the death of his mother.

Secretary Morley in his annual report showed that there was a falling off in the amount of dairy produce in the older dairy sections of the state, and also noted gains in the newer dairy districts.

Money to Europe.

Biwabik.—The books of the postmaster of Biwabik show that more than $80,000 went through this office to different portions of Europe during 1907. About $50,000 went through the Aurora postoffice and $15,000 through the McKinley postoffice.

No figures are obtainable as to the amount sent by the banks, but this $145,000 represents money sent home by foreigners working in the mines.

High officials of mining companies estimate that more than a million dollars repose in old socks on the range, and that the amount may be larger since the recent financial flurry.

Million Dollar Day.

Minneapolis.—It was a million-dollar day the 21st at the Chamber of Commerce, a record-breaker for this date. Never before, except in the fall, has there been such a business. Grain of a value of $1,070,076 was handled in the cash market.

The railroads entering Minneapolis brought 2,097 cars into the yards over Sunday, making a record movement for the time of year. More grain has often been received in a day, but never so late in January, when the crop rush, ordinarily, has long since subsided.

East Grand Forks.—Mrs. Carrie Barney wishes she had not become flurried by the financial panic. It cost her just $700 to find out that banks are the safest places for money after all. When her building and furniture were burned, the money which she had withdrawn from the banks and secreted in a mattress, was lost.

Sad Memories.

The commuter handed the brakeman a five-cent cigar.

"Say, George," he said, "why does the engine always let off such a heart-rending howl just as we pass Long Oak?"

George shook his head sadly.

"Ah," said he, "it was here that the engineer, poor fellow, first met his wife."

Had Done His Best.

Uncle Hosea did not feel able to contribute more than 75 cents to the missionary cause, and was not particularly enthusiastic about giving even that.

"You ought to give as the Lord has prospered you," said Deacon Ironside.

"I don't think the Lord'll ever accuse me of bein' ungrateful," answered Uncle Hosea. "Six of my boys is preachers."

Neatly Put.

Homer Folks, the secretary of the State Charity Aid society of New York, referred in a recent address to the awkwardness that charity workers feel in making public appeals for funds.

"And few charity workers," Mr. Folks added, "can carry off that awkwardness with the neatness of the colored preacher who reminded his congregation that:

"'Brudren, Ah kain't preach hyah an' board in heb'n.'"

What Hubby Missed.

"I was telephoning the other night," said the girl, "and a voice crossed mine, a whispering voice. I couldn't help wondering what the game was.

"'What are you whispering for?' I asked.

"'Hush,' she said, still in the whisper. 'I'm trying to talk under my breath. I don't want my husband to hear. Please get off the wire. Won't you?'

"I got off the wire, but I couldn't sleep very well that night for wondering what it was she didn't want her husband to hear."

CUBS' FOOD
They Thrive on Grape-Nuts.
Healthy babies don't cry and the well-nourished baby that is fed on Grape-Nuts is never a crying baby. Many babies who cannot take any other food relish the perfect food, Grape-Nuts, and get well.
"My little baby was given up by three doctors who said that the condensed milk on which I fed her had ruined the child's stomach. One of the doctors told me that the only thing to do would be to try Grape-Nuts, so I got some and prepared it as follows: I soaked 1½ tablespoonfuls in one pint of cold water for half an hour, then I strained off the liquid and mixed 12 teaspoonfuls of this strained Grape-Nuts juice with six teaspoonfuls of rich milk, put in a pinch of salt and a little sugar, warmed it and gave it to baby every two hours.
"In this simple, easy way I saved baby's life and have built her up to a strong healthy child, rosy and laughing. The food must certainly be perfect to have such a wonderful effect as this. I can truthfully say I think it is the best food in the world to raise delicate babies on, and is also a delicious healthful food for grown-ups as we have discovered in our family."
Grape-Nuts is equally valuable to the strong, healthy man or woman. It stands for the true theory of health. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Attorney General Young has became an active candidate for the republican nomination for governor. He is the first candidate to publicly come into the field and will undoubtly receive strong backing by the rank and file of the party, and be bitterly opposed by the railroad interests, as they have learned, since he has been Attorney General of this state, that he was a man they could not hire, coax, or drive.

While our neighbor, Polk county, has several candidates in the field for sheriff, there is very little mention made of this important office in Red Lake county, but there is strong sentiment in favor of a change of the sheriff. While there has been no public announcements made up to date, and we have no authority from any of them to mention their names, we have heard that J. W. [illegible] of Thief River Falls and Charles Fillman of St Hilaire were being urged by their friends to become candidates for this office. It is [illegible] early in the season yet, but we thought we would just mention the fact that there was people living in the county that could fill this office, with credit to themselves and in the interests of the tax payers, for fear of another attempt being made by a few unprincipled politicians, and "special" deputy sheriffs to again "foist" IT onto an unsuspecting public, as OUR candidate for sheriff.

A Ghost Under the Sea.

The story is told of a diver who saw two ghosts "full fathom five" under the surface. He had gone down to the wreck of a large steamer and was crossing the main saloon when two gray shapes of enormous size came shambling toward him. He did not wait to make notes for the Psychical society, but gave the danger signal and was at once pulled up. Told in the cheerful light of day, it seemed rather a lame story, and another diver went down to see what he could make of it. Toward him also came the shambling gray shapes. He stood irresolute for a moment and then, going boldly forward, struck his hatchet through—a mirror! The ghosts were only a dim reflection of his own legs, much enlarged, of course, as everything is that a diver sees through the great frontal eye of his helmet

Hooded Snakes.

The hoods of snakes were unquestionably intended by nature to act as weapons of intimidation, for when suddenly opened, as they are during the excitement of a contest, these give their owners an apparent and formidable enlargement But the hoods which have been so useful at some period to snake history have now become so enlarged as to tend toward the extinction of their owners just as the overdevelopment in the tusks of prehistoric animals led straight to their destruction. During a fight the hooded snake in the act of striking his foe suffers from the outstretched and weighty hood—he overbalances himself and topples forward His assailant, the mongoose and some birds specially, seizes him when prostrate and, ripping up the back of the neck, speedily dispatches him.

Badly Joined.

Mr. Russell in his "Collections and Recollections" tells this story of an inappropriate quotation: The leading citizen of a seaside town erected some iron benches on the sea front and, with a view to combine the commemoration of his own beneficence with the giving a profitable turn to the thoughts of the public, inscribed on the backs: "These seats were presented to the town of Shingleton by Joseph Buggins, Esq., J. P. for this borough—The sea is his, and he made it.'"

The Hard Part.

"How is your son getting on in his new position?"

"First rate!" answered Farmer Dobbs. "He knows more about the business now than his employer does. All he has to do now is to convince his employer!"—London Express.

Church and Clergy.

The ancient parish church of Norton Cuckney, in Nottinghamshire, England, has been restored through the generosity of the Duke of Portland.

Each Episcopal communicant during the past year gave $20.32 to mission work, an amount larger by $5 than any other religious body in this country, the Presbyterians following with a contribution of $15.70.

Probably the oldest minister of the gospel in the world is the Rev. John Shaeffer, who recently celebrated the one hundred and second anniversary of his birth at North Benton, O. For sixty years Mr. Shaeffer has preached each Sunday.

A new landmark at Providence, R. I., will be the burnished copper dome that is to surmount the new Christian Science church in that city, the building, which is as near fireproof as any can be, having been placed in a commanding position on a hill.

The Mouth.

A large, shapely mouth signifies breadth of mind and toleration of others' peculiarities.

Thin lips denote covetousness, greed, selfishness and, unless strongly contradicted by some other feature, intense love of power

A mouth to be perfect should be large and shapely, the corners straight or very slightly inclined to droop; lips neither thick nor thin and firmly but easily closed.

The more curved and flexible the lips the more yielding the nature; the more straight and firm the lips the more severe the nature. Lips that look as if they had been pressed into a straight line show self repression, nervousness and obstinacy.

Entered at Second-class matter August 30 [illegible], at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Attorney General Young has become an active candidate for the republican nomination for governor. He is the first candidate to publicly come into the field and will undoubtly receive strong backing by the rank and file of the party, and be bitterly opposed by the railroad interests, as they have learned, since he has been Attorney General of this state, that he was a man they could not hire, coax, or drive

---

While our neighbor, Polk county, has several candidates in the field for sheriff, there is very little mention made of this important office in Red Lake county, but there is strong sentiment in favor of a change of the sheriff. While there has been [illegible] announcements made [illegible] no [illegible] of them [illegible] have heard [illegible] Thief River Falls [illegible] that there [illegible] people [illegible] county that could fill [illegible] with credit to themselves [illegible] interests of the [illegible] another [illegible] a few [illegible] and [illegible] to again [illegible] unsuspecting [illegible] candidate for [illegible]

A Ghost Under the Sea.

The story is told of a diver who saw two ghosts "full fathom five" under the surface. He had gone down to the wreck of a large steamer and was crossing the main saloon when two gray shapes of enormous size came shambling toward him. He did not wait to make notes for the Psychical society, but gave the danger signal and was at once pulled up. Told in the cheerful light of day, it seemed rather a lame story, and another diver went down to see what he could make of it. Toward him also came the shambling gray shapes. He stood irresolute for a moment and then, going boldly forward, struck his hatchet through—a mirror! The ghosts were only a dim reflection of his own legs, much enlarged, of course, as everything is that a diver sees through the great frontal eye of his helmet.

Hooded Snakes.

The hoods of snakes were unquestionably intended by nature to act as weapons of intimidation, for when suddenly opened, as they are during the excitement of a contest, these give their owners an apparent and formidable enlargement. But the hoods which have been so useful at some period in snake history have now become so enlarged as to tend toward the extinction of their owners, just as the overdevelopment in the tusks of prehistoric animals led straight to their destruction. During a fight the hooded snake in the act of striking his foe suffers from the outstretched and weighty hood—he overbalances himself and topples forward. His assailant, the mongoose and some birds specially, seizes him when prostrate and, ripping up the back of the neck, speedily dispatches him.

Badly Joined

Mr. Russell in his "Collections and Recollections" tells this story of an inappropriate quotation: The leading citizen of a seaside town erected some iron benches on the sea front and, with a view to combine the commemoration of his own beneficence with the giving a profitable turn to the thoughts of the public, inscribed on the backs: "These seats were presented to the town of [illegible]dhingleton by Joseph Buggins, Esq., J. P. for this borough—'The sea is his, and he made it.'"

The Hard Part.

"How is your son getting on in his new position?"

"First rate!" answered Farmer Dobbs. "He knows more about the business now than his employer does. All he has to do now is to convince his employer."—London Express.

STOCK FOR SALE.

I have a number of well bred short horn bulls for sale. They are from two months to two years old. I will sell them at reasonable prices. I.J. Thorson S.W. ¼ Sec. 5 Town of Highlanding.

BIDS WANTED.

Bids will be received by the board of Directors of school District No. 52 in Deer Park Township, Red Lake County Minn., up to March 1st 1908 for the construction of a school house 18x28, with ten foot posts. The Board reserve the right to reject any, or all bids. All bids should be filed with Peat Gustafson Clerk at Radny Minn., who will furnish plans and specfications to all bidders. By the board.

The Duke of Norfolk, England's premier duke, is sixty years of age.

William Cross, secretary of state in Oklahoma, signs his name officially "Bill Cross."

Edward Arthur Robinson of London, who inherited in 1903 $2,000,000, spent $10,000 a week for four years, finally reaching bankruptcy.

Baron Frederico de Fillippis, an Italian nobleman, forfeited his title to become an American in New York the other day. He was born in Avellino, Italy, in 1860.

Captain Orin Coffin of Nantucket opened twenty two scallops a minute, and in another test two gallons of eyes in fifty-eight minutes, and thus claims the fastest record.

Professor Thaddeus S. C. Lowe of Pasadena, Cal., who recently celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday, was the inventor of the compressed ice machine [illegible] made the first artificial ice ever produced in this country.

James C. [illegible] clerk of the appropriations committee of the house of representatives, is now serving his thirtieth year in the service of the house, having been first appointed by Representative Atkins of Tennessee in 1877. He is one of the highest salaried employees in the house.

Captain Pillsbury, the new chief of the bureau of navigation, is a recognized authority on the gulf stream, being the author of the standard work of reference on that subject. He devoted much time to the study of the stream while he was connected with the coast survey, and the importance of his observations led to his election to a fellowship in the Royal Geographical society.

Church and Clergy.

The ancient parish church of Norton Cuckney, in Nottinghamshire, England, has been restored through the generosity of the Duke of Portland.

Each Episcopal communicant during the past year gave $20.32 to mission work, an amount larger by $5 than any other religious body in this country, the Presbyterians following with a contribution of $15.70.

Probably the oldest minister of the gospel in the world is the Rev. John Shaeffer, who recently celebrated the one hundred and second anniversary of his birth at North Benton, O. For sixty years Mr. Shaeffer has preached each Sunday.

A new landmark at Providence, R. I., will be the burnished copper dome that is to surmount the new Christian Science church in that city, the building, which is as near fireproof as any can be, having been placed in a commanding position on a hill.

The Mouth.

A large, shapely mouth signifies breadth of mind and toleration of others' peculiarities.

Thin lips denote covetousness, greed, selfishness and, unless strongly contradicted by some other feature, intense love of power.

A mouth to be perfect should be large and shapely, the corners straight or very slightly inclined to droop; lips neither thick nor thin and firmly but easily closed.

The more curved and flexible the lips the more yielding the nature; the more straight and firm the lips the more severe the nature. Lips that look as if they had been pressed into a straight line show self repression, nervousness and obstinacy.

Gown Gossip.

Lovely buttons are made by covering button molds with black velvet and working them in colors.

While flat collars of all sizes and shapes and made of all materials are worn with [illegible] gowns of the season.

The all black and all white gowns offer a striking solution of the dress question, for they give one a chance to dress well without [illegible] wardrobe.

The running of ribbon through lace has become more fashionable than ever, and the handsomest umber gowns are treated with silk and velvet ribbon and with chiffon velvet, used as though it were ribbon.—Brooklyn Eagle.

What Becomes of the Coke?

A teacher was explaining to her class the various ways in which gas is obtained.

"Much of the gas we use is extracted from coal," she said, "and after the gas has been taken out, the coal becomes coke. In some parts of this country gas is obtained by boring deep holes in the ground and such gas is called natural gas."

It is needless to say that the teacher did not answer the question.—Illustrated Magazine.

THE BITER BIT

By ARMIGER BARCLAY

(Copyright.)

"Don't tell me! Dis new car of mine is vorth der lot! Dere's not anoder four cylinder, 20-horsepower in der same street mid it!"

This was only the beginning. Julius Aasvogel, the South African millionaire, kept on in the same strain for a good ten minutes, bragging about his new possession in the assertive way peculiar to his kind. It was impossible to stop him talking. He had got elected to the Mobilo club when those responsible for its management were either asleep or not looking, and we other members had to put up with the unpleasantness.

"What's her Christian name?" asked Haverson with a flicker of the eyelid that was lost on the Rand magnate.

"Der Anonyme, my poy! Der finest car on der market. I've put 20,000 pounds into der concern, and I ought to know!"

"You're going to race, of course," suggested Mills engagingly.

"And vin!" rejoined Aasvogel unctuously.

"Drive her yourself?" I asked.

"Vell, I don't know about dat. But I'm going to sit by der man vot does, and show him how."

"You pay the driver and call the pace, I see," observed Haverson.

"Den I'll Lay Five Hundred on Myself!" Declared Aasvogel, Excitedly.

"And so you think this new car of yours is going to clear the board?"

"I don't tink," scoffed the millionaire. "I know! Der isn't anoder 20 I couldn't beat!"

"Willing to bet about it?" asked Haverson carelessly.

Aasvogel's little eyes narrowed greedily. "If it's made vorth my vile. How much?"

"Depends. Of course I'm not going to race my Leander against any 20-horsepower car on equal terms."

"Your Leander!" gasped Aasvogel. "You don't mean you'd—"

He stopped in astonishment at Haverson's temerity in bracketing his little run-about with the Anonyme.

"I'll race you for a mile over the Blandville track if you'll give something away," returned Haverson.

"Gif someting avay?" wondered Aasvogel.

"Oh, nothing much. So long as it's agreed that we each drive our own car, that I'm allowed to choose the direction we race in, and that you carry a bit of extra weight, I shall be satisfied."

We listened in blank astonishment. It seemed to us that Haverson was offering to add to Aasvogel's accumulated wealth.

"Extra veight?" echoed Aasvogel suspiciously. "How much?"

"Three hundred weight—as a maximum—will do," returned Haverson after a pause. "I'm not sure you won't go a little lighter for it," he added thoughtfully.

"Don't be a silly ass, Haverson!" expostulated the millionaire. "Vot difference is tree hundred weight going to make?"

"I don't say it'll make any, but it must be part of the bargain that I decide what it's to consist of."

Aasvogel began thinking at high pressure. If there was one thing he prided himself on it was his cuteness. "Vild animals barred!" was his crafty reservation.

"Don't worry. It shan't be anything alive, or anything to hurt you."

"Den I'll lay five hundred on myself!" declared Aasvogel excitedly.

"It's a bet!" said Haverson promptly. "Here, Pontlag," he went on, turning to me, "you and Mills have heard the conditions. Just jot them down on paper so that there may be no mistake, and Aasvogel and I will sign them."

Protests were unavailing, though we made many. Haverson was determined on the reckless transaction, and a few minutes later the wager was duly ratified.

A high wind, blowing in fitful gusts, swept down the Blandville motor-track as Haverson drove me in his rather old-fashioned 14-horse-power Leander on to the asphalt.

Aasvogel was already there. He had brought a few choice financial friends, and they were clustered round the highly-varnished Anonyme, engaged in animated and guttural conversation.

But we paid no attention to any of these. Our eyes were fixed on a sheeted wagon that was coming slowly towards us.

"Here's Mills," whispered Haverson. "He's timed his arrival excellently."

A roar of laughter from Aasvogel and his noisy friends greeted us as we pulled up.

"Vell, Haverson, here ve are; ready to start against der vind as you're so particular," cried the owner of the Anonyme cheerily. "Der vind von't stop me!" Then he added with a grin: "Vere's your tree hundred weight penalty?"

"I won't keep you waiting longer than I can help," answered Haverson. "Here's Mills coming with it now."

Aasvogel, following our glance, looked at the wagon with mild surprise as though mentally calculating the weight of its contents. Then, followed by his friends, he went forward to meet it.

Perplexity held them all as they watched Mills and two workmen unload a huge bundle of some shiny fabric incased in netting, several coils of rope and a length of india rubber tubing. There were other things in the wagon—long metal cylinders mainly—but they hadn't time to investigate these.

"Vot's all dis?" inquired Aasvogel in bewilderment.

"You'll see presently," returned Mills as his assistants lifted the mysterious bundle and made one end of it fast to the rear of the Anonyme.

"I say, Mills, vot are you playing at?" objected Aasvogel.

But Mills took no notice and went on with his preparations. Aasvogel grew hot with indignation. He expressed his feelings to his friends in a mixture of explosive German and inarticulate English. When they had all worked themselves up to a state of frantic uncertainty, they moved off in a body to where we stood discussing the details of the race with the officials of the track.

"Perhaps you'll egsplein vot all dis means?" remonstrated the millionaire. "Tying tings on der back of my car ain't part of our contract!"

"It's quite simple," answered Haverson, suppressing a grin. "It's only a balloon."

"A balloon! Vot for?"

Haverson shrugged his shoulders. "Look here," he said rather wearily, "you agreed to carry three hundred weight which should consist of anything I liked to name. You admit that?"

Aasvogel was speechless.

"Well," continued Haverson, "I decided that the weight shall consist of a balloon, that's all." He turned away indifferently.

There followed a hurried conference between Aasvogel and his friends, then the former approached us once more.

"Of course, Haverson," he said, "you can prove dis rotten ting of yours doesn't veigh more dan ve arranged for?"

But here the referee interposed. "It's all right, Mr. Aasvogel," he smiled. "Here are the conditions you both signed. The envelope and the gas together weigh under 200 pounds. Haverson doesn't want to be hard on you; he's let you off the rest!"

"Damn!"

It was all Aasvogel could say. He moved moodily out of the circle of chuckling onlookers, and rejoining his friends stood gaping at the monster as it grew and grew to huge dimensions.

A select few had, of course, all along, been aware of the conditions of the match—in other words "in the know." They, like ourselves, had been careful to keep their knowledge to themselves. But with the appearance of the balloon the secret had leaked out, and then the whole gathering found it impossible to restrain its amusement. Each time the balloon strained and jerked violently at the car men doubled up with laughter. One or two, members of the Mobilo club, who loathed Aasvogel, grew positively ill with merriment.

Aasvogel's face was a picture; his distress comical to witness. Alarm for the safety of his car, fear of losing his money, disgust at having been "sold" were some of the emotions that disfigured it. He danced in impotent rage.

While he was thus engaged, the starter signed to us to bring up our car. In a convulsion of laughter I took my place by Haverson's side, and the Leander drew level with the Anonyme.

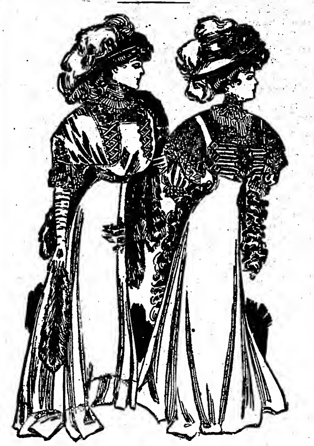
"Now, then, Mr. Aasvogel, are you ready?" he called as seriously as he knew how.

But Aasvogel only clinched his fists and poured out a volley of imprecations. A full minute elapsed. Then, fixing Haverson with the most malign look that his evil face could conjure up, he burst out:

"I pay forfeit!"

Next day a joyful crowd in the hall of the Mobilo club surrounded the notice board on which it was officially recorded that Mr. Julius Aasvogel had resigned his membership—without regrets!

Afternoon Costumes



Blue-gray cloth is used for the costume at the left. The short waisted corsage forms a sort of bib in front, and short, prettily draped japanese sleeves. It is trimmed with filet, embroidered in grey-blue and with crossed straps and olives of liberty of the same shade. The chemisette and undersleeves are of fine white lace. The half-empire skirt is cut on the bias, and has a seam in the middle of the back and front. It hangs in graceful folds, is draped in front by three plaits, held underneath by an elastic, and is finished at the bottom with a shaped flounce ornamented with the olives.

The other costume is of Nile green velvet. The corsage forms a sort of jumper embroidered with soutache of the same shade. In front are applique straps, laced with liberty ribbon. Under this is a blouse of Irish lace with short sleeves, trimmed with filet, which is embroidered in Nile green. The chemisette and undersleeves are of plaited Nile green mousseline de soie, the former with collarette of Irish lace. The long, graceful skirt has a seam in the middle of the front, and is untrimmed. The girdle is of liberty.

Precautions to Be Observed While Steaming the Face

Face steaming is an aid to beauty that may be sadly abused. Done too often it causes the pores to distend and the skin to become flabby. Twice a week is quite enough, and unless the complexion is in a really bad condition once in seven days will be the best interval.

The benefit of this process of cleansing is in opening the pores and inducing perspiration that causes them to eject impurities that would not otherwise be thrown off. The possibility of injury in this treatment consists in failure to close the pores afterward, and shrinking or "toning" the flesh that has become unnaturally soft from excessive heat.

Professionals have a special apparatus for steaming, but the price puts it beyond the average woman's income. An excellent substitute is a chafing dish or any vessel with a large surface that may be put over a lamp, etc., and kept at a boiling point.

If for any reason one does not wish to try this method hot cloths will be a splendid substitute. Of these there should be two made from a thick material, either flannel or Turkish toweling.

Put these wash rags into a basin of water as hot as can be borne on the face and begin the operation of steaming.

Hold one steaming hot cloth over the face with both hands until it cools, when the second should be applied so the warmth may not go out of the skin. It will be necessary to add hot water frequently, so that in the basin will not get cool.

Ten minutes is none too long to apply the cloths.

When steaming over a chafing dish is the method selected for this work the pan of water should be brought to a boil, when it will be ready to use. Then the face should be held down in the steam, throwing over the head a thick towel or other cover that will hold in the moist heat. The face must be turned occasionally, that all parts of it will come in contact with the steam.

At the end of ten minutes the face should be dried and cold cream massaged into the open pores. To do this dip the fingers into the skin food and smear it on the face. Then, using the fingers of both hands, do a rapid massage.

The cheeks require a rotary motion, the forehead stroking, by beginning over the nose and drawing each hand toward the temples, smoothing as one goes. For the chin the fingers should meet just on the tip and be pushed up toward the ears. Special attention should be given to the crease either side of the nose by the nostrils, for it is there that blackheads are most apt to gather.

The flesh, well rubbed with cream, should be given a quick, thorough washing with hot water, to draw out superfluous grease, and the skin must be rapidly treated to tighten it or prevent sagging.

For this nothing is better than to dash cold water over the face. Then any astringent lotion may be wiped on and allowed to remain.

Little Touches That Will Bring Freshness to Much-Worn Gown

Hundreds, yes, thousands, of pretty lingerie dresses are worn during the winter and usually become creased, crumpled and soiled long before they have done their rightful share of duty. Washing the dresses makes them hopeless for their original purposes, but they can be wonderfully brightened with a little care. In the first place a dress will look its worst on the collar, lace cuffs and lower edge of of the hem. Instead of washing the garment, clean these parts by rubbing gently in a basin of gasoline. It may take several washings to clean the dress hem. Hang in the air and dry. Prepare a little cold starch by pouring cold water over a good grade of lump starch, stir and let settle. Dip a sponge in the water and dampen the dress all over. Do not sprinkle the dress or it will iron with white spots all over it and the sponge retains the starch while the water contains just enough starch to give a finish unlike the usual starched laundry work. Roll the dress and fold in a towel until every bit is dampened evenly from the moisture. Iron as much of it as possible on the wrong side, press all lace on the wrong side and after the dress is thoroughly dry place in a suitcase or suitbox and sprinkle the tissue paper with some good perfume. When you again need an evening dress you have one which looks entirely new.

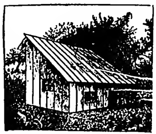
A HOUSE FOR TURKEYS.

Provide This Kind of a Shelter for Your Flock.

Turkeys always do best when allowed to roost in the open air. If well fed the shelter of trees is much better for them than the protection of buildings. When allowed to roost in the trees they are apt to become wild and are frequently stolen, hence a building of some sort is often necessary in which to confine them at night. Turkeys do best when away from other poultry.



An Ideal House for Turkeys.

An open shed which will protect them from the elements and marauders is all that is necessary, says Farm and Home. The front may be made of wire netting or inclosed part of the way up and a ventilator provided at the top, as shown in the cut. This should be left open at all times except in zero weather. The roost should be placed on a level well up from the ground and in the front of the building.

A sliding or rolling door should be provided at the rear and left open during the day. Only enough light is needed for the turkeys to see to get on and off the roosts.

BEST POULTRY HOUSE.

It Is the One Which Gives Best Conditions for Flock.

The best poultry house is the one that will give the best conditions for the care of the poultry during the winter. There are several things that must be considered in any model poultry house. The first of these is light. There needs to be an abundance of light; for it is probably true that good health is not possible in a dark poultry house with just one little window to let in light perhaps from the north side. There needs to be windows on three sides of the house; if possible, on every side except the north. There should be a window in the east and west ends of the building and a big one or several small ones on the south side. As to whether there should be a big one or several small one depends on the conditions to be met with in the poultry house.

Really the best poultry house, declares Farmers' Voice, is the one that is so built and so located that it can be kept dry throughout the entire winter. This matter of dryness is of such importance that it may well be doubted if good success is possible without it. The location of the house on land that is well drained is essential, and if there is not a natural location near the barns one can be made by piling coal ashes or cinders around the house to keep the level above the water line.

The good poultry house will have inside of it all movable fixtures to facilitate the cleaning and to make it possible to sterilize the roosts, nests and other furniture.

THE POULTRY YARD.

Don't let the chickens feed with the hogs. Many a fine bird has been lost in this way.

Sunflower seed and millet are both good for chickens, especially during the moulting period.

The benefit derived from making one's flock better is far greater than the expense incurred.

Sickness among fowls is often caused by the absence of sufficient grit of grinding material.

Chickens seldom get sick without a local cause. Find out what it is and guard against it in the future.

In time of hatching, remember that good food, pure water and freedom from lice will insure fertile eggs.

Fowls intended for breeders should be kept vigorous and healthy at all times. Hardy, healthy progeny is thus assured.

Eggs from each pen of breeding birds should be tested as early as possible, and, if found lacking in fertility, a new male should be secured.

Utilize the Bones.

A contemporary says that old bones burned and pounded furnish the mineral matter that the chicks need. But why burn the bones and thus destroy part of the food value in them? If they are ground or cut and fed the mineral matter will be secured and at the same time the other elements will be utilized, such as the nitrogen contained in the bones. This subjecting them to the test of fire is wasteful of real food value. If we could persuade every farmer to purchase a bone mill we would be doing him a great kindness, for he would be making an investment that would enable him to utilize the bones that are so easily obtained either from his own table or from other sources.

NEXT SEASON'S STOCK.

Select Your Breeding Stock Carefully—Use Only Good Layers.

The pitfall into which many will land will be starting with quantity, rather than quality. Ten dollars invested in a trio of well-bred birds from an honest, reliable breeder will be money well spent. From such stock one can rear a flock of birds that will be a delight to the eye, and of financial value in the market.

In buying birds we must remember that the blood of parent stock will show in the offspring, and that the best bargain we expect to obtain is 100 cents worth of value for every dollar we spend. Remember, that a few really good birds at the beginning will produce a flock of good offspring, but if you start with a flock of mongrels you can expect to breed but mongrels.

Go slow in buying, urges The Farmer. Buy good stock and it will prove cheapest in the end. Don't look for, or expect, more than your money's worth, or you will be disappointed. Pay a fair price, and you can expect to receive a fair value in return. And remember, also, that good, thoroughbred stock will not thrive and prove profitable when accorded the care usually bestowed upon ordinary scrub chickens.

If stock was not purchased, or their purchase arranged for at fall fairs, it will be a good plan to attend, if possible, some of the winter shows, for it is there you will find the best of the season's hatch, and you will be able to select the best of birds for breeding purposes.

Many a poultry breeder is now confronted with the vexing problem—that of picking out the birds he wishes to place in permanent winter quarters and use as breeding stock next season. In every flock will be found a number of small, under-sized pullets, whose size is the result of late hatching, lack of proper care, disease, or some other cause, and which to the eye seem desirable to retain in spite of their small size.

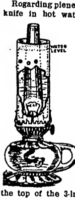
The retention of these birds, as a rule, we have found to be a mistake, and we now keep them no longer than it takes to put them in good condition for the market. We spare none that are poorly sized, for the chances are that they will lay no eggs until well along toward spring, and what they do produce are usually of inferior size. And we have found—as could be expected—that if such stock is kept over and their eggs used for hatching, nothing but inferior chicks are the result.

Good poultry can never be reached by breeding from this sort of birds. Weed them out closely, and over and over again, so as to make room for those that will pay for their keep and can be used as breeders with a better prospect of getting good progeny, therefrom. Like begets like, and the better the breeding stock, the better the chicks will be.

UNCAPPING-KNIFE HEATER.

How You Can Make a Double Lamp Chimney Do the Work.

Regarding plans for heating a honey-knife in hot water, I find a double lamp chimney made of tin answers well and requires very little oil, writes a correspondent in Bee Culture. The inside tube is 10 or 12 inches long, 2¼ in diameter at bottom over the burner, and 1½ at the top. The outside tube is 3 inches in diameter. A thin wooden or cloth ring is required around the top of the 3-inch tube on the inside to prevent dulling the knife on the tin, or the outside tube may be made of wood one-half inch thick, and is safer to handle. A small blaze will keep the water boiling, which should be occasionally renewed. A low medium-burner glass hand lamp is convenient to carry to outyards.



Hen Vs. Incubator.

A poultry raiser says: I do not believe that we can take the domestic hen as the best example of incubation. She has been domesticated for so many years that some varieties have been educated away from the hatching of their own eggs, and under the forced methods in which hens are kept it does not seem to me that the habits of the hen can be followed entirely as our best illustration of the correct methods of incubation. I have brought out larger hatches under certain conditions of artificial incubation than I usually secure with sitting hens.

Milk for Hens.

Sweet skim milk right from the separator is a most excellent feed for laying hens. It, in part, takes the place of meat scraps. Give it every day as much as the hens will drink; rinse out the pan each time before it is refilled. Hens like variety in their feed, and must have it in order to lay eggs in winter.

Salt Brine Deadly.

Such substances as mackerel brine, beef pickle, etc., are even more poisonous than pure salt, and smaller quantities will produce the same symptoms. Food for the chickens may be seasoned with salt, with beneficial results, but the boundary line of danger is close and easily overstepped.

AN ADVERTISING TRICK FOR WESTERN FARMERS.

Real Estate "Agents" Go After Men with Land for Sale and Reap Rich Harvest.

A smooth scheme for separating farmers from their money has been worked with much success in South Dakota. An oily grafter calls on a farmer and makes a bid for his land. The figures are absurdly low at first, but by degrees are raised as high as $60 an acre, and the farmer consents. Then the visitor explains that he is only an agent, but that he can sell the land at the price named if the owner will agree to pay for advertising at the rate of fifty cents an acre. The "agent" promises orally that the advertising money will not be payable until the land is sold, but this stipulation is not contained in a contract that the farmer signs.

In a few days he receives a copy of an ad and not over-courteous demand for money. It is said that twenty-two agriculturists were caught with this bait in Brown County and that one of them gave up $320. Others declare hotly that they will not pay but they will make a fight in the courts.

Commissioner Smith vs. The Standard Oil Co.

From the Railway World, January 3, 1908.

Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, whose zeal in the cause of economic reform has been in no wise abated by the panic which he and his kind did so much to bring on, is out with an answer to President Moffett, of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. The publication of this answer, it is officially given out, was delayed several weeks, "for business reasons," because it was not deemed advisable to further excite the public mind, which was profoundly disturbed by the crisis. Now that the storm clouds have rolled by, however, the Commissioner rushes again into the fray.

Our readers remember that the chief points in the defence of the Standard Oil Company, as presented by President Moffett, were (1) that the date of six cents on oil from Whiting to East St. Louis has been issued to the Standard Oil Company as the lawful rate by employes of the Alton, (2) that the 18-cent rate on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission was a class and not a commodity rate, never being intended to apply to oil, (3) that oil was shipped in large quantities between Whiting and East St. Louis over the Chicago & Eastern Illinois at 6¼ cents per hundred pounds, which has been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission as the lawful rate, and (4) that the 18-cent rate on oil was entirely out of proportion to lawful rates on other commodities between these points of a similar character, and of greater value, such, for example, as linseed oil, the lawful rate on which was eight cents. President Moffett also stated that thousands of tons of freight had been sent by other shippers between these points under substantially the same conditions as governed the shipments of the Standard Oil Company.

This defence of the Standard Oil Company was widely quoted and has undoubtedly exerted a powerful influence upon the public mind. Naturally the Administration, which has staked the success of its campaign against the "trusts" upon the result of its attack upon this company, endeavors to offset this influence, and hence the new deliverance of Commissioner Smith.

We need hardly to point out that his rebuttal argument is extremely weak, although as strong, no doubt, as the circumstances would warrant. He answers the points made by President Moffett substantially as follows: (1) The Standard Oil Company had a traffic department, and should have known that the six-cent rate had not been filed, (2) no answer, (3) the Chicago & Eastern Illinois rate was a secret rate because it read, not from Whiting, but from Dolton, which is described as "a village of about 1,500 population just outside of Chicago. Its only claim to note is that it has been for many years the point of origin for this and similar secret rates." The Commissioner admits in describing this rate that there was a note attached stating that the rate could also be used from Whiting.

The press has quite generally hailed this statement of the Commissioner of Corporations as a conclusive refutation of what is evidently recognized as the strongest rebuttal argument advanced by the Standard.

In fact, it is as weak and inconclusive as the remainder of his argument. The lines of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois do not run into Chicago. They terminate at Dolton, from which point entrance is made over the Belt Line. Whiting, where the oil freight originates, is not on the lines of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, which receives its Whiting freight from the Belt Line at Dolton. The former practice, now discontinued, in filing tariffs was to make them read from a point on the line of the filing road, and it was also general to state on the same sheet, that the tariff would apply to other points, e. g., Whiting. The Chicago & Eastern Illinois followed this practice in filing its rate from Dolton, and making a note on the sheet that is applied to Whiting. This was in 1895 when this method of filing tariffs was in common use.

Now let us see in what way the intending shipper of oil could be misled and deceived by the fact that the Chicago & Eastern Illinois had not filed a rate reading from Whiting. Commissioner Smith contends that "concealment is the only motive for such a circuitous arrangement," i. e., that this method of filing the rate was intended to mislead intending competitors of the Standard Oil Company. Suppose such a prospective oil refiner had applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the rate from Chicago to East St. Louis over the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, he would have been informed that the only rate filed with the commission by this company was 6¼ cents from Dolton, and he would have been further informed, if indeed he did not know this already, that this rate applied throughout Chicago territory. So that whether he wished to locate his plant at Whiting, or anywhere else about Chicago, under an arrangement of long standing, and which applies to all the industrial towns in the neighborhood of Chicago, he could have his freight delivered over the Belt Line to the Chicago & Eastern Illinois at Dolton and transported to East St. Louis at a rate of 6¼ cents. Where then is the concealment which the Commissioner of Corporations makes so much of? Any rate—from Dolton on the Eastern Illinois or Chappell on the Alton, or Harvey on the Illinois Central, or Blue Island on the Rock Island, applies throughout Chicago territory to shipments from any other point in the district. So far from the Eastern Illinois filing its rate from Dolton in order to deceive the shipper, it is the Commissioner of Corporations who either betrays his gross ignorance of transportation customs in Chicago territory or relies on the public ignorance of these customs to deceive the public too apt to accept unquestioningly every statement made by a Government official as necessarily true, although, as in the present instance, a careful examination shows these statements to be false.

The final point made by President Moffett that other commodities of a character similar to oil were carried at much lower rates than 18 cents, the Commissioner of Corporations discusses only with the remark that "the 'reasonableness' of this rate is not in question. The question is whether this rate constituted a discrimination as against other shippers of oil," and he also makes much of the failure of President Moffett to produce before the grand jury evidence of the alleged illegal acts of which the Standard Oil official said that other large shippers in the territory had been guilty. Considering the fact that these shippers included the packers and elevator men of Chicago the action of the grand jury in calling upon President Moffett to furnish evidence of their wrong-doing may be interpreted as a demand for an elaboration of the obvious; but the fact that a rate-book containing these freight rates for other shippers was offered in evidence during the trial and ruled out by Judge Landis, was kept out of sight. President Moffett would not, of course, accept the invitation of the grand jury although he might have been pardoned if he had referred them to various official investigations by the Interstate Commerce Commission and other departments of the Government.

We come back, therefore, to the conclusion of the whole matter, which is that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana was fined an amount equal to seven or eight times the value of its entire property, because its traffic department did not verify the statement of the Alton rate clerk, that the six-cent commodity rate on oil had been properly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is no evidence, and none was introduced at the trial, that any shipper of oil from Chicago territory had been interfered with by the 18-cent rate nor that the failure of the Alton to file its six-cent rate had resulted in any discrimination against any independent shipper,—we must take this on the word of the Commissioner of Corporations and of Judge Landis. Neither is it denied even by Mr. Smith that the "independent" shipper of oil, whom he pictures as being driven out of business by this discrimination of the Alton, could have shipped all the oil he desired to ship from Whiting via Dolton over the lines of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois to East St. Louis. In short, President Moffett's defence is still good, and we predict will be so declared by the higher court.

The Standard Oil Company has been charged with all manner of crimes and misdemeanors. Beginning with the famous Rice of Marietta, passing down to that apostle of popular liberties, Henry Demarest Lloyd, with his Wealth Against the Commonwealth, descending by easy stages to Miss Tarbell's offensive personalities, we finally reach the nether depths of unfair and baseless misrepresentation in the report of the Commissioner of Corporations. The Standard has been charged with every form of commercial piracy and with most of the crimes on the corporation calendar. After long years of strenuous attack, under the leadership of the President of the United States, the corporation is at last dragged to the bar of justice to answer for its misdoings. The whole strength of the Government is directed against it, and at last, we are told, the Standard Oil Company is to pay the penalty of its crimes, and it is finally convicted of having failed to verify the statement of a rate clerk and is forthwith fined a prodigious sum, measured by the car. Under the old criminal law, the theft of property worth more than a shilling was punishable by death. Under the interpretation of the Interstate Commerce law by Theodore Roosevelt and Judge Kenesaw Landis, a technical error of a traffic official is made the excuse for the confiscation of a vast amount of property.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Foreign Missions Useful But Inadequate

Rome, Italy.—Here in the center of the world's religious interest, homeward bound, I look back over nearly a year's investigation of Christian missions in the orient for a final review and summary. What is the conclusion of the whole matter? Are foreign missions worth while?

The answer must be in the affirmative. Considered only from the standpoint of humanitarian and philanthropic service, the entire missionary enterprise justifies its existence. Add to these great works of healing, education and care for the orphaned and the needy, the beneficial influence which has been exerted upon the characters of thousands of native converts, as well as the more general, though none the less unmistakable influence wielded in behalf of civilization, and it will be seen that the missionary agencies which the churches of Christendom maintain at an annual expenditure of many millions of dollars is one of the tremendous twentieth century forces making for the world's progress.

Without amplifying this point, which has surely been made plain in the preceding articles, let me suggest some general considerations and criticisms which appear to be important enough to deserve the attention of the general public, as well as of that large constituency especially interested in missions.

Where Churches Should Get Together.

I know of no other undertaking anywhere at all approaching this one in magnitude which is managed in such a helter-skelter, disorganized fashion, or on such an unbusinesslike basis. I do not here allude to the administration of the individual boards, but to the propaganda as a whole. Sentiment, mood and emotion, rather than tested principle and careful judgment, seem to be the foundation of most missionary activity; if a man or a body can display especial efficiency in stirring the feelings of the home constituency he or it can be sure of plenty of funds and a free field to go where it will and do what it pleases in the mission world. There is at present no sufficient method of checking up the work of foreign missions.

This sort of thing, and worse mistakes, are in good part due to the help-yourself fashion in which the denominations work. Only in the more recent fields has there been an apportionment of territory among the churches, although everywhere the need for this is so urgent that the denominations are now recognizing and yielding to it. Plainly, there is no sufficient reason why the mission work of the Protestant churches in heathen lands should not be done as one closely-cooperating body. The avowed aim is the conversion of the people, and not the perpetuation and extension of denominational names, creeds and authority upon the mission field. The present arrangement is expensive, divisive and a hindrance to the end sought. What sense or reason is there, for instance, in establishing northern and southern Presbyterian churches in China, where the very existence of America is a nebulous matter to most of the people and the fact of the civil war is unknown to 999 persons out of every thousand? Left to themselves, the native Christians in the field I have visited would not be long in forming one Christian church.

Businesslike Methods Needed.

Pending the time of actual union, every possible form of cooperation should be adopted. The commercial sagacity of the method which keeps half a dozen expensive theologically-trained "business agents" in the same port city to do the purely secular work for separate boards which could all be done by one unordained business man does not appeal to the wayfarer. Neither does the zeal for planting new work in these outposts (often in competition with native churches) where expenses are highest, difficulties greatest and results fewest, when there are unlimited favorable openings in the untouched interior. Most port cities, be it remarked, need a subtraction rather than an addition of missionaries.

A closer and more vigorous supervision of missions on the part of sensible, courageous men of authority, will result in the weeding out of the occasional unfit missionary and in remedying tactical blunders in the location of stations and in the character of the work.

Two other important services this businesslike supervision would accomplish: It would insure the sending of sane, well-balanced and accurate reports to the homeland, and it would deal vigorously with the criticisms which are so common on the other side of the globe that they constitute a serious barrier to missionary success. Criticisms which are even partly true should be frankly admitted, and the evils remedied; those which are not true should be boldly challenged and silenced.

The position can never be maintained that missionaries are impeccable; and to answer careful, definite criticisms, as some which have appeared in this correspondence have been answered, by the sweeping statement that it is "morally impossible" for a missionary to do wrong, is simply to put missionary defense beyond the pale of consideration by thinking men. In the one particular instance where my criticism had been definitely disputed I had said that a certain northern Methodist missionary had lent his ability and influence to a corporation seeking concessions from the Chinese government. The board secretary and certain denominational papers attacked me virulently for this, declaring that I did not know what I was talking about. Then, to their utter confusion, along came the presiding Methodist Episcopal bishop of China, fully substantiating the charge, but exonerating the missionary from wrong intention and assuming responsibility himself.

Similarly, more effective administration of the missionary propaganda will furnish the traveling public with the easily ascertained facts of the mission fields, and will put forth effort to introduce them to missions in actual operation. It will also grapple with the problem of the moral and spiritual condition of the port cities; for so long as the European portion of these ports remain as they are the work of missions is bound to be seriously hampered.

Missionary Mistakes.

Before leaving this subject I must make a rather sweeping criticism which the board should have dealt with long ago. It is that an astonishing proportion of missionaries display bad manners and bad taste on shipboard. To deny this charge, which, in one form or another, has been made times without number, is to turn one's back on the facts. The conduct of some missionaries aboard ship is one of the most prolific sources of the antimissionary spirit which pervades passenger ships the world over, and practically all of the port cities of the orient. Some of the criticisms made in this connection are simply unanswerable.

What is to be said, for example, in defense of the woman missionary whose place at the table had to be changed three times on the voyage across the Pacific last month? In the first place, her astounding meddlesomeness had brought upon her a rebuke at which she felt offended and changed her seat; later, the passengers with whom she was seated found her so uncomfortable a companion that they complained to the steward and insisted on having either her seat or theirs changed. The answer commonly made to stories like this is that the missionary's godliness no doubt rebuked the sinfulness of the other passengers, which is neither a modest nor a charitable rejoinder. In this case, the story was told me by a prominent American business man, a church member, who himself had been attending a series of missionary meetings in Omaha just before leaving home, and so could hardly be called a hostile critic.

I could write literally columns of incidents concerning the conduct of missionaries on shipboard, whereby they have earned the disfavor of officers and fellow passengers. Summed up, though, they amount to this: Some missionaries seem inclined to flaunt their moral and spiritual superiority in the face of others; they insist on having an identity as missionaries, rather than as quiet, modest, well-bred ladies and gentlemen; they protest, often in unseemly fashion, against the indulgence in tobacco or liquor or cards on the part of other passengers. All this may be comprehended in the word "provincialism." They forget that, as Kipling says:

> "There's a world outside the one you

and that the people of this world have all the personal rights and liberties which are to be accorded to the members of the missionary circle. Sometimes this provincialism goes to the length of stupidity, as when a Pacific liner crossed the meridian on Sunday, and so dropped that day from the calendar, whereupon the missionaries appealed in a body to the captain to drop some other day, and save Sunday, as if the matter were optional with him!

Not all missionaries are guilty of these things; far from it. The ablest missionaries deprecate them seriously, for they realize their far-reaching effects upon the cause they represent. In explanation, if not in extenuation, they point out that missionaries leaving the homeland are still in the spirit of exaltation created by their farewell meetings, by the glorification of their friends and by the role of saint, hero and martyr with which they have been invested. For the time they are in a crusader mood, and they have not yet learned to view all things in proportion. Their feet have not yet found the hard ground of actuality. One of these unwise missionaries can do more harm than a hundred sensible ones can undo.

I must confess, moreover, that I do not see why a Pacific mail captain should forbid missionaries to sing hymns at the piano on the boat deck, except on Sunday, and yet allow other passengers to make the night vocal on the same spot, with the latest "popular" songs, or why the missionaries should not be permitted to hold a prayer meeting in the saloon, while a noisy, drinking coterie is uproariously gambling in the smoking room. I freely criticise much in the conduct of many missionaries aboard ship, but I believe in "a square deal." The man who drinks whisky on shipboard should be given no advantage over the man who drinks water, other things being equal, nor the man who gambles over the man who prays, nor the woman who sings "risque" songs over the one who prefers "Old Hundred." Plain words need to be spoken to the missionaries, and other plain words to the officers of the steamship companies, especially the trans-Pacific lines.

If a person has maintained a reasonable familiarity with missionary reports he goes to the foreign mission field expecting to see evidences of tremendous successes. Has he not been told that Japan, China, India are on the verge of admittance into the Christian church? There is a sudden jolt to this expectancy when he finds the blank wall of heathendom rising up before the missionaries as cold, as strong and, at first sight, as scathless as ever. He learns later of the successes in the line of mining and sapping this wall, which, up to date, have been the principal missionary methods; but his general impression is one of disappointment. He cannot but feel that the triumphs of missions have been overstated. At this point enters the need for better supervision, as I have already intimated.

For example, the observer recalls the statement, printed times without number in American publications, that China has made Sunday a legal holiday. This he finds to be utterly untrue. Where China touches the west the first day of the week has gradually become, in some measure, a holiday. But it is nowhere a Sabbath, except among the few Christians. At another time it was widely reported that a certain city had thrown away its idols, but investigation shows the city as anti-Christian as ever, and the only basis for the tale is the fact that one temple discarded its old idols for new. Here a great revival is reported to have swept over the community; the westerner naturally thinks of this in terms of a Moody and Sankey campaign. Superficially, however, there are no signs of the revival, although closer search reveals an unusual earnestness on the part of the handful of Christians.

How may these missionary exaggerations be accounted for? I have talked with many missionaries upon this point. The expectation of the boards that the workers shall send in favorable reports, the necessity for showing successes to stimulate gifts, the natural human tendency to enlarge upon the favorable side, all have been given as reasons. "The fact is," remarked one missionary, "when a man gets home and begins to make speeches he finds himself saying what the people want to hear, and losing sight of the facts of the field. I know I have caught myself doing this. I have no hardships in my missionary work, yet the people at home were so determined to make me out a martyr that I almost came to believe myself one before I left America."

All the stronger men on the field regret the distorted and misleading statements that are so frequently made by interested enthusiasts concerning missions and missionaries; they are far-sighted enough to know the consequences when these reports come back to the field. I have known more than one missionary to be seriously embarrassed by being presented to the community in which he lives in the light in which he is seen by his admirers at home.

There is another side to the question; dread of this sort of thing has kept more than one worker from sending home reports of well-authenticated successes and endorsements. An American woman at the head of one of the Presbyterian mission schools for girls in China has been asked by the officials of the important province in which she works to take charge of the female education in the province, but never a word of this has she written home to her board. "It will be time enough when I have actually been given the work," says this cautious woman, who knows China; "'there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip.'"

A Reconnaissance, Not a War.

The most serious of all the unintentional misrepresentations made by missionaries is that the whole heathen world is on the verge of becoming Christian. Faith, not facts, is the basis of the common asservation, "The world is being won for Christ." Making due allowance for rhetorical fervor, it still remains true that a seriously erroneous impression is left upon the Christian public's mind by the day's missionary representations.

For a first-hand study of the field reveals that, with an occasional notable exception like Korea, heathendom has scarcely been nudged by the missionaries' work. The great mass of the pagan world is as yet practically untouched by the gospel. If Christians are determined to bear their religion to the whole earth, as is apparently their purpose, they must do things on a vastly larger scale than heretofore. Thus far only a mere beginning has been made. Instead of a war, it is only a reconnaissance in force—a brave, brilliant and successful reconnaissance, it is true, but, nevertheless, only a reconnaissance. The real fighting can hardly be said to have begun.

A Lottery At Best.

And those who marry for love are just as apt to bump up against disappointment as those who marry for money.

USE PRINTERS' INK

BEST METHOD OF COMBATING MAIL-ORDER EVIL.

HOME MERCHANT TO BLAME

Facilities for Attracting Custom Are at His Command in the Columns of His Home Newspaper—Advertise Rightly.

Much has been written about the subtle influence of the big four-pound catalogues sent broadcast over the land by the houses located in the big cities, and which, strange to say, refuse to sell goods to the residents of the cities in which they are located. There is no mysterious element in these bulky paper books. From cover to cover, they are filled with pictures and with prices and descriptions of goods. It is the power of printers' ink that is the only magnet, and this magnet can be used by merchants everywhere. The publishers of these great catalogues do business running well up toward the fifty millions yearly. All their success has been in the ink they use, and the way they use it. Because these concerns receive patronage that should go to the home merchant it is the home merchant's fault. He neglects to do just what the houses which publish the big catalogues do. He may not have the money to get out such a great list, neither the means of carrying great stocks of goods. Yet he possesses all the means necessary to gain the trade that goes to these great concerns. He can buy goods just as low, has less expense, and while the big catalogue goes to a customer only once in a year or two, through the medium of the local newspaper the merchant can go to all the people of the community once a week and at the lowest expense.

As to the matter of prices, the big catalogue is an educator. It tells the people of values. These values are associated with classes of goods. The merchant in the home town can turn this information to his own account. In the catalogues are only pictures. The merchant can show the goods, and can explain the difference between grades. It is evident that if trade is to be held at home it must be upon a business basis. Sentiment cuts a mighty small figure in matters where dollars and cents are concerned. The average farmer would rather buy goods from the home store than from some distant place if he is only sure that he is getting a square deal. It is up to the merchants to let him know that he is getting this square deal. There are towns in the western agricultural sections which a few years ago were getting only half the trade that was to be had in the district. Merchants became convinced that they were weak somewhere. They found that they were not advertising rightly and commenced a campaign which has resulted in driving the catalogue houses out of business as far as these towns are concerned. The newspapers of these towns tell of the enterprise of the merchants. The merchants themselves will tell you that they do not fear the mail-order houses, as they have educated the people to trade at home. The people who were mail-order house patrons will tell you that they know that they can do better by buying at home, that they are convinced that their interests are best protected by the home merchant, and that since they have thrown off the mail-order habit they are saving more money. The mail-order house is a great bugaboo. It is not near the evil than many suppose it is. It is harmful only in accordance with the lack of enterprise on part of the home merchants. Where the merchants are awake, are up-to-date, and advertise rightly, there is no complaint as to the mail-order system.

Each country editor can do his share in educating the merchants as well as the people in business methods, in principles that are helpful to the home town. The live merchant can hold his own. Business is based upon such principles as give the competent merchant a fair show in the competition for trade. No one person has a monopoly of the right to advertise. The way is as open to the small merchant as it is to the big one. The principles involved apply to the small business as well as to the large business. The only magic used by the catalogue houses is that found in advertising and in prices.

D. M. CARR.

Point Too Frequently Overlooked.

If five thousand people reside within a certain town or district, and these people send away to some distant place $100 per day, it represents a loss that would not be offset by a factory located in the neighborhood that would give employment to 40 hands. Here is a point that is too often overlooked by commercial and "booster" clubs. Efforts are made to secure factories for a place, and the fact is overlooked that citizens who form the habit of trading away from home daily send away, perhaps four times the amount that would be paid in wages by the factory.

Keep Money at Home.

By patronizing home industries people prevent money going to other sections of the country. Dollars sent to a distant place for commodities that can be produced, and often are produced at home, is money gone from local circulation, and which is not likely to ever return. It is the keeping of the wealth produced in a locality that makes that locality rich.

PRIZE AND PREMIUM FAKES.

Bait Held Out to Catch the Trade of the Unsophisticated.

Prize and premium offering are methods that are resorted to by some concerns that seek to do business through the mails with people residing in agricultural districts. The wise people will never be caught on this game. All classes and kinds of goods have a real value, and are worth so much in the markets of the world. The farmer who has 1,000 bushels of wheat to sell knows that his goods have a fixed value dependent upon the market prices. It would be foolish for him to offer to the buyer as an inducement a few head of cattle, a barrel of cider or a slab of bacon in order to induce him to buy. Yet these very farmers will bite at a proposition which is identically the same in principle. The manufacturer of soap offers ten dollars' worth of soap and to the buyers give a piece of furniture of the value of ten dollars. Is this a fair business deal? Can the manufacturer afford to do it if his goods are standard? He may say that by selling direct "to the consumer, and cutting out middlemen's profits," he can afford to do so. But this is a lie, a flimsy excuse, and is not in accordance with sound business principles. There must be a profit for the manufacturer or he will fail. He does make a profit. He even makes a larger profit than the average dealer in goods of his kind. In the first place he sells the cheapest kind of article, even though it may look nice and be highly perfumed. In the second place he gives light weight and gets the highest price. The value of the premium given is always misrepresented, exaggerated, and that which is supposed to be worth ten dollars is not worth four dollars, and for the latter amount can be purchased from any respectable dealer. The premium is never free. It must be paid for and it is the one who receives it that generally pays for it. Mrs. Jones would wonder if Grocer Brown would ask that she give half a pound of feathers with every dozen eggs he buys of her. Mrs. Jones has too much common sense to think that she can afford to give away a pound of butter with each dozen eggs. She knows she would be loser. But if she could induce the grocer to pay her 40 cents a dozen for her eggs when the market price is only 20 cents, she she might see how it would be profitable to her to throw in as a premium a pound of over-ripe butter. Still Mrs. Jones will join soap clubs, coffee clubs, and fakes in the premium line of every kind, just because she does not stop to do a little sound thinking.

Local Dealer Sometimes to Blame.

Thousands of dollars go out of Jefferson county each year in connection with the mail order business, to the loss of the local dealers and manufacturers. It does not help very much to appeal on the ground of patriotism to those people who buy of outside dealers, as purchasers go where they think they can find the best bargains. Every one must recognize the fact that the local dealer cannot prosper without local trade, but there are a lot of people who fail to govern themselves accordingly. Orders for goods are sent to Syracuse or New York or Chicago which could have been as cheaply bought in Watertown, but this is frequently the local dealer's fault. The great success of the big mail order houses has been built up almost wholly by advertising. Fortunes are spent in letting the people of the country know what they have to sell. Liberal space in the newspapers and magazines is used to exploit the mail order business in addition to the catalogues issued. These are the avenues through which the houses draw a large part of their business.

Is there not a lesson here for the local dealer? Cannot he hold some of the business which goes to the outside mail order houses by judicious use of the columns of the local newspapers? The Watertown newspapers have a large circulation through the towns and rural districts of northern New York. The Standard believes the local merchants and manufacturers could divert much of this trade to themselves if they took the proper methods. The Standard's interests are wholly with the local dealer and these suggestions are made with the firm conviction that he has a remedy for his loss of trade in local advertising.—Watertown (N. Y.) Standard.

Work That Wins.

He who would succeed in any undertaking must first understand that intelligently directed work is the only kind that wins. He who starts out to accomplish things for his home town cannot blunder along unless he endangers that which he sets out to do. Commercial clubs too often fail in accomplishing good because of a lack of system in the efforts made. There is an old saying: "Too many cooks spoil the broth." This axiom is exemplified frequently by the organization which attempts to carry out great projects without the proper system for doing the same. Work must be rightly pursued or it comes to naught. Each worker should have his particular part to perform, and for this part he should be selected with a view as to his fitness. Concerted effort rightly made always wins.

Would Benefit Mail Order Houses.

A parcels post threatens the continuance of the country store's business by enlarging the opportunity of the mail order houses. Who will spring to the defense of the cracker barrel and box of sawdust—together with the little red schoolhouse, joint palladia of our liberties?—Providence (R. I.) Bulletin.

SPORTING GOSSIP

Alfred Shrubb, the famous English champion at long distance running, is the despair of those who are working to have him in condition. Shrubb resents what we call "form." He says he made all his records and won all his laurels by doing exactly opposite what our trainers say is necessary. He holds both the amateur and professional records from one to 12 miles. "America does a great many things better than we poor bloomin' Britishers," said Shrubb the other day, "but ye wot—ye don't hit it right in distance running. That's why you've got no A No. I's better than the mile, while we've got lots of good 'uns at any distance from the mile to ten. You blokes keep the body too long off the ground when you stride; you take too long a stride. That brings the body down each time with such force that it weakens the ankles, knees and hips more than would be the case with a short, snappy stride that wouldn't carry the body too far from the earth." What is known as "Shrubb's style" has become recognized by all long-distance runners. It is somewhat freaky to the amateur observer, but to students of distance work it is plain that Shrubb's idea is correct. "I cover distance with my short, quick strides while you American runners are up in the hair. That's a bloomin' American joke, ain't it, I say? But it is just what I mean," said Shrubb. It sounds good, but of course Shrubb doesn't know where the laugh is. "Fact is," Shrubb continued, "form is all tommyrot. Form takes the strength out of a bloke. It lasts while your full powers are left, then stroika ma, it's all in my bloomin' haye. Your pace slackens and it's wotto, Bill, yer all in."

Although the make-up of the 1908 circuit of the Cotton States Baseball league remains undecided, the successful organization, which will commence its seventh straight campaign with the next race, has named officers, and, with A. C. Crowder at the head, baseball people in the south believe that a good season of sport awaits fans in the six-club circuit. The new president, who succeeded D. Stacy Compton, resigned, lives in Jackson, Miss., and has been a leading factor in baseball circles in his city for several years. President Crowder is a member of the board of aldermen at the Mississippi capital, and may occupy relatively the same conspicuous position as Mayor Joyner of Atlanta in regard to being a baseball fan, as Crowder is a prospective candidate for mayor with a big following. He is grand exalted ruler of the Mississippi Elks, and his election to the presidency of the Cotton States league was unanimous. He is the fourth president elected by the league, which was originally launched through the efforts of J. S. Tilford, a thirty-third-degree fan, who moved from Frankfort, Ky., to Greenville, Miss., several years ago, and who was first president.

A·C·CROWDER

Few salary cuts will come in the American league this season. The year 1907 was profitable for all teams and the owners are willing to share in the general prosperity of the game. Of the Tigers, Cobb will probably be given a big boost, from $2,200 to $3,000 or more. Crawford, O'Leary, Donovan and one or two others are also said to be in for increases. A number of the clubs will have bonus contracts out. Only one bonus contract has been signed by a New York player, this being Elberfeld. Hal Chase is also signed by the Highlanders, but this contract had a year to run. Jake Stahl's signature was obtained in November. Emulating Detroit's example, Cleveland and Washington may also offer inducements to the pitchers. It will urge on the men to their best efforts. It is reported that Ban Johnson urged the club owners not to offer a bonus to their players, as it created ill feeling on the part of certain men who were not offered an inducement. This was not true with Detroit, however. Cobb was $300 extra for batting over .300 and rightfully deserved it, as all the Tiger players agreed, inasmuch as he contributed greatly toward winning the pennant.

"Sundowners" in Government Service

WASHINGTON.—Have you never heard of a sundowner? That's strange, he is a native of Washington. A creature of the government. The government supports him; of course he works—that is, more or less; generally less, and then after office hours "butts in" to the legitimate territory of another man, who in his time has been a "sundowner" himself, but the positions are reversed now, and he hates a "sundowner" as a tramp hates soap.

Generally speaking, a "sundowner" is a good fellow. He is at least industrious. Does he work? Why, of course he works. He works night and day—that is, when he is not too sleepy to work in daytime, and even then he braces up on bromides and stays awake and does enough work to get himself marked present and keep himself square with the paymaster.

Now, there is Dr. Jones, or Brown, or Smith, or any other name you may choose. Dr. Jones is a "sundowner." He gets up as early in the morning as required, visits his patients and attends to office calls, eats his breakfast and gets to his desk in one of the departments at nine o'clock and sticks there till 4:30 p. m. Five o'clock sees him again in his own private office in the role of a doctor, where he practices his profession till bedtime or he stays up all night if the case requires.

The doctor of medicine is not the only "sundowner" in Washington. The departments are full of "him," or, for that matter, "her," too, for there are "sundown dressmakers," "sundown boarding house keepers," "sundown restaurateurs" and sundown everything else.

Some one has said that if all the professional men and women were removed from office there would be no one to do the clerks' work. This is not very far from true, if we believe that every person we hear called doctor is a real doctor. But the medical fraternity is not the only profession that contributes to the vast army of "sundowners." The colleges are mostly of the sundown variety and offer wonderful opportunity to the government clerks to secure an education in the learned professions as well as most every other line of study.

Story of Admiral Evans' Early Days

REAR ADMIRAL EVANS probably has more relatives in and near Washington than any other officer in the navy, and, therefore, the progress of the fleet under his command is watched here with a peculiar interest.

Many of these relatives have never forgiven him entirely for remaining in the United States navy when his only brother, Sam, his uncles, and practically every other male able to shoulder a gun in the neighborhood of Fairfax, Va., his home town, went with the south. So angry was his mother that when she heard of the death of one of her brothers, caused by a union bullet, she wrote out a resignation for Robley and mailed it to President Lincoln.

In due time he received notice that it had been accepted and he was immediately relieved from duty. Evans had "tasted fire" and Uncle Sam had no more enthusiastic defender. So he hastened to Washington to see what it all meant. Here he was shown the resignation. Recognizing the handwriting, he choked up for a moment and then feelingly told how it happened.

One of his relatives told of the incident the other day and said that when the war was over he returned, a cripple, to his home in Fairfax. Few of the natives deigned to recognize him, but his mother met him with open arms and tears of joy. That evening she decreed that the brothers who had fought on opposite sides should sleep together.

On going to their room Bob took from his trunk a steel apparatus which a surgeon ordered should be worn at night in order to prevent a shortening of the leg. For two hours they swapped experiences, and occasionally sectional feeling came dangerously near to putting harmony on the run. Finally Sam slapped his brother on the back and said:

"Well, Bob, it's time for me to screw up that d—— Yankee leg of yours, and from now on we'll pass up the war."

"That's a go."

And they did.

Rural Mail Carrier May Hug in Public

AN official ruling on the subject of hugging was handed down recently by the postoffice department. It is that hugging per se, even if done without pulling down the blinds, is no cause for dismissal from the government service.

William Belleman, a rural carrier at Weir City, Kan., hugged his sweetheart before taking the precaution to pull down the blinds, and an envious old maid saw the performance.

She was greatly scandalized, and to help things along peddled the story all over the neighborhood. Not satisfied with this, she filed complaint with the postoffice department and demanded that young Belleman be dismissed from the government service.

The rural carrier was represented at the hearing by able counsel in the persons of a couple of Kansas congressmen. They pointed out that if every rural carrier was dismissed because he hugged a girl when she wanted to be hugged the department would have to abolish the rural carrier service entirely.

The department took the same view of it and dismissed the charges against Belleman. However, Belleman was notified to confine his hugging to his own sweetheart and to be certain that she was willing.

Sources of Our Unskilled Labor Supply

ITALY, Austria-Hungary and the Slavic countries of eastern Europe are at the present time the principal sources of the unskilled labor supply of the United States, more than two-thirds of all the immigrants now entering the country coming from these countries. Italy contributes about one-fourth and Austria-Hungary and the Slavic countries of eastern Europe something over two-fifths of our immigrants. This latter group includes the Jews from eastern Europe, who, while not Slavs, economically and industrially represent practically the same classes.

The distribution, employment and manner of living of these immigrants, with special reference to their assimilation into American industrial life, is the subject of a study, by Frank J. Sheridan of the bureau of labor.

About half the unskilled laborers coming from these countries had previously been at work as farmers or farm laborers. After their arrival in the United States, however, they do not seek employment in agriculture, partly because of the difficulties in the way of obtaining it, but mainly because of the higher rates of wages in other industries. In transportation, manufacturing, mining and in building the demand for common labor has been very great.

The Italian immigrant shows a marked preference for railroad construction, tunnel building, grading, ditching, building excavations and work in factory industries where the pay is somewhat higher and the work somewhat heavier—where strong men are required, as in the blast furnaces, iron and steel works, iron ore handling and coal mining. The railroads still obtain their supply of unskilled labor through Italian agents.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

DOWNFALL DUE TO BAD TEMPER

John R. Walsh, who, after a long trial, was found guilty of wrecking the Chicago National bank, of which he was president, owes his downfall to his irascibility. W. H. Moore of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois called upon him one morning several years ago to make arrangements for an exchange of traffic between his road and the Southern Indiana, which was controlled by Walsh and which had no access to Chicago, being thereby compelled to depend upon connecting roads. Walsh was in a more than usually bad temper and irritably asked: "What do you mean by coming down here before ten o'clock in the morning?" Moore left the office in a rage and when Walsh reopened negotiations later Moore replied that he had no facilities for handling Walsh's ears.

"Haul them or I'll build a road to Chicago myself and you will not get a pound of coal from any of the mines along my road," was Walsh's ultimatum. The Moore road bought up all the mines along the Walsh road by way of revenge and refused to ship. Walsh started to build an extension into Chicago, but the cost was so great, Walsh having already loaned $15,000,000 belonging to his chain of banks to his other enterprises, railways, quarries, gas and traction companies, that the banks became embarrassed. The national bank examiner was kept ignorant of the true state of affairs for a time, but the condition finally became known and the bank was closed.

Walsh was born in Ireland in 1837, and came with his parents to the United States when he was ten years old, settling in Chicago. He found employment as a newsboy, proved very energetic and intelligent, and in 1861 established a news business of his own. Later he consolidated this with the American News Company, becoming president of the Western News Company. All of these deals proved profitable and laid the foundation for Walsh's career as a financier.

SULLY BACK IN MARKET

Daniel J. Sully, who engineered several years ago the most gigantic cotton corner ever attempted, and who led the biggest bull market the New York exchange ever saw until he failed for something like $2,000,000, is reported to have entered the market again.

The rise and fall of Daniel J. Sully marks an interesting epoch in Wall street. Absolutely unknown in this great financial district he plunged at once into speculation with the assurance and intrepidity of a veteran, with the avowed purpose of controlling the cotton of the country. In three months he raised the market value of the year's cotton crop more than $130,000,000, sending the price from seven to 17 cents a pound. In that brief time the name of Sully traveled around the world, and he was the most talked of man in finance.

He violated tradition by staying in the bull market for months and making from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 profits. His creed was: "The demand for cotton is constantly increasing. Under the wasteful system of planting that has gone on for years our supply fails, and will for some time to come continue to fail to keep up with the increasing demand. The price, therefore, is bound to rise."

With this belief he continued his speculations. But the turn came. Within 24 hours he saw $2,000,000 of his profits gone and the prices were still sinking, and the word had gone forth that the market would be smashed flat. The clamor of the ring swelled into a continuous shriek as one selling order after another was executed. The closing hour approached. The gong sounded and Sully walked from the pit two millions poorer.

Later came a notice of the suspension of Daniel J. Sully & Co. This was in March, 1904, and "Sully, the Cotton King," was dethroned at last.

DECLARES SENATE A FARCE

William Ernest Mason, former senator from Illinois, declares that the United States senate is a mere farce and always will be until the people insist upon electing the senators themselves. At a recent meeting in Chicago he said:

"You may think you have a representative government, but you have not. One man in the United States senate can block legislation that 70,000,000 people want. There is too much worship of the almighty dollar. We are too much afraid of disturbing business. We should not forget that there is an eagle on the flag as well as on the dollar, and if violators of the law cannot be punished without disturbing business, then I say in the name of God let's disturb business."

"Billy" Mason, as he is known in Chicago, had the reputation of being one of the ablest speakers in the senate.

The former senator has seen more of the different sides of politics than most men, having served as a member of the Illinois general assembly, the state senate, congress and the United States senate. He is an out and out Republican. He was born in New York state 58 years ago, but since 1872 has practiced law in Chicago.

WOULD TAX DOWRIES

American millionaire fathers are going to be forced to pay a 25 per cent ad valorem export duty on all the heiresses they ship to Europe just as soon as Congressman Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois has his way. Mr. Sabath has embodied his ideas in a bill recently introduced in the house.

Mr. Sabath is tired of seeing so much good money going to the coffers of the European nobility. If the scions want to become American citizens well and good. Mr. Sabath's measure will relieve the family of the necessity of paying the duty. His bill provides that a tax of 25 per cent. on all "dowries, gifts, settlements or advances of property made in consideration of or in contemplation of marriage by a citizen of the United States to a person other than a citizen of the United States" shall be paid into the national treasury.

Mr. Sabath is from Chicago and is a Bohemian—not the sort that wears velvet coats and talks literature and art with capital letters, but the real geography kind. He wasn't a nobleman in his own country and it may be that he doesn't like the brand very well. At any rate he certainly is taking steps to hit the hereditary rulers of his fatherland in their weakest spot. Mr. Sabath has long lists of figures which show that the shipment of money across the Atlantic in the steamer trunks belonging to American brides of titled husbands is one of the greatest drains on the wealth of the United States.

Woman Jail Bird Dupes Old New York

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Ada Jean McKey has come to the center of New York's sensational stage. The pricking of her financial bubble by the police brought to full light the story of a dapper, blue-eyed elderly woman, who had swooped down on New York and bunkoed Father Knickerbocker. Ada is a small edition of Cassie Chadwick and Mme. Humbert rolled in one, with a police record as a check worker, forger and swindler in no less than three cities.

During three years' residence in New York Ada Jean McKey has not only been moving in literary, bohemian and financial circles, but she has broken into fashionable society and club life and has been scattering bad checks from the battery to the Bronx.

She has been living at fashionable hotels, dined with society women at the Waldorf, assisted in receiving guests at a reception tendered Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke at the Hotel Manhattan, has numbered senators and congressmen, soldiers and statesmen among her acquaintances, has had bad accounts at leading Broadway and Fifth avenue stores and has been the prime mover and originator of half a dozen corporations and quick-rich schemes.

The photograph of Ada Jean McKey is in the Boston rogues' gallery, and her Bertillon measurements are carefully noted in the Boston police records. She was arrested August 20, 1904, under the name of Mrs. C. M. Palmer in Chicago for obtaining money under false pretenses. She has served a year's sentence in the house of correction at East Cambridge, Mass.

Ada Jean McKey was born 50 years ago in Minneapolis. She was married and had a son. Her criminal record, as far as known at present, began in Washington seven or eight years ago, when she worked a $25 swindle on W. J. Bryan, Speaker Henderson, Congressman Sulzer and even on the late President McKinley. Washington tradesmen mourned her to the tune of $1,000 when she disappeared.

Rival Beauties in Battle of Digits

YOUNG women have been called into service as manicurists at the Ansonia, where there has arisen warfare in which the line of battle forms with the right wing in Fred Mockel's barber shop, in the basement, and reaches to Miss Jeannette Wilson's manicuring establishment on the office floor.

Business associates once, but rivals now, Mockel and Miss Wilson have each set about engaging manicurists of beauty as well as of exceptional artistic excellence in an effort to get the larger share of the trade.

Until a few days ago Miss Wilson, who was in charge of all the manicurists in the building, paid part of the rent of the barber shop, in which her employes plied the file and the orange wood, the chamois and the scissors.

Then she leased an apartment on the office floor and there installed little glass-topped manicuring tables, silver-mounted match boxes, ash receivers, furniture and pictures. A hairdresser was also part of the new establishment.

The barber had no intention of yielding the field without a struggle to keep the trade that came to the basement.

Miss Wilson prided herself upon the fact that the young women who "did the nails" in her establishment were all handsome. In her color scheme she had both blondes and brunettes, an impressive young woman of the feminine grenadier type and slight girls with fluffy hair and baby stares.

But Mockel saw a deficiency in the equipment of his rival and now all of Miss Wilson's young women are discussing the expected advent in the rival establishment of two creatures whose beauty would outshine anything ever seen in the great hotel before.

Miss Wilson still lingers in the barber shop, because her share of the lease does not expire until the last day in the month. But in her new establishment, on the office floor, her young women themselves manicured and Marcel waved to within an inch of their lives, toil over their glass-topped tables and spin yarns.

Wilmerding Finds Wife Wed to Valet

ANOTHER chapter in the wayward and romantic life of Mrs. Jack C. Wilmerding, great-granddaughter of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt and cousin of Gladys Vanderbilt, was added to the sensational episodes which have made her so conspicuous when it became known the other day that the man with whom she contracted a bigamous marriage in 1906 was a valet instead of the "gentleman of independent means" he represented himself to be.

In Mr. Wilmerding's suit for absolute divorce, he charges that Mrs. Wilmerding contracted a bigamous marriage with James Coates, a former valet of a New York clubman.

Mr. Wilmerding's attorneys in London have advised his counsel here that the woman's acquaintance with the valet was made aboard the Cunarder Campania while en route from Liverpool. It is said that she became violently infatuated with the young English servant and that before the trip had ended they had agreed to return to England together. They were married in the registrar's office in London, in 1906, Mrs. Wilmerding describing herself as a widow.

The present abode of Mrs. Wilmerding, or "Mrs. Coates," as she calls herself, is a mystery.

Herald Square Vortex of Human Stream

ENOUGH persons to equal New York city's population pass through Herald square each four days. There is no large permanent population there, and there are other points in the city where in a comparatively short space of time there are more persons, but there is no place where there are more moving individuals throughout the 24 hours of the day.

This Herald square, where during any four days in the week there can be counted about 4,278,000 persons, is the center of a swirl made up of the eddies from the conflicting human streams that flow both ways and across Broadway, Sixth avenue, Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth streets, in the roadways, on the walks, in the cars on the surface and on the elevated structure.

The record kept for one ordinary day shows that 1,069,760 persons composed the human stream that flowed through Herald square. There were 80,000 of them in the Sixth avenue surface cars that went through the square six a minute for the busy hours of the day, about 120,000 were in the Broadway cars that went seven a minute for the greater part of the time, and the elevated trains that averaged one a minute during the busy hours carried about 293,760.

Then the pedestrians made more than all this, as they came in eight different ways, crossed and recrossed, up and down, from side to side, in store and out. These people on foot numbered about 432,000, not all different persons, for hundreds went into and out of the squares several times during the day.

Besides these were those in vehicles other than public cars. In these various vehicles were about 144,000 persons.

PORTUGAL'S KING IS ASSASSINATED

THE CROWN PRINCE IS KILLED BESIDE HIS FATHER AT THE SAME TIME.

The Dual Assassination Is Followed by Killing Three Assailants and Suicide of a Fourth. Three of the Murderers Captured.

Lisbon, Feb. 1.—King Carlos of Portugal and the crown prince, Luise Phillippe, were assassinated to-day, and the city is in a state of uproar.

The king's second son, the infant Manuel, was slightly wounded, but Queen Amalia who strove to save the crown prince's life by throwing herself upon him was unhurt.

A band of men were waiting at the corner of the Praco do Commercio and the Rua do Arsenal suddenly sprang toward the open carriage in which the royal family was driving to the palace, and leveling carbines which they had concealed upon them, fired.

The king and the crown prince upon whom the attack was directed, were each shot three times and they lived only long enough to be carried to the marine hospital where they expired.

Almost at the first shot the king fell back dead, the crown prince half rose then sank back.

Queen Amelia threw herself toward the crown prince to save him but he had already received his death injuries.

The police guard fired upon the assassins and killed three of them.

One was arrested and committed suicide in prison.

The first the guards knew a volley of shots rang out. In the confusion the king and prince were shot down without the slightest chance of saving themselves.

Three of the regicides were captured.

It is said one of the murderers was Spaniard named Cordova.

News of the assassination swept through the city like fire through dry grass and to-night half the populace is panic-stricken not knowing where the next blow may fall.

Queen Amelia will be regent during Prince Manuel's minority.

GENERATOR BLOWS UP.

Man Who is Lighting is Dangerously Burned.

Arlington, S. D., Feb. 1.—Julius Peterson, was terribly burned at Hetland, while in the act of lighting a gasoline generator for the light plant of the hardware store of Louis Crandell, in which he was working. A leak had sprung in the tank, and when a match was lighted the receptacle was blown up, throwing the blazing fluid over him. In his attempt to brush the flames from his face, his hands were burned to a crisp. A man standing by seized a robe and threw it over Peterson, smothering the fire, but not before the victim was dangerously burned.

SIX KILLED BY A CYCLONE

FATAL STORM RAVAGES STRIP OF COUNTRY IN MISSISSIPPI.

Much Damage Done to Property—Snow and Cold Prevail in the Northwest.

Wessoa, Miss.—Six persons were killed outright by a cyclone which laid waste a strip of farming country three-quarters of a mile wide and several miles long just north of here Friday.

Brook Haven, Miss. — A cyclone is reported to have done damage over a territory of considerable extent north of here Friday. Wire communication to the north has been lost completely.

Jackson, Miss. — A message from Hazelhurst, Miss., reports considerable damage to property and some loss of life as a result of a tornado which passed a few miles south of that place Friday afternoon.

Messengers reached Hazelhurst late in the evening from the region swept by the storm in quest of physicians, all those available at that point going to the scene.

Considerable damage is reported at Millsaps, 12 miles southeast of Hazelhurst.

Kansas City, Mo. — Kansas Friday experienced the coldest weather of the winter. Snow and sleet storms prevailed generally, accompanied by a decided fall in temperature.

Omaha, Neb. — The snow storm which began at an early hour Friday morning by night developed into a blizzard, the first of the winter. Advices from various points in eastern Nebraska, western Iowa and eastern South Dakota show that the storm covers a wide territory. Sioux City reports a temperature of 5 above zero and a 30-mile wind from the north. Aside from the hardship it will cause among the poor and the suffering of stock, the snow is welcomed.

FATHER SLAYS CHILDREN.

Parent Fatally Shoots Three—Grudge Against His Wife.

Chicago.—William Meutsch, a carriage maker, 417 Armitage avenue, shot and killed his five-year-old daughter, Gertrude, fatally wounded Jennie, aged four, so that she died Friday, and probably fatally shot William, Jr., aged two, in the shop beneath his home. The crime, coolly executed by the man, according to the police, startled the veteran officers who responded to the call and found the bodies of the dead and dying children in the house. Meutsch calmly told the police he had killed the children so his wife would be placed in the position of a woman whose husband will be hanged. He told Capt. Harding of the Attrill street station Friday that he was a deeply wronged man and that his wife was guilty of offenses warranted to secure him a divorce.

Nine Miners Are Killed.

Charleston, W. Va.—Nine miners met sudden death in the New River colliery, 45 miles from here, near Hawk's Nest, Thursday afternoon in an explosion that partly wrecked the mine. Lansing, Mich.—A proposal for statewide liquor prohibition was rejected Thursday in the constitutional convention by a vote of 55 to 39.

FLEET ENTERS THE STRAIT.

Battleships Anchor for the Night in Possession Bay.

Punta Arenas, Strait of Magellan.—A wireless message was received here Friday evening that the American battleship fleet, which passed Point Dungeness and entered the Strait of Magellan at two o'clock in the afternoon, would anchor for the night in Possession bay and arrive at Punta Arenas at noon Saturday.

Possession bay is some 20 miles westward of Point Dungeness and about five miles from the entrance to the first narrows, and affords good anchorage.

Rear Admiral Evans' fleet now enters upon one of the most difficult parts of its trip to the Pacific, the navigation of the eastern part of the Strait of Magellan.

The first hundred miles of the strait are comparatively uninteresting. The land on either side is low and covered with grass, with scarcely a tree to be seen for the entire distance to Cape Negro. Throughout this stretch the depth of the water rarely exceeds 200 feet, there are many banks and shoals and the tidal streams are rapid, the tide rising from 36 to 44 feet.

Through the first and second narrows the tidal stream runs straight, but at each entrance to these narrows the volume of water, which has been pent up between such narrow walls, naturally seeks to spread itself out and consequently causes a strong set towards the banks of either side of the end towards which the stream is running, and a corresponding indraught at the other end.

LOOT OF OLD ROBBERY FOUND.

Stolen Bricks of Bullion Recovered When Saloon Burns.

Omaha, Neb.—Superintendent Patterson of the Pacific Express company returned to Omaha from Sidney, Neb., Thursday, bringing with him two large bricks of bullion, believed to represent part of the loot of a robbery of the company's office in Sidney, Neb., in March, 1880.

The metal was found buried in the debris of a saloon which burned two weeks ago. The robbery was the boldest of its kind ever pulled off in the west and the bullion, which had been received that day by stage from the Black Hills, was valued at $127,000.

One of the bricks was sold to the Denver mint a year after the robbery. Sheriff McCarthy, who then owned the saloon which burned recently, was believed to be the leader of the robber band, but the express company was unable to secure his indictment. His brother was hanged later by vigilantes. McCarthy has been dead several years.

DIES IN FRAT HOUSE FIRE.

Minneapolis Boy Burned to Death at Cornell University.

Ithaca, N. Y.—From the ruins of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity house at Cornell university, which burned Friday, were taken the charred remains of J. S. Kiehle, a junior in mechanical engineering.

It is supposed that Kiehle was on his way to an upper floor to save "Ted" Seelye of the Cornell Cross Country team, who was known to be an occupant of a room there. Seelye, scantily clothed, escaped to a balcony porch and down a ladder. Kiehle was from Minneapolis.

The loss through the burning of the fraternity house is $25,000.

HUGHES' PLATFORM

NEW YORK GOVERNOR'S VIEWS ON NATIONAL ISSUES.

TRIBUTE TO ROOSEVELT

Asserts His Opposition to Government Ownership of Railways—Favors Strengthening of Anti-Trust Act.

New York. — Gov. Charles E. Hughes, whose nomination for the presidency by the Republican national convention in Chicago next June is being urged by the New York county committee and other Republican county committees in New York state, has made open declaration of his views of national issues and principles.

Until Friday night, when he was welcomed by scores of well-known Republicans at a reception tendered him at the Republican club, Gov. Hughes has maintained silence on all questions affecting the country and the definition of his position on federal issues has consequently been expectantly awaited.

Gov. Hughes' Address.

First acknowledging the high honor paid him by the club, and reviewing briefly the record and policies of the Republican party, Gov. Hughes had this to say of President Roosevelt's administration:

"We are contemplating a new administration at the close of one which to a degree almost unparalleled has impressed the popular imagination and won the confidence of the people. The country is under lasting obligation to President Roosevelt for his vigorous opposition to abuses and for the strong impulse he has given to movements for their correction. Differences of opinion now as always exist with regard to the best means of solving some of the extremely difficult problems that are presented. But those who earnestly desire progress and the establishment of our security on its necessary foundation of fair dealing and recognition of equal rights, appreciate the great service he has rendered and the fundamental importance of the purposes he has had in view. We shall have in the next campaign a notable vantage ground, gained through the general admiration of his strong personality and the popular appreciation of the intensity of his desire to promote the righteous conduct of affairs and the welfare of his fellow men."

Views on Many Topics.

The governor then denounced socialism as un-American, urged the necessity of stringent measures to prevent corrupt practices in elections, and, in relation to special privileges, declared there must be no encroachment on the common right for the purpose of serving the interests of the few at the expense of the many. He said the unlawful acquisition of property should be prevented or punished, but property lawfully acquired must be safeguarded; that the opportunities for labor should be protected and enlarged and the conditions of labor improved.

Of federal and state powers Gov. Hughes said:

"It must be remembered that an evil is not the proper subject of federal cognizance merely because it may exist in many states. All sorts of evils exist in many states which should be corrected by the exercise of local power, and they are not evils of federal concern, although they may be widespread.

"On the other hand it cannot be regarded as a policy of unwise centralization that, wherever there is a serious evil demanding governmental correction which afflicts interstate commerce and hence is beyond the control of the states, the power of congress should unhesitatingly be exercised."

The speaker said he did not believe in governmental ownership of railroads, but that regulation of interstate transportation was essential.

Trusts and Combinations.

Of trusts and combinations, the governor said:

"The Sherman anti-trust act should be clarified and made more explicit. The law may be made stronger and more effective by being made more definite. Sweeping condemnations, of uncertain meaning, do not aid but rather embarrass the prosecution of those who are guilty of pernicious practices. Combinations and practices in unreasonable restraint of trade and which menace the freedom of interstate commerce should be condemned in precise terms. At the same time provision may well be made for joint agreements, under proper circumstances, as to railroad rates, which should be subject to the approval of the interstate commerce commission."

ANOTHER MORSE BANK SHUT

NEW AMSTERDAM NATIONAL IS CLOSED BY COMPTROLLER.

President Kinsman Says Depositors Will Lose Nothing and Stockholders Will Get Dividend.

New York.—The New Amsterdam National bank, capitalized at $1,000,000 and situated at Broadway and Thirty-ninth street, was closed by the order of the comptroller of the currency Wednesday night and National Bank Examiner Charles A. Hanna was placed in charge.

The institution's liabilities are placed at $4,482,016, of which $2,665,272.49 are due depositors. The bank's officers assert that not only will every depositor be paid in full, but the stockholders will receive a substantial dividend.

The New Amsterdam National was formerly one of the chief links in the chain of banks established by Charles W. Morse. President Frank W. Kinsman, Jr., declared, in a statement issued Wednesday night, that "the closing of the National Bank of North America, attracting renewed attention to the interests which had previously dominated both institutions in their past administrations, started fresh reports of an exaggerated and sensational nature which necessitated the liquidation of the bank." The institution occupied quarters in the Metropolitan Opera house, in the heart of the uptown theatrical district and numbered among its clientele many of those prominent on the stage.

About a year ago the New Amsterdam underwent a reorganization because of a falling off in its business and Frank W. Kinsman, Jr., was elected president. Every effort was made to rehabilitate the institution. The recent panic was not without its effect, though the bank weathered the storm and succeeded in reducing its clearing house certificates from $1,705,000 to $300,000.

President D. A. Sullivan of the Mechanics' and Traders' bank announced shortly after midnight Wednesday night that the institution would not open its doors Thursday. This decision was reached at a meeting of the board of directors lasting four hours. In a statement issued after the meeting the directors declared the bank solvent, but the state of the cash resources made it appear inadvisable for the bank to continue business.

New York. — The Oriental bank, on which a run of depositors was started Thursday, did not open for business Friday. A notice was posted on its doors announcing that the institution was closed by order of the state superintendent of banks. The Oriental is a state bank having a capital stock of $750,000.

DISASTROUS CHICAGO FIRE.

Loss of $1,700,000 Caused by Blaze in Loop District.

Chicago.—Fire in the loop district of Chicago Tuesday evening did about $1,700,000 damage and interrupted transportation for hours. The flames broke out in the wall paper house of Alfred Peats & Co., on Wabash avenue between Madison and Monroe streets, and in a short time the entire building was like a furnace. The fire quickly jumped a narrow alley in the rear and attacked the big wholesale millinery establishment of Edson Keith & Co. at 132 Michigan avenue. The four upper floors of the Keith building were gutted and only by hard work were several other large millinery houses saved. Meanwhile on Wabash avenue the conflagration spread south to the building occupied by John A. Colby & Sons, furniture, and that firm and a dozen others sustained heavy losses. The fire lasted all night and was one of the most disastrous in this city since 1874.

Kansas City, Mo.—Fire of unknown origin which started in the canning department on the second floor of one of the twin main buildings of the $27,000,000 packing plant of Nelson Morris & Co. on the Kaw river in Kansas City, Kan., Tuesday night, threatened destruction of the entire plant and caused loss estimated at half a million dollars before it was controlled.

HAD TO GET STRENGTH FIRST.

Hard Worked Woman Not Ready to Face Hired Girl Problem.

A Massachusetts man, whose business frequently takes him over the line into Vermont, says that one evening he was a guest at a farm house in that state when he observed that the wife of the owner—a poor, wan little woman—was doing every bit of the work around the house.

As he himself put it, she did an amount of work that would have put an ordinary Massachusetts horse to shame and he really felt like a villain sitting there watching her.

Feeling considerable compassion for the woman, who looked as if ready to drop from overwork, the visitor asked:

"Why don't you get help here? Surely you are not going to try to pull through the long winter without a hired girl."

A sickly smile came to the pallid face of the woman. "Wael, I dunno," she said. "I don't feel as if I could just yit; but p'raps ef I should get to feelin' a little better and stronger I might."—Illustrated Magazine.

PRESIDENT URGES NEW LEGISLATION IN HOT MESSAGE

BIG CORPORATIONS SCORED BECAUSE OF ATTITUDE TOWARD GOVERNMENT.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY LAW

Chief Executive Declares Act Needs Immediate Revision—Righting of Injunction Abuses Is Urged.

To the Senate and House of Representatives: The recent decision of the supreme court in regard to the employers' liability act, the experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the department of justice in enforcing the interstate commerce and antitrust laws, and the gravely significant attitude toward the law and its administration recently adopted by certain heads of great corporations, render it desirable that there should be additional legislation as regards certain of the relations between labor and capital, and between the great corporations and the public.

The supreme court has decided the employers' liability law to be unconstitutional because its terms apply to employes engaged wholly in intrastate commerce as well as to employes engaged in interstate commerce. By a substantial majority, the court holds that the congress has power to deal with the question in so far as interstate commerce is concerned.

As regards the employers' liability law, I advocate its immediate reenactment, limiting its scope so that it shall apply only to the class of cases as to which the court says it can constitutionally apply, but strengthening its provisions within this scope. Interstate employment being thus covered by an adequate national law, the field of intrastate employment will be left to the action of the several states. With this clear definition of responsibility the states will undoubtedly give to the performance of their duty within their field the consideration the importance of the subject demands.

Compensation for Employes Hurt in Government Service

I also very urgently advise that a comprehensive act be passed providing for compensation by the government to all employes injured in the government service. Under the present law an injured workman in the employment of the government has no remedy, and the entire burden of the accident falls on the helpless man, his wife, and his young children. This is an outrage. It is a matter of humiliation to the nation that there should not be on our statute books a provision to meet and partially to atone for cruel misfortune when it comes upon a man through no fault of his own while faithfully serving the public. In no other prominent industrial country in the world could such gross injustice occur; for almost all civilized nations have enacted legislation embodying the complete recognition of the principle which places the entire trade risk for industrial accidents (excluding, of course, accidents due to willful misconduct by the employe), on the industry as represented by the employer, which in this case is the government. In all these countries the principle applies to the government just as much as to the private employer. Under no circumstances should the injured employe or his surviving dependents be required to bring suit against the government, nor should there be the requirement that in order to insure recovery negligence in some form on the part of the government should be shown. Our proposition is not to confer a right of action upon the government employe, but to secure him suitable provision against injuries received in the course of his employment. The burden of the trade risk should be placed upon the government. Exactly as the workingman is entitled to his wages, so he should be entitled to indemnity for the injuries sustained in the natural course of his labor. The rates of compensation and the regulations for its payment should be specified in the law, and the machinery for determining the amount to be paid should in each case be provided in such manner that the employe is properly represented without expense to him. In other words, the compensation should be paid automatically, while the application of the law in the first instance should be vested in the department of commerce and labor. The law should apply to all laborers, mechanics, and other civilian employes of the government of the United States, including those in the service of the Panama canal commission and of the insular governments.

The same broad principle which should apply to the government should ultimately be made applicable to all private employers. Where the nation has the power it should enact laws to this effect. Where the states alone have the power they should enact the laws. It is to be observed that an employers' liability law does not really mean mulcting employers in damages. It merely throws upon the employer the burden of accident insurance against injuries which are sure to occur. It requires him either to bear or to distribute through insurance the loss which can readily be borne when distributed, but which, if undistributed, bears with frightful hardship upon the unfortunate victim of accident. In theory, if wages were always freely and fairly adjusted, they would always include an allowance as against the risk of injury, just as certainly as the rate of interest for money includes an allowance for insurance against the risk of loss. In theory, if employes were all experienced business men, they would employ that part of their wages which is received because of the risk of injury to secure accident insurance. But as a matter of fact, it is not practical to expect that this will be done by the great body of employes. An employers' liability law makes it certain that it will be done, in effect, by the employer, and it will ultimately impose no real additional burden upon him.

There is a special bill to which I call your attention. Secretary Taft has urgently recommended the immediate passage of a law providing for compensation to employes of the government injured in the work of the Isthmian canal, and that $100,000 be appropriated for this purpose each year. I earnestly hope this will be done; and that a special bill be passed covering the case of Yardmaster Banton, who was injured nearly two years ago while doing his duty. He is now helpless to support his wife and his three little boys.

I again call your attention to the need of some action in connection with the abuse of injunctions in labor cases. As regards the rights and wrongs of labor and capital, from blacklisting to boycotting, the whole subject is covered in admirable fashion by the report of the Anthracite Coal Strike commission, which report should serve as a chart for the guidance of both legislative and executive officers. As regards injunctions, I can do little but repeat what I have said in my last message to the congress. Even though it were possible, I should consider it most unwise to abolish the use of the process of injunction. It is necessary in order that the courts may maintain their own dignity and in order that they may in effective manner check disorder and violence. The judge who uses it cautiously and conservatively, but who, when the need arises, uses it fearlessly, confers the greatest service upon our people, and his preeminent usefulness as a public servant should be heartily recognized. But there is no question in my mind that it has sometimes been used heedlessly and unjustly, and that some of the injunctions issued inflict grave and occasionally irreparable wrong upon those enjoined.

It is all wrong to use the injunction to prevent the entirely proper and legitimate actions of labor organizations in their struggle for industrial betterment, or under the guise of protecting property rights unwarrantably to invade the fundamental rights of the individual. It is futile to concede, as we all do, the right and the necessity of organized effort on the part of wage-earners and yet by injunctive process to forbid peaceable action to accomplish the lawful objects for which they are organized and upon which their success depends. The fact that the punishment for the violation of an injunction must, to make the order effective, necessarily be summary and without the intervention of a jury makes its issuance in doubtful cases a dangerous practice, and in itself furnishes a reason why the process should be surrounded with safeguards to protect individuals against being enjoined from exercising their proper rights. Reasonable notice should be given the adverse party.

This matter is daily becoming of graver importance and I can not too urgently recommend that the congress give careful consideration to the subject. If some way of remedying the abuses is not found the feeling of indignation against them among large numbers of our citizens will tend to grow so extreme as to produce a revolt against the whole use of the process of injunction. The ultra-conservatives who object to cutting out the abuses will do well to remember that if the popular feeling does become strong many of those upon whom they rely to defend them will be the first to turn against them. Men of property can not afford to trust to anything save the spirit of justice and fair play; for those very public men who, while it is to their interest, defend all the abuses committed by capital and pose as the champions of conservatism, will, the moment they think their interest changes, take the lead in just such a matter as this and pander to what they esteem popular feeling by endeavoring, for instance, effectively to destroy the power of the courts in matters of injunction; and will even seek to render nugatory the power to punish for contempt, upon which power the very existence of the orderly administration of justice depends.

It is my purpose as soon as may be to submit some further recommendations in reference to our laws regulating labor conditions within the sphere of federal authority. A very recent decision of the supreme court of the United States rendered since this message was written, in the case of Adair vs. United States, seemingly of far-reaching import and of very serious probable consequences, has modified the previously entertained views on the powers of the congress in the premises to such a degree as to make necessary careful consideration of the opinions therein filed before it is possible definitely to decide in what way to call the matter to your attention.

Asks Federal Supervision of Interstate Carriers

Not only should there be action on certain laws affecting wage-earners; there should also be such action on laws better to secure control over the great business concerns engaged in interstate commerce, and especially over the great common carriers. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be empowered to pass upon any rate or practice on its own initiative. Moreover, it should be provided that whenever the commission has reason to believe that a proposed advance in a rate ought not to be made without investigation, it should have authority to issue an order prohibiting the advance pending examination by the commission.

I would not be understood as expressing an opinion that any or even a majority of these advances are improper. Many of the rates in this country have been abnormally low. The operating expenses of our railroads, notably the wages paid railroad employes, have greatly increased. These and other causes may in any given case justify an advance in rates, and if so the advance should be permitted and approved. But there may be, and doubtless are, cases where this is not true; and our law should be so framed that the government, as the representative of the whole people, can protect the individual against unlawful exaction for the use of these public highways. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be provided with the means to make a physical valuation of any road as to which it deems this valuation necessary. In some form the federal government should exercise supervision over the financial operations of our interstate railroads. In no other way can justice be done between the private owners of those properties and the public which pay their charges. When once an inflated capitalization has gone upon the market and has become fixed in value, its existence must be recognized. As a practical matter it is then often absolutely necessary to take account of the thousands of innocent stockholders who have purchased their stock in good faith. The usual result of such inflation is therefore to impose upon the public an unnecessary but everlasting tax, while the innocent purchasers of the stock are also harmed and only a few speculators are benefited. Such wrongs when once accomplished can with difficulty be undone; but they can be prevented with safety and with justice. When combinations of interstate railways must obtain government sanction; when it is no longer possible for an interstate railway to issue stock or bonds, save in the manner approved by the federal government; when that government makes sure that the proceeds of every stock and bond issue go into the improvement of the property and not the enrichment of some individual or syndicate; when, whenever it becomes material for guidance in the regulative action of the government, the physical value of one of these properties is determined and made known—there will be eliminated from railroad securities that element of uncertainty which lends to them their speculative quality and which has contributed much to the financial stress of the recent past.

Would Permit Pooling of Railroad Interests

In this connection I desire to repeat my recommendation that railways be permitted to form traffic associations for the purpose of conferring about and agreeing upon rates, regulations, and practices affecting interstate business in which the members of the association are mutually interested. This does not mean that they should be given the right to pool their earnings or their traffic. The law requires that rates shall be so adjusted as not to discriminate between individuals, localities, or different species of traffic. Ordinarily, rates by all competing lines must be the same. As applied to practical conditions, the railway operations of this country can not be conducted according to law without what is equivalent to conference and agreement. The articles under which such associations operate should be approved by the commission; all their operations should be open to public inspection; and the rates, regulations, and practices upon which they agree should be subject to disapproval by the commission.

I urge this last provision with the same earnestness that I do the others. This country provides its railway facilities by private capital. Those facilities will not be adequate unless the capital employed is assured of just treatment and an adequate return. In fixing the charges of our railroads, I believe that, considering the interests of the public alone, it is better to allow too liberal rather than too scanty earnings, for, otherwise, there is grave danger that our railway development may not keep pace with the demand for transportation. But the fundamental idea that these railways are public highways must be recognized, and they must be open to the whole public upon equal terms and upon reasonable terms.

In reference to the Sherman anti-trust law, I repeat the recommendations made in my message at the opening of the present congress, as well as in my message to the previous congress. The attempt in this law to provide in sweeping terms against all combinations of whatever character, if technically in restraint of trade as such restraint has been defined by the courts, must necessarily be either futile or mischievous, and sometimes both. The present law makes some combinations illegal, although they may be useful to the country. On the other hand, as to some huge combinations which are both noxious and illegal, even if the action undertaken against them under the law by the government is successful, the result may be to work but a minimum benefit to the public. Even though the combination be broken up and a small measure of reform thereby produced, the real good aimed at can not be obtained, for such real good can come only by a thorough and continuing supervision over the acts of the combination in all its parts, so as to prevent stock watering, improper forms of competition, and, in short, wrongdoing generally. The law should correct that portion of the Sherman Act which prohibits all combinations of the character above described, whether they be reasonable or unreasonable; but this should be done only as part of a general scheme to provide for this effective and thoroughgoing supervision by the national government of all the operations of the big interstate business concerns.

I do not know whether it is possible, but if possible, it is certainly desirable, that in connection with measures to restrain stock watering and overcapitalization there should be measures taken to prevent at least the grosser forms of gambling in securities and commodities, such as making large sales of what men do not possess and "cornering" the market. Legitimate purchases of commodities and of stocks and securities for investment have no connection whatever with purchases of stocks or other securities or commodities on a margin for speculative and gambling purposes. There is no moral difference between gambling at cards or in lotteries or on the race track and gambling in the stock market. One method is just as pernicious to the body politic as the other in kind, and in degree the evil worked is far greater. But it is a far more difficult subject with which to deal. The great bulk of the business transacted on the exchanges is not only legitimate, but is necessary to the working of our modern industrial system, and extreme care would have to be taken not to interfere with this business in doing away with the "bucket shop" type of operation. We should study both the successes and the failures of foreign legislators who, notably in Germany, have worked along this line, so as not to do anything harmful. Moreover, there is a special difficulty in dealing with this matter by the federal government in a federal republic like ours. But if it is possible to devise a way to deal with it the effort should be made, even if only in a cautious and tentative way. It would seem that the federal government could at least act by forbidding the use of the mails, telegraph and telephone wires for mere gambling in stocks and futures, just as it does in lottery transactions.

Santa Fe President Had Guilty Knowledge of Rebating

I inclose herewith a statement issued by the chief of the bureau of corporations (Appendix 1), in answer to certain statements (which I also inclose), made by and on behalf of the agents of the Standard Oil corporation (Appendix 2), and a letter of the attorney-general (Appendix 3), containing an answer to certain statements, also inclosed, made by the president of the Santa Fe Railway Company (Appendix 4). The Standard Oil corporation and the railway company have both been found guilty by the courts of criminal misconduct; both have been sentenced to pay heavy fines; and each has issued and published broadcast these statements, asserting their innocence and denouncing as improper the action of the courts and juries in convicting them of guilt. These statements are very elaborate, are very ingenious, and are untruthful in important particulars. The following letter and inclosure from Mr. Heney sufficiently illustrate the methods of the high officials of the Santa Fe and show the utter falsity of their plea of ignorance, the similar plea of the Standard Oil being equally without foundation:

"Department of Justice, Office of the United States Attorney, District of Oregon.

"Portland, January 11, 1908.

"The President, Washington, D. C.

"Dear Mr. President: I understand that Mr. Ripley, of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway system, has commented with some severity upon your attitude toward the payment of rebates by certain transcontinental railroads and that he has declared that he personally never knew anything about any rebates being granted by his road. . . . . I inclose you herewith copy of a letter from Edward Chambers, general freight traffic manager of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway system, to Mr. G. A. Davidson, auditor of the same company, dated February 27, 1908. . . .

"This letter does not deal with interstate shipments, but the constitution of the state of California makes the payment of rebates by railroads a felony, and Mr. Ripley has apparently not been above the commission of crime to secure business. You are at liberty to use this inclosure in any way that you think it can be of service to yourself or the public. . . .

"Sincerely yours,
"FRANCIS J. HENEY."

"San Francisco, February 27, 1907.

"Dear Sir: I hand you herewith a file of papers covering the movement of fuel oil shipped by the Associated Oil Company over our line from January 1, 1906, up to and including November 15, 1906.

"We agreed with the Associated Oil Co.'s negotiations with Mr. Ripley, Mr. Wells and myself, that in consideration of their making us a special price on oil for company use, which is covered by a contract, and the further consideration that we would take a certain quantity, they would in turn ship from Bakersfield over our line to San Francisco Bay points a certain minimum number of barrels of fuel oil at rate of 25 cents per barrel from Bakersfield, exclusive of the switching charge.

"These statements cover the movement except that they have included Stockton, which is not correct, as it is not a bay point and could not be reached as conveniently by water. We have paid them on account of this movement $7,239 which should be deducted from the total of movement shown in the attached papers.

"I wish you would arrange to make up a statement, check the same, and refund to the Associated Oil Company down to the basis of 25 cents per barrel from Bakersfield where they are the shippers, regardless of who is consignee, as all their fuel oil is sold delivered. The reason for making this deal in addition to what I have stated is that the Associated Oil Company have their own boats and carry oil from fields controlled by themselves along the coast near San Luis Obispo to San Francisco at a much lower cost than the special rate we have made them and in competition with the Union Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company, it was necessary for them to sell at the San Francisco Bay points on the basis of the cost of water transportation from the coast fields. They figured they could only afford to pay us the 25 cents per barrel if by doing this they sold our company a certain amount of fuel oil, otherwise the business covered by the attached papers would have come in by boat from the coast fields.

"I am writing this up completely so that there may be in the papers a history of the reasons why this arrangement was made. I wish you would go ahead and make the adjustment as soon as possible, as the Associated Oil Company are very anxious to have the matter closed up. The arrangement was canceled on November 15th at a conference between Mr. Ripley, Mr. Wells, Mr. Porter, and myself.

"Yours truly,
"EDWARD CHAMBERS."

"Shipments-Associated Oil Company,
"Mr. G. A. Davidson,
"Auditor, Los Angeles."

The attacks by these great corporations on the administration's actions have been given a wide circulation throughout the country, in the newspapers and otherwise, by those writers and speakers who, consciously or unconsciously, act as the representatives of predatory wealth—of the wealth accumulated on a giant scale by all forms of iniquity, ranging from the oppression of wageworkers to unfair and unwholesome methods of crushing out competition, and to defrauding the public by stock jobbing and the manipulation of securities. Certain wealthy men of this stamp, whose conduct should be abhorrent to every man of ordinarily decent conscience, and who commit the hideous wrong of teaching our young men that phenomenal business success must ordinarily be based on dishonesty, have during the last few months made it apparent that they have banded together to work for a reaction. Their endeavor is to overthrow and discredit all who honestly administer the law, to prevent any additional legislation which would check and restrain them, and to secure if possible a freedom from all restraint which will permit every unscrupulous wrongdoer to do what he wishes unchecked provided he has enough money. The only way to counteract the movement in which these men are engaged is to make clear to the public just what they have done in the past and just what they are seeking to accomplish in the present.

The administration and those who support its views are not only not engaged in an assault on property, but are strenuous upholders of the rights of property. Under no circumstances would we countenance attacks upon law-abiding property, or do aught but condemn those who hold up rich men as being evil men because of their riches. On the contrary, our whole effort is to insist upon conduct, and neither wealth nor property nor any other class distinction, as being the proper standard by which to judge the actions of men. For the honest man of great wealth we have a hearty regard, just as we have a hearty regard for the honest politician and honest newspaper. But part of the movement to uphold honesty must be a movement to frown on dishonesty. We attack only the corrupt men of wealth, who find in the purchased politician the most efficient instrument of corruption and in the purchased newspaper the most efficient defender of corruption. Our main quarrel is not with these agents and representatives of the interests. They derive their chief power from the great sinister offenders who stand behind them. They are but puppets who move as the strings are pulled. It is not the puppets, but the strong cunning men and the mighty forces working for evil behind and through the puppets, with whom we have to deal. We seek to control law-defying wealth; in the first place to prevent its doing dire evil to the republic, and in the next place to avoid the vindictive and dreadful radicalism which, if left uncontrolled, it is certain in the end to arouse. Sweeping attacks upon all property, upon all men of means, without regard to whether they do well or ill, would sound the death-knell of the republic; and such attacks become inevitable if decent citizens permit those rich men whose lives are corrupt and evil to domineer in swollen pride, unchecked and unhindered, over the destinies of this country. We act in no vindictive spirit, and we are no respecters of persons. If a labor union does wrong, we oppose it as firmly as we oppose a corporation which does wrong; and we stand equally stoutly for the rights of the man of wealth and for the rights of the wage-worker. We seek to protect the property of every man who acts honestly, of every corporation that represents wealth honestly accumulated and honestly used. We seek to stop wrongdoing, and we desire to punish the wrong doers only so far as is necessary to achieve this end.

Campaign of Lawbreakers Against Government's Policy

There are ample material rewards for those who serve with fidelity the mammon of unrighteousness; but they are dearly paid for by the people who permit their representatives, whether in public life, in the press, or in the colleges where their young men are taught, to preach and to practice that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. The amount of money the representatives of certain great moneyed interests are willing to spend can be gauged by their recent publication broadcast throughout the papers of this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, of huge advertisements attacking with envenomed bitterness the administration's policy of warring against successful dishonesty, and by their circulation of pamphlets and books prepared with the same object; while they likewise push the circulation of the writings and speeches of men who, whether because they are misled, or because, seeing the light, they yet are willing to sin against the light, serve these their masters of great wealth to the cost of the plain people. The books and pamphlets, the controlled newspapers, the speeches by public or private men to which I refer, are usually and especially in the interest of the Standard Oil Trust and of certain notorious railroad combinations, but they also defend other individuals and corporations of great wealth that have been guilty of wrongdoing. It is only rarely that the men responsible for the wrongdoing themselves speak or write. Normally they hire others to do their bidding, or find others who will do it without hire. From the railroad-rate law to the pure-food law, every measure for honesty in business that has been passed during the last six years has been opposed by these men on its passage and in its administration with every resource that bitter and unscrupulous craft could suggest and the command of almost unlimited money secure. But for the last year the attack has been made with most bitterness upon the actual administration of the law, especially through the department of justice, but also through the Interstate Commerce Commission and the bureau of corporations. The extraordinary violence of the assaults upon our policy contained in these speeches, editorials, articles, advertisements, and pamphlets, and the enormous sums of money spent in these various ways, give a fairly accurate measure of the anger and terror which our public actions have caused the corrupt men of vast wealth to feel in the very marrow of their being. The attack is sometimes made openly against us for enforcing the law, and sometimes with a certain cunning, for not trying to enforce it in some other way than that which experience shows to be practical. One of the favorite methods of the latter class of assailant is to attack the administration for not procuring the imprisonment instead of the fine of offenders under these anti-trust laws. The man making this assault is usually either a prominent lawyer or an editor who takes his policy from the financiers and his arguments from their attorneys. If the former, he has defended and advised many wealthy malefactors, and he knows well that, thanks to the advice of lawyers like himself, a certain kind of modern corporation has been turned into an admirable instrument by which to render it well-nigh impossible to get at the head of the corporation, at the man who is really most guilty. When we are able to put the real wrongdoer in prison, this is what we strive to do; this is what we have actually done with some very wealthy criminals, who, moreover, represented that most baneful of all alliances, the alliance between the corruption of organized politics and the corruption of high finance. This is what we have done in the Gaynor and Greene case, in the case of the misapplication of funds in connection with certain great banks in Chicago, in the land-fraud cases, where, as in other cases likewise, neither the highest political position nor the possession of great wealth, has availed to save the offenders from prison. The federal government does scourge sin; it does bid sinners fear; for it has put behind the bars with impartial severity, the powerful financier, the powerful politician, the rich land thief, the rich contractor—all, no matter how high their station, against whom criminal misdeeds can be proved. All their wealth and power can not protect them. But it often happens that the effort to imprison a given defendant is certain to be futile, while it is possible to fine him or to fine the corporation of which he is head; so that, in other words, the only way of punishing the wrong is by fining the corporation, unless we are content to proceed personally against the minor agents. The corporation lawyers to whom I refer and their employers are the men mainly responsible for this state of things, and their responsibility is shared with all who ingeniously oppose the passing of just and effective laws, or who fail to execute them when they have been put on the statute books.

Much is said, in these attacks upon the policy of the present administration, about the rights of "innocent stockholders." That stockholder is not innocent who voluntarily purchases stock in a corporation whose methods and management he knows to be corrupt; and stockholders are bound to try to secure honest management, or else are estopped from complaining about the proceedings the government finds necessary in order to compel the corporation to obey the law. There has been in the past grave wrong done innocent stockholders by overcapitalization, stock-watering, stock-jobbing, stock manipulation. This we have sought to prevent, first, by exposing the thing done and punishing the offender when any existing law had been violated; second, by recommending the passage of laws which would make unlawful similar practices for the future. The public men, lawyers and editors who loudly proclaim their sympathy for the "innocent stockholders" when a great law-defying corporation is punished, are the first to protest with frantic vehemence against all efforts by law to put a stop to the practices which are the real and ultimate sources of the damage alike to the stockholders and the public. The apologists of successful dishonesty always declaim against any effort to punish or prevent it, on the ground that any such effort will "unsettle business." It is they who by their acts have unsettled business; and the very men raising this cry spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in securing, by speech, editorial, book, or pamphlet, the defense by misstatements of what they have done; and yet when public servants correct their misstatements by telling the truth they declaim against them for breaking silence, lest "values be depreciated." They have hurt honest business men, honest working men, honest farmers; and now they clamor against the truth being told.

The keynote of all these attacks upon the effort to secure honesty in business and in politics is well expressed in brazen protests against any effort for the moral regeneration of the business world, on the ground that it is unnatural, unwarranted and injurious, and that business panic is the necessary penalty for such effort to secure business honesty. The morality of such a plea is precisely as great as if made on behalf of the men caught in a gambling establishment when that gambling establishment is raided by the police. If such words mean anything they mean that those whose sentiments they represent stand against the effort to bring about a moral regeneration of business, which will prevent a repetition of the insurance, banking and street railroad scandals in New York; a repetition of the Chicago & Alton deal; a repetition of the combination between certain professional politicians, certain professional labor leaders, and certain big financiers, from the disgrace of which San Francisco has just been rescued; a repetition of the successful effort by the Standard Oil people to crush out every competitor, to overawe the common carriers, and to establish a monopoly which treats the public with a contempt which the public deserves so long as it permits men of such principles and sentiments to avow and act on them with impunity. The outcry against stopping dishonest practices among wrongdoers who happen to be wealthy is precisely similar to the outcry raised against every effort for cleanliness and decency in city government, because, forsooth, it will "hurt business." The same outcry is made against the department of justice for prosecuting the heads of colossal corporations that has been made against the men who in San Francisco have prosecuted with impartial severity the wrongdoers among business men, public officials and labor leaders alike. The principle is the same, in the two cases. Just as the blackmailer and bribe giver stand on the same evil eminence of infamy, so the man who makes an enormous fortune by corrupting legislatures and municipalities and fleecing his stockholders and the public, stands on the same moral level with the creature who fattens on the blood money of the gambling house and the saloon. Moreover, in the last analysis, both kinds of corruption are far more intimately connected than would at first sight appear; the wrongdoing is at bottom the same. Corrupt business and corrupt politics act and react with ever increasing debasement, one on the other; the corrupt head of a corporation and the corrupt labor leader are both in the same degree the enemies of honest corporations and honest labor unions; the rebate taker, the franchise trafficker, the manipulator of securities, the purveyor and protector of vice, the blackmailing ward boss, the ballot-box stuffer, the demagogue, the mob leader, the hired bully, and man-killer—all alike work at the same web of corruption, and all alike should be abhorred by honest men.

The "business" which is hurt by the movement for honesty is the kind of business which, in the long run, it pays the country to have hurt. It is the kind of business which has tended to make the very name "high finance" a term of scandal to which all honest American men of business should join in putting an end. The special pleaders for business dishonesty, in denouncing the present administration for enforcing the law against the huge and corrupt corporations which have defied the law, also denounce it for endeavoring to secure sadly needed labor legislation, such as a far-reaching law making employers liable for injuries to their employes.

"Business" Hurt by Movement for Honesty Should Be Crushed

It is meet and fit that the apologists for corrupt wealth should oppose every effort to relieve weak and helpless people from crushing misfortune brought upon them by injury in the business from which they gain a bare livelihood. The burden should be distributed. It is hypocritical baseness to speak of a girl who works in a factory where the dangerous machinery is unprotected as having the "right" freely to contract to expose herself to dangers to life and limb. She has no alternative but to suffer want or else to expose herself to such dangers, and when she loses a hand or is otherwise maimed or disfigured for life, it is a moral wrong that the whole burden of the risk necessarily incidental to the business should be placed with crushing weight upon her weak shoulders, and all who profit by her work escape scot-free. This is what opponents of a just employers' liability law advocate; and it is consistent that they should usually also advocate immunity for those most dangerous members of the criminal class—the criminals of great wealth.

Our opponents have recently been bitterly criticising the two judges referred to, in the accompanying communications from the Standard Oil Company and the Santa Fe railroad for having imposed heavy fines on these two corporations; and yet these same critics of these two judges exhaust themselves in denouncing the most respectful and cautious discussion of the official action of a judge which results in immunity to wealth and powerful wrongdoers, or which renders nugatory a temperate effort to better the conditions of life and work among those of our fellow countrymen whose need is greatest. Most certainly it behooves us all to treat with the utmost respect the high office of judge; and our judges, as a whole, are brave and upright men. Respect for the law must go hand in hand with respect for the judges; and, as a whole, it is true now as in the past, that the judges stand in character and service above all other men among their fellow-servants of the public. There is all the greater need that the few who fail in this great office, who fall below this high standard of integrity, of wisdom, of sympathetic understanding and of courage, should have their eyes opened to the needs of their countrymen. A judge who on the bench either truckles to the mob and shrinks from sternly repressing violence and disorder, or bows down before a corporation; who fails to stand up valiantly for the rights of property on the one hand, or on the other by misuse of the process of injunction or by his attitude toward all measures for the betterment of the conditions of labor, makes the wage-worker feel with bitterness that the courts are hostile to him; or who fails to realize that all public servants in their several stations must strive to stop the abuses of the criminal rich—such a man performs an even worse service to the body politic than the legislator or executive who goes wrong. The judge who does his full duty well stands higher, and renders a better service to the people, than any other public servant; he is entitled to greater respect; and if he is a true servant of the people, if he is upright, wise and fearless, he will unhesitatingly disregard even the wishes of the people if they conflict with the eternal principles of right as against wrong. He must serve the people; but he must serve his own conscience first. All honor to such a judge.

The opponents of the measures we champion single out now one and now another measure for especial attack, and speak as if the movement in which we are engaged was purely economic. It has a large economic side, but it is fundamentally an ethical movement. It is not a movement to be completed in one year, or two or three years; it is a movement which must be persevered in until the spirit which lies behind it sinks deep into the heart and the conscience of the whole people. It is always important to choose the right means to achieve our purpose, but it is even more important to keep this purpose clearly before us; and this purpose is to secure national honesty in business and in politics. We do not subscribe to the cynical belief that dishonesty and unfair dealing are essential to business success, and are to be condoned when the success is moderate and applauded when the success is great. The methods by which the Standard Oil people and those engaged in the other combinations of which I have spoken above have achieved great fortunes can only be justified by the advocacy of a system of morality which would also justify every form of criminality on the part of a labor union, and every form of violence, corruption, and fraud, from murder to bribery and ballot-box stuffing in politics. We are trying to secure equality of opportunity for all; and the struggle for honesty is the same whether it is made on behalf of one set of men or of another.

Laws Must Continue to Be Administered with Even Hand

The laws must in the future be administered as they are now being administered, so that the department of justice may continue to be, what it now is, in very fact the department of justice, where so far as our ability permits justice is meted out with an even hand to great and small, rich and poor, weak and strong. Moreover, there should be no delay in supplementing the laws now on the statute books by the enactment of further legislation as outlined in the message I sent to congress on its assembling. Under the existing laws, much, very much, has been actually accomplished during the past six years, and it has been shown by actual experience that they can be enforced against the wealthiest corporation and the richest and most powerful manager or manipulator of that corporation as rigorously and fearlessly as against the humblest offender. Above all, they have been enforced against the very wrongdoers and agents of wrongdoers who have for so many years gone scot free and flouted the laws with impunity, against great law-defying corporations of immense wealth, which, until within the last half dozen years, have treated themselves and have expected others to treat them as being beyond and above all possible check from law.

It is especially necessary to secure to the representatives of the national government full power to deal with the great corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and above all, with the great interstate common carriers. Our people should clearly recognize that while there are difficulties in any course of conduct to be followed in dealing with these great corporations, these difficulties must be faced, and one of three courses followed.

The first course is to abandon all effort to oversee and control their actions in the interest of the general public and to permit a return to the utter lack of control which would obtain if they were left to the common law. I do not for one moment believe that our people would tolerate this position. The extraordinary growth of modern industrialism has rendered the common law, which grew up under and was adapted to deal with totally different conditions, in many respects inadequate to deal with the new conditions. These new conditions make it necessary to shackle cunning as in the past we have shackled force. The vast individual and corporate fortunes, the vast combinations of capital, which have marked the development of our industrial system, create new conditions, and necessitate a change from the old attitude of the state and nation toward the rules regulating the acquisition and untrammeled business use of property, in order both that property may be adequately protected, and that at the same time those who hold it may be prevented from wrongdoing.

The second and third courses are to have the regulation undertaken either by the nation or by the states. Of course in any event both the national government and the several state governments must do each its part, and each can do a certain amount that the other cannot do, while the only really satisfactory results must be obtained by the representatives of the national and state governments working heartily together within their respective spheres. But in my judgment thoroughgoing and satisfactory control can in the end only be obtained by the action of the national government, for almost all the corporations of enormous wealth—that is, the corporations which it is especially desirable to control—are engaged in interstate commerce, and derive their power and their importance not from that portion of their business which is intrastate, but from the interstate business. It is not easy always to decide just where the line of demarcation between the two kinds of business falls. This line must ultimately be drawn by the federal courts. Much of the effort to secure adequate control of the great corporations by state action has been wise and effective, but much of it has been neither; for when the effort is made to accomplish by the action of the state what can only be accomplished by the action of the nation, the result can only be disappointing, and in the end the law will probably be declared unconstitutional. So, likewise, in the national arena, we who believe in the measures herein advocated are hampered and not aided by the extremists who advocate action so violent that it would either be useless or else would cause more mischief than it would remedy.

We have just passed through two months of acute financial stress. At any such time it is a sad fact that entirely innocent people suffer from no fault of their own; and every one must feel the keenest sympathy for the large body of honest business men, of honest investors, of honest wageworkers, who suffer because involved in a crash for which they are in no way responsible. At such a time there is a natural tendency on the part of many men to feel gloomy and frightened at the outlook; but there is no justification for this feeling. There is no nation so absolutely sure of ultimate success as ours. Of course we shall succeed. Ours is a nation of masterful energy, with a continent for its domain, and it feels within its veins the thrill which comes to those who know that they possess the future. We are not cast down by the fear of failure. We are upheld by the confident hope of ultimate triumph. The wrongs that exist are to be corrected; but they in no way justify doubt as to the final outcome, doubt as to the great material prosperity of the future, or of the lofty spiritual life which is to be built upon that prosperity as a foundation. No misdeeds done in the present must be permitted to shroud from our eyes the glorious future of the nation; but because of this very fact it behooves us never to swerve from our resolute purpose to cut out wrongdoing and uphold what is right.

I do not for a moment believe that the actions of this administration have brought on business distress; so far as this is due to local and not world-wide causes, and to the actions of any particular individuals, it is due to the speculative folly and flagrant dishonesty of a few men of great wealth, who seek to shield themselves from the effects of their own wrongdoing by ascribing its results to the actions of those who have sought to put a stop to the wrongdoing. But if it were true that to cut out rottenness from the body politic meant a momentary check to an unhealthy seeming prosperity, I should not for one moment hesitate to put the knife to the corruption. On behalf of all our people, on behalf no less of the honest man of means than of the honest man who earns each day's livelihood by that day's sweat of his brow, it is necessary to insist upon honesty in business and politics alike, in all walks of life, in big things and in little things; upon just and fair dealing as between man and man. Those who demand this are striving for the right in the spirit of Abraham Lincoln when he said:

"Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge may pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said: 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in."

In the work we of this generation are in, there is, thanks be to the Almighty, no danger of bloodshed and no use for the sword; but there is grave need of those stern qualities shown alike by the men of the north and the men of the south in the dark days when each valiantly battled for the light as it was given each to see the light. Their spirit should be our spirit, as we strive to bring nearer the day when greed and trickery and cunning shall be trampled under feet by those who fight for the righteousness that exalteth a nation.

Why So Warm?

The remarkable and wonderfully unseasonable weather which has prevailed recently, and the apparent passing of the old time winter, substituting therefore a semi spring effect, is causing widespread comment.

Prof. H. C. Frankfield, official forecaster, says the cause of it is that the vast are from the Atlantic to the rocky has been invaded by breezes from the tropics He added:

"Seasonable winter weather, which means a fair amount of cold, depends on the normal movement of the areas of high and low barometric pressure over the country from west to east. This assumes that a fair proportion of the cyclones or storms will move through or to the southward of any given locality

"As to the reasons for these conditions, we cannot ascertain them yet. The average temperature at this time of the year should be below the freezing point, but it has been above it."—The Duluth Daily Star.

About Creameries.

The Highlanding Creamery is now past the talking stage and the work of putting up the buildings is being pushed rapidly, and the creamery will be ready for business by May 1 When the Highlanding people started to agitate building they offerd to go half way to Kratka, in order to bunch the cows and get all the cream to one creamery, but the Kratka people said; no; if you want to go in with us you must come to Kratka. Then they called a meeting with Erie, and again Highlanding offered to go half way but Erie said no; if you want to do business with us you must come to Erie. During all this time the Highlanding people had been counting up the cows, and they found there was more cows tributary to Highlanding than to either of the other places, and about as many as the two of them. They also discovered that there was cows enough tributary to Highlanding to support a creamery, and they took stock and shares enough to get the cash to buid with, and are now building the creamery.

The farmers who take the cream to the creamery are the ones that have to pay the expense of running the creamery, and the larger the amount of cream taken to one creamery the higher price you get for your cream. In view of these facts it would seem to us to be a poor policy [illegible] farmer to put a [illegible] half to build a creamery [illegible] six or eight miles of [illegible] build, when the [illegible] reduce the [illegible] we have no [illegible] [illegible] take just as much interest in the prosperity of our [illegible] one part of the Eleven [illegible] the other, and we [illegible] the farmers [illegible] build [illegible] er The Highlanding [illegible] association are [illegible] pay in store pay for your cream or cash every month and we [illegible] where you please, so lay [illegible] [illegible]

The Olberg Journal is rejoiceing over the fact, that through the efforts of Congressman Steenerson, they have had their tri-weekly mail route from Olberg to Churnes restored, which was cut down to a weekly service by the department a short time ago; That man Steenerson is looking after the rights of the people living in this District, all the time, and he has the ability to get what he goes after.

Wasp's Jaws Make Colony's Nest.

Wasps readily succumb before the increasing cold of autumn. The few that escape the merciless scourge of mortality are the queens of next season They pass the winter in some warm cranny, and when the spring arrives each comes forth from its hiding place and seeks a suitable place for the nest that is to be. This found the queen repairs to a fence or tree trunk and with her jaw rasps off a bundle of wood fiber which when moistened with saliva and kneaded forms the paperlike substance of which the nest is entirely constructed.

Just as bees have invented a peculiar nest building material in wax, so wasps have prepared a special durable paper for the same purpose. The queen mother lays the foundations of the city with her own jaws. She attaches a sort of stalk of wood paper to a chosen support. This may be the branch of a tree, a root in a cavity below ground or a beam in a garden shed. The stalk prepared, the queen builds a few shallow cells, in each of which she lays an egg. As these mature, hatch and develop into worker wasps the labor of the little colony is turned over to them, and thus a vast nest with thousands of cells is evolved —Chicago Tribune.

The Wrong Nell.

Nell is a girl who lives up on Capitol hill. On Mondays a woman comes to Nell's house to wash clothes. The woman's name is Nell too. One Monday Nell, the girl, was in the sitting room reading when the telephone rang Nell, the washerwoman, answered the ring. Nell, the girl, then heard Nell, the washerwoman, say:

"Yes, this is Nell."

Silence.

"How's that?"

Silence.

"What! Am I mad because you kissed me last night? Look here, man you're too fresh. Who are you any way? I never kissed"—

Just then the telephone receiver was wildly snatched from her hand. Nell, the girl, blushing furiously, had grabbed it. She hung it on the hook.

"He wanted me," she said. "He always tries to tease me that way. I—I never kissed him in my life."

As she disappeared up the stairs the washerwoman smiled and said:

"That's a big one."—Denver Post.

Revenge.

"It took you an awfully long time to pull that fellow's tooth," said the assistant.

"Yes," answered the dentist grimly. "He married the girl I loved!"

Things Theatrical.

Curious Cullings.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Laugh and Grow Fat; No.

There is nothing in the maxim "Laugh and grow fat" or else the joke-smiths fail to grow mirthful over their own merrymaking.

Great humorists seldom are fat. F. P. Dunne is the heaviest, weighing about 190 pounds. The weight of others living is: Mark Twain, 150 pounds; George Ade, 147; Jerome K. Jerome, 115, and W. W. Jacobs, 132. O. Henry is really a great humorist, but he is in the 180-pound class.—Home Magazine.

A Remedy for Neuralgia or Pain in the Nerves.

For neuralgia and sciatica Sloan's Liniment has no equal. It has a powerful sedative effect on the nerves—penetrates without rubbing and gives immediate relief from pain—quickens the circulation of the blood and gives a pleasant sensation of comfort and warmth.

"For three years I suffered with neuralgia in the head and jaws," writes J. P. Hubbard, of Marietta, S. C., "and had almost decided to have three of my teeth pulled, when a friend recommended me to buy a 25 cent bottle of Sloan's Liniment. I did so and experienced immediate relief, and I kept on using it until the neuralgia was entirely cured. I will never be without a bottle of Sloan's Liniment in my house again. I use it also for insect bites and sore throat, and I can cheerfully recommend it to any one who suffers from any of the ills I have mentioned."

She Was in No Hurry.

Rev. Dr. Wallace, new pastor of the East End Baptist church, brought a new one to Cleveland with him.

According to the story, a Boston girl got on the street car one day carrying one of those muffs the size of an ordinary hassock. She had only one hand in the muff. A young man sitting next to her took advantage of the opportunity to slip his hand into the unoccupied end of the muff.

The Boston girl turned upon him severely. "I could have you arrested for such a familiarity," said she. "But," she added, "I'm from Boston and I purpose to keep calm. Now, I'll just give you ten minutes to let go of my hand."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PANTRY CLEANED

A Way Some People Have.

A doctor said:—

"Before marriage my wife observed in summer and country homes, coming in touch with families of varied means, culture, tastes and discriminating tendencies, that the families using Postum seemed to average better than those using coffee.

"When we were married two years ago, Postum was among our first order of groceries. We also put in some coffee and tea for guests, but after both had stood around the pantry about a year untouched, they were thrown away, and Postum used only.

"Up to the age of 28 I had been accustomed to drink coffee as a routine habit and suffered constantly from indigestion and all its relative disorders. Since using Postum all the old complaints have completely left me and I sometimes wonder if I ever had them."

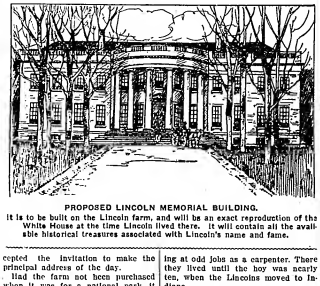
Birthplace of Great President to Be Converted Into Public Park



PROPOSED LINCOLN MEMORIAL BUILDING.

It is to be built on the Lincoln farm, and will be an exact reproduction of the White House at the time Lincoln lived there. It will contain all the available historical treasures associated with Lincoln's name and fame.

On February 12, 1909, the Kentucky farm where Abraham Lincoln was born, will, if all goes well, be dedicated to the American people as a national park. Its 110 rocky acres in the heart of the Blue Grass state have been purchased, and an association has been organized to restore its many natural beauties.

The log cabin in which the future president was born was recently rescued from a cellar at College Point, Long Island, where it had been ignominiously dumped after traveling about the country as a show. With imposing ceremonies, it was carried back to its native soil, and restored to the very spot where "Tom" Lincoln, the father, put its rough timbers together. On another part of the farm, as an antithesis to the hut, and as illustrative of the height to which the son attained from such a humble origin, it is planned to erect a memorial structure which will be an exact reproduction of the White House at the time Lincoln lived there. Within its walls will be preserved all the available historical treasures associated with his name and fame.

The date chosen for the dedication of the Lincoln farm is especially appropriate, for it marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of the martyred president. Prominent Americans from the north, south, east and west are expected to be present at the exercises. President Roosevelt has accepted the invitation to make the principal address of the day.

Had the farm not been purchased when it was for a national park, it might even now have been the site for a distillery. Because of a spring on the farm, famous throughout Kentucky for the purity of its waters, a wealthy Louisville whisky manufacturer had sought to buy the property that he might advertise his product in some such way as this:

> LINCOLN RYE
>
> Made from the PUREST MALT, mixed with the crystal waters of the famous LINCOLN SPRING, which gushes out of the rock within a few feet of the place where Abraham Lincoln Was Born.
>
> Visit our distillery at Lincoln's birthplace and
>
> See and Taste for Yourself.
>

As it happened, whisky helped defeat whisky. When it was publicly announced that the long drawn-out litigation in which the farm's title had become entangled was at last ended, and that it would be sold at auction on August 28, 1905, the Louisville distiller sent a representative "to bid it in," no matter what the figure. The agent got as far as Elizabethtown, Ky., some 12 miles from Hodgenville, where the auction was to take place, and, as it was Sunday and the sale was to be held in the afternoon of the following day, he put up at a hotel and "took things easy," intending to drive over to Hodgenville the next morning. But although the trains do not run in that part of Kentucky on Sunday, the bottles do, and the whisky man drank long and often in the barroom. Here he made the acquaintance of a young man from New York, who had come to buy the farm for its preservation as a park, and who is now secretary of the Lincoln Farm association. On learning the purpose of the man from Louisville and noticing that "the tide was coming in," the New Yorker got up at daybreak the next morning and hurried to Hodgenville in the fastest conveyance he could hire.

On reaching Hodgenville the New York man asked that the auction be held as early as possible, and he bought the farm for $3,500 about a quarter of an hour before the whisky man arrived.

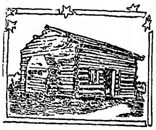
The restoration of the log cabin to its native state was a spectacle as imposing as its consignment to a cellar in New York was inglorious. It was placed on a special car and escorted back to Kentucky by a squad of Kentucky militiamen. At Philadelphia, Baltimore, Harrisburg, Altoona, Pittsburg, Columbus and Indianapolis it rested under military guard. Governors and mayors met it at various railroad stations and paid tribute to the life that began within its rough timbers. When the special train on which it rode crossed the Ohio river from Indiana into Kentucky, it was met at the Louisville station with military honors. Col. Henry Watterson and Adlai E. Stevenson made the chief speeches of welcome.

The cost of making a park of the Lincoln farm, of erecting the memorial hall and of carrying out other plans is being met by popular subscriptions sent to Clarence H. Mackay, treasurer of the Lincoln Farm association. Other officers of the association are Joseph W. Folk, president; William H. Taft, Cardinal Gibbons, Samuel L. Clemens, August Belmont and Lyman J. Gage.

The movement to preserve the scenes of the earliest years of Lincoln's life has revived unusual interest in all the associations of his youth. The graybeards of Hodgenville, the hamlet which is situated about two miles from the Lincoln farm, ever since they were aroused by its sale at auction, have been telling many a story about "Little Abe," when a lad; about "Tom," his father, and Nancy, his mother. "Abe" lived on the farm, they say, until he was four and a half years old, when, because of the scant produce of its 110 acres, the family was forced to move to a house in the village, where "Tom" Lincoln barely supported his family by working at odd jobs as a carpenter. There they lived until the boy was nearly ten, when the Lincolns moved to Indiana.

LINCOLN'S CALL TO DUTY.

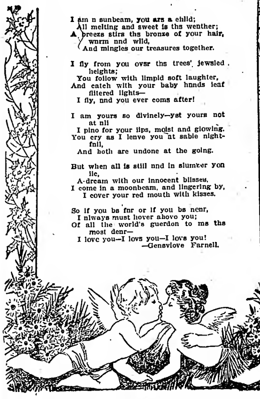
There the Republican candidate for the presidency stood, tall and ungainly in his black suit of apparently new but ill-fitting clothes, his long, tawny neck emerging gauntly from his "turn down" collar, his melancholy eyes sunk deep in his haggard face. Most of the members of the committee had never seen him before, and gazed at him with surprised curiosity. He certainly did not present the appearance of a statesman, as people usually picture it in their imagination. Standing up with folded hands, he quietly, without visible embarrassment or emotion, listened to the dignified little speech addressed to him by Mr. Ashmun, the president of the convention, and then responded with a few appropriate, earnest and well-shaped sentences, expressing his gratitude for the confidence reposed in him, his doubts of his own abilities and his trust in a helping Providence. Then followed some informal talk, partly of a jovial kind, in which the hearty simplicity of Lincoln's nature shone out, and after the usual handshaking the committee took leave. One of its members, Mr. Kelley of Pennsylvania, remarked to me as we passed out of the house: "Well, we might have done a more brilliant thing, but we could hardly have done a better thing."—From "Reminiscences of a Long Life," by Carl Schurz, in McClure's.



THE HUT IN WHICH LINCOLN WAS BORN.

This log cabin was removed from the Lincoln farm, in Kentucky, and carried about the country for some time by a showman. Later it was dumped ignominiously into a cellar in New York city, from which it was rescued and restored to its native state.

His Valentine



I am a sunbeam, you are a child;
All melting and sweet is the weather;
A breeze stirs the bronze of your hair, warm and wild,
And mingles our treasures together.

I fly from you over the trees' jeweled heights;
You follow with limpid soft laughter,
And catch with your baby hands leaf filtered lights—
I fly, and you ever come after!

I am yours so divinely—yet yours not at all
I pine for your lips, moist and glowing.
You cry as I leave you at sable nightfall,
And both are undone at the going.

But when all is still and in slumber you lie,
A-dream with our innocent blisses,
I come in a moonbeam, and lingering by,
I cover your red mouth with kisses.

So if you be far or if you be near,
I always must hover above you;
Of all the world's guerdon to me the most dear—
I love you—I love you—I love you!

—Genevieve Farnell.

Tactics of the Little Pagan God

Though the little pagan god who nearly always accompanies St. Valentine on February 14 has the same purpose wherever he goes, yet he does not everywhere employ the same methods for its accomplishment. His tactics differ in different places. He is as versatile as he is capricious. In New York city he still finds a way to mylady's heart by going to her in a dainty bit of pasteboard, tissue paper, tinsel and paint, all tucked way in a scented envelope. In Berlin he has recently found a new means of wounding his victims in the "cooing postals," which are so constructed that when squeezed they will imitate the plaintive note of a dove. In more prosaic London cupid has abandoned the postman for the telephone, and the up-to-date London lover no longer sends his sweetheart an ardent message by letter, but recites it over the wire into her very ear. Whether or not he discloses his identity depends on the reply he gets.

Yet the most picturesque St. Valentine day customs are not to be found in the big cities, but in out-of-the-way regions, where human nature retains much of its old-time simplicity. In some of the rural villages of England, for example, the season is observed in much the same way as in the time of Queen Elizabeth and many a quaint superstition still survives.

In remote villages of Derbyshire the custom still prevails of maidens looking out of their windows in the early morn of St. Valentine's day to learn who their lovers may be. Every girl who wants to get married is supposed to jump out of bed just at daybreak and dressing hastily open a window facing the street. There she must wait until some man passes by, who tips his hat and says to her: "Good-morrow, 'tis St. Valentine's day." In reply she says: "Good-morrow, sir, I'll be your valentine." As a usual thing, however, the passerby is not a stranger. A Derbyshire girl usually keeps the shutters closed until through some crevice in them she espies the man she wants.

Of all observances, however, the most popular in England is that best known as "sweeping the girls." If a girl is not kissed by an admirer before nine o'clock on St. Valentine's morning she is said to be "dusty." Accordingly all the young men of the neighborhood on learning that some young woman has remained unkissed past the fatal hour make an attack on her house with brooms, and after sweeping her thoroughly, each of her callers kisses her.

The French province of Lorraine has a custom somewhat similar, which is called "beating the ladies." It dates back to the sixteenth century. On St. Valentine's morning every marriageable daughter is expected to arise at daybreak and bake a heart-shaped cake for the first young man who may come for it. If she should oversleep, however, and her lover should call to find her all unmindful of him and the occasion which brought him to her door then his rivals are privileged to punish her in the following fashion: Armed with wisps of hay they may invade her room and, compelling her to get up, they may administer a not especially ungentle thrashing.

In the county of Norfolk, England, there still survives a custom which recalls the times when St. Valentine's day was observed throughout Great Britain and the continent by the presentation of substantial gifts. In this way not only lovers remembered their mistresses, but parents their children, husbands their wives, and in the merry days of Charles II. husbands gave presents to other men's wives.

Among the young women of Devonshire the belief still lingers that they are able to learn who their future husbands will be if they go through a certain peculiar formula shortly after the midnight that ushers in St. Valentine's day. Each maiden should go alone to the porch of the village church and there wait until 12:30 a. m. Then as the bell strikes the half hour she should return home scattering hempseed in her path and repeating:

"Hempseed I sow, hempseed I mow.
He that will my true love be,
Come, rake this hempseed after me."

And if she is going to be married in the next year she will indeed see her lover behind her clad in a winding sheet and raking up the hempseed.

In many parts of Germany the children find St. Valentine's day a special occasion to obtain charity from young women, who cannot refuse them without being threatened with the fate of becoming old maids. In certain villages of Saxony little boys and girls go from house to house singing a song which has been translated as follows into English rhyme:

"God bless the baker,
If you'll be the giver,
I'll be the taker."

Body Raw with Eczema—Discharged from Hospitals as Hopeless—Cuticura Remedies Cured Him.

"From the age of three months until fifteen years old, my son Owen's life was made intolerable by eczema in its worst form. In spite of treatments the disease gradually spread until nearly every part of his body was quite raw. He used to tear himself dreadfully in his sleep and the agony he went through is quite beyond words. The regimental doctor pronounced the case hopeless. We had him in hospitals four times and he was pronounced one of the worst cases ever admitted. From each he was discharged as incurable. We kept trying remedy after remedy, but had gotten almost past hoping for a cure. Six months ago we purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies. The result was truly marvelous and to-day he is perfectly cured. Mrs. Lily Hedge, Camberwell Green, England, Jan. 12, 1907."

AGREEING WITH THE ASSESSOR.

His Reason for Building Unneeded Addition to House.

Representative Birdsall of Iowa objects to the high rentals charged in Washington during the congressional season. He says he feels like an Irish farmer he knew out in his district. The farmer had bought a place out of savings as a farm-hand and renter. The tax assessor came around one day and put a valuation on Pat's new property which Pat thought excessive. His protest, however, was unavailing.

One day a neighbor visited Pat and found him building an addition to his house, and obviously the house was plenty big enough without it.

"Isn't that a piece of extravagance?" he asked Pat.

"Think agin it moight be," said Pat, "but I'm after havin' the ould place wurth phat the assisser says it is."

I do not believe in divorce or bigamy. I would not, if free, marry a divorced man. I would not marry Blohh if we were both free and he was the last man on earth."

Says Tax Law Defeated.

Duluth—That the tax amendment was not ratified and adopted by a majority of the electors voting at the general election in Minnesota last November and the good roads amendment was ratified and adopted by a majority of such electors is the substance of a decision filed in the district court of St. Louis county by Judge Homer B. Dibell of the Eleventh judicial district.

The decision is filed in the contest case instituted by Samuel G. McGonaghy, an elector of Duluth, and F. A. Watkins, an elector of Carlton county, contesting the decision of the state canvassing board that the tax amendment was adopted and the roads and bridge amendment rejected by the electors at the election held last November.

The two contest cases were instituted at the instance of the real estate exchange of Duluth, which organization raised funds and employed counsel to press the contest. The contestants were represented by H. H. Phelps of this city, assisted at the trial by C. O. Baldwin. The state canvassing board was represented by Assistant Attorney George Simpson. An attempt was made to have the last legislature take steps to provide for the expense of a recount, but it failed.

Supposed Woman a Man.

St. Peter—"Doc" Welsh, living near Springfield, received the surprise of his life the other night. A short distance from the outskirts of the town he was held up by a woman, and when he had grappled with his assailant he found that the supposed feminine road agent was a man disguised by woman's clothing.

Welsh had sold some stock to a Springfield dealer, and as he was returning home a "woman" jumped into his wagon, pointed a revolver at his head and demanded his money. The farmer replied that he had none, but was assured that he would be killed if he did not produce.

Ducking the muzzle of the revolver, Welsh closed with the highwayman and it was then that he made the discovery that he was dealing with a man. For a moment the two struggled in the box of the wagon and then they fell to the ground, the team taking fright and running away. Welsh released himself from the clutches of his assailant and took to his heels, and his antagonist disappeared in the opposite direction.

Minnesota Leads.

St. Paul—"Three Kingdoms of a Great State" is the title of a neat pamphlet published by George Welsh, state commissioner of immigration, containing a vast amount of information about the resources of Minnesota. The three kingdoms referred to are the animal, the vegetable and the mineral kingdoms, and in each of these three Minnesota is shown to be in the lead.

The pamphlet first treats of the state in general with reference to its location, area and topography, railroads and other general information. It then takes up the resources of the state under the three heads and shows what Minnesota can and does produce in these lines.

Chickens in the Snowball.

Several boys at Tusten, Sullivan county, started a ball of snow rolling down a hill, and it went flying through Farmer Schneider's chicken coop.

The big ball gathered up nine of Schneider's fat hens. With the poultry packed into the ball, legs and heads of chickens sticking out of the mass, it rolled farther and brought up in the barnyard of the next farmer, on the opposite side of the Tusten turnpike, where the pigs ate five of the chickens.—Port Jervis dispatch to the N. ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Mohammed's Forces Center in Cosmopolitan Cairo

Cairo, Egypt.—Japan, China, Korea and India have all got on the world's news cables since I wrote about them in this correspondence; the same will be true of Egypt, or I am no reader of plain signs. The unrest of Egypt is bound to assert itself ere long in ways that will command the attention of civilization. The loud mutterings, to be heard in the cafes and bazars, are not the thoughtless vaporings of the idle; a very considerable proportion of the people, including the progressive, educated "Young Egypt" party, are thinking definite things concerning the overthrow of the English power. Lord Cromer's recent departure was made the occasion for so many outspoken criticisms against the British that it was preceded, as a precautionary measure, by the parade of all the British forces, fully armed, through the streets of Cairo.

Missions and Politics.

All this has a relation to the missionary propaganda. This upheaval and restlessness is cracking the hard surface of Mohammedan exclusiveness and intolerance. Where the newspaper and the world's spirit enter, there religious prejudice cannot abide. In their seemingly hopeless assault upon Islam, the missionaries have a powerful reenforcement in the fledgling modernity of New Egypt.

On the other hand, the missionaries, by their schools and literature, have done more than a little to awaken Egypt from the torpor of centuries. British officials and Egyptian reformers have alike definitely and publicly acknowledged the influential contribution to the country's higher welfare made by the American missionary. Old Egypt, the land of the dead, is becoming one of the world's new nations, blessed with a prosperity almost equal to the amazing fertility of its soil.

The Sword of the Prophet.

Cairo is the citadel and cradle of Mohammedanism. Sanguine Christians predict that, as the magnificent Mohammed Ali mosque, which overlooks the entire city, from the summit of the ancient citadel, is now surrounded by the soldiers of a Christian power, so the religion which it represents is bound to succumb to the advance of Christianity. Which is more easily said than done. This is a thoroughly Mohammedan city. The Christian may still hear himself cursed as an unbelieving dog, in the bazars and in the mosques.

What has often been called the largest university in the world, the highest educational institution of Islam is situated here; and when I visited it the sibilant sound of serpentine hate followed me through all the vast inclosure. The books say that there are 10,000 students taking the 12-year course in the El Azhar mosque, although the officials told me that the number is more than 14,000. This is now the fountain head of the force by which Mohammedanism has conquered 232,966,170 of the world's population. The only reason that this force is no longer expressed by the sword, as formerly, is that the great world powers, which are Christians, prevent. Curiously enough, the Christian emperor of Great Britain and India rules over more Mohammedans than any other sovereign. In Egypt there are about 9,000,000 followers of Islam, 720,000 Coptic Christians, and a small scattering of Jews and Protestants.

Studying, Eating, Sleeping in Church.

This Azhar mosque is like only itself. The students, who have come from every part of the Mohammedan world, do not study occidental fashion, in classes and under teachers. I could find no traces of organization whatever. The students—all men, of course, sat, reclined or lay about the floors in nondescript fashion. Occasionally a cluster would have their heads together, swaying to and fro, and repeating some passages aloud and in unison. There were no modern books in evidence whatever. Indeed, this "university" is really a school of theology; it will have nothing to do with the modern sciences or scientific learning. What other universities teach it eschews; and its branches of study would be looked for in vain in any college in Christendom. A man may graduate from the Azhar, and yet be unable to pass an examination in the studies required for admission to an English grammar school. But they know the Koran, and are ready to die for the faith of the prophet.

The mosque is also a lodging house. The students sleep where they study, and apparently they sleep and study when they please. Likewise, they eat where they sleep, after the primitive style of the east. The passing of the occasional tourist arouses sufficient interest to set the students to hissing; but I was more disturbed by the vermin of the place than by these hostile demonstrations, knowing that there is no real danger, since Britain rules with a strong hand.

Ungratefulness of "The Faithful."

The famous "howling Dervishes" of Cairo are no longer to be seen by visitors, because of fanatical outbreaks, and because of the disgusting character of their exhibition. The great flood of tourists in Cairo makes itself felt in this respect, being one of the influences that, imperceptibly, undermine the solidarity of Islam.

My dragoman threw a side light on religious conditions. He assured me that he is a faithful follower of the prophet, keeps the fast of Ramadan, and observes the early prayers—although in our days together I failed to catch him at these. We were rocking across the desert on camels, when in his terse fashion he gave utterance to what is the practical infidelity of many Moslems. "Priests say all Christians go to hell and all Mohammedans go to heaven. I do not believe it. You think good man who has only one face and makes straight talk and gives to the poor, will go to hell because he is a Christian? I do not. You think bad men, who lies, shows two faces and does many wrong things, go to heaven because he is a Mohammedan? I do not. Bad man go to hell; good man go to heaven; do not care what priests say."

Not only the advent of the western spirit, but also the immorality of its followers is weakening Mohammedanism. Cairo is probably the wickedest city in the world, not even Port Said surpassing it. The position of women is indicated by the statement on the part of a Moslem authority, that not five per cent. of the Mohammedan men retain their first wife until death. Divorce is as common as it is easy. The men are grossly and naturally immoral. They drink large quantities of liquor despite the prohibitions of the prophet. Only eight per cent. of the population can read and write. The people are senile and ingenious mendicants. Their religion, which should be intense Mohammedanism, has degenerated into all sorts of superstitions.

A Fat Man's Misery.

Thus, at the entrance to the mosque which is a duplicate of the Mecca mosque, there stand two marble pillars. The belief is that whoever can squeeze between these two pillars is free from evil and sure of paradise. But the person in whose heart evil resides can in no wise get through. Physical form is not taken into account. Our driver was terribly concerned because he could not squeeze through, even after removing various garments. After much effort, and at the risk of ribs, we pulled and pushed him through; and he was straightway as happy as a peasant girl after her confirmation.

No "Holy War."

Frequently the alarm is sounded that a pan-Islamic movement threatens Europe or Asia, and that the green flag of a "holy war" is to be unfurled. Undoubtedly the leaders of Islam are solidifying their forces as thoroughly as possible; and undoubtedly Mohammedanism is the most serious foe to be met by the Christian missionaries. The report, however, that Islam is growing rapidly, and carrying on an aggressive missionary campaign, cannot be verified here. Leading students of Mohammedanism say that they can find no evidence of such a movement. It is as unfounded a report as the rumors of a "holy war." With the present admixture of races and governments and civilizations, it seems the height of improbability that there should ever be a "holy war." The prophet is fighting against the calendar.

None the less, Islam makes it warm for all apostates. Ostracism and persecution—loss of home, friend, social position and means of earning a livelihood—follow the Mohammedan who becomes a Christian. It is frequently asserted that there never has been a genuine convert from Mohammedanism to Christianity. The American mission alone has detailed records of 140 such, as a result of its work since 1854. Not a very large company, it is true, but enough to prove the possibility of wide success.

Sapping and Mining.

Like many other oriental missions, this one of the United Presbyterian church is working for the second and third generation. It plans a long, wide and far-reaching campaign. By many indirect methods, it is inculcating a more tolerant spirit in the community, and removing the ancient prejudice. It is educating the boys and girls, on a scale almost equal to that of the reformed government itself. A recent report showed 15,000 scholars in the schools of this American mission, and 18,000 in all government schools. There are more than 16,000 scholars in the mission schools, of whom about 3,000 are Mohammedans.

The ancient Coptic Christian church, now sadly corrupted, has persisted in Egypt despite all Moslem persecution. Among these the first work of the missionaries was done, and from them come the majority of the 8,639 members reported by the mission. The latter, by the way, has 107 American missionaries, supported by the most aggressively missionary of all denominations in the west, the United Presbyterians.

Where the Holy Family Rested.

The Coptic quarter of old Cairo does not speak well for the thrift and progressiveness of the Coptic. My dragoman gave them a bad reputation for morality. The old church, dating back to the fifteenth century, which covers the crypt where Joseph and Mary rested with the babe in their flight into Egypt, is in sorry disrepair. The priest and his family, who show tourists about are as shameless beggars as any Arab, and quite as arrogant. The priest soberly gave me, as the names of apostles whose pictures are on the wall, a medley of New Testament characters, some of whom no church ever called apostles. The association of the old church building with the holy family renders it one of the chief points of interest in this interesting city.

It is at Cairo that the west touches the east; here most travelers get their first sight of foreign mission work. The old American mission building is directly across the street from the principal hotel, and here reside veteran missionaries who have been in the work for nearly half a century, as well as a fine corps of younger workers. Here is a church, a book store, and schools for both girls and boys.

By the Nile the mission has even greater work. Assiut college enrolls 700 students, and the hospitals at Assiut and Tanta minister respectively to 2,000 and to 200 in-patients annually, and to 20,000 and 10,000 dispensary patients. The praise of this mission's work is in the mouths of natives, travelers and government officials.

ENTIRE STATE WAS IN PAWN.

Nevada Said to Have Been in That Condition Five Years Back.

Five years ago Nevada was a state in pawn. She had been stolen. The entire population was not sufficient to constitute a third-rate western town, and it was decreasing. It might well have been asked then: "What's the matter with Nevada?"

The trouble grew out of Nevada's public land grant, amounting to 2,000,000 acres, which congress had carelessly authorized the state to select as desired. The Nevada legislature practically put the land up at auction, and the result was that a few stockmen bought enough land to shoestring and surround and absolutely control every river, lake and water hole in the state.

By doing so they became virtual possessors of the rest of the state. No one else could use the public land or make settlement because of their control of all the water, and in Nevada water is the life blood of the land. Sixty million acres were controlled and in effect owned by about a million acres, and not an opportunity for a single 160-acre homestead.

Five years ago this was the situation—a hopeless one. Public-spirited men had attempted to induce immigration and to encourage the development of their state, but their work had come to naught and they had to quit. There was no chance.

Yet all the time there was still a great water supply running to waste annually. The perennial flow of the rivers and streams was entirely utilized, but the floods from the melting of the mountain snows swept away uselessly to the sea.

Viewing the situation as it was then, who would have dared to predict that with the passage of the national irrigation act could have occurred the great transformation and development of Nevada, and if it had been predicted, who would have believed it? Of the $37,000,000 government reclamation fund, Nevada has thus far received her fair share, and the completion of the great project upon which the federal engineers are now working will more than quadruple the already increased population of the state.

The first section of the Truckee-Carson project has been completed and the settlers are now farming the fertile land in 80-acre homesteads. By next year 150,000 acres of this project will be under irrigation.—Successful American.

Both Presbyterians.

In the Missouri state prison at Jefferson City are 1,761 prisoners. According to an article in the North American 395 of them are Baptists, 301 Methodists, six Jews and one Christian Scientist.

This calls to mind a story about the late Rev. Dr. John Hall. The good doctor was once walking home from preaching at a Sunday night meeting out in the country. In the moonlight he saw a man lying drunk in the gutter, and going up to him, gave him a shake.

"Here," he said, "it is a shame for a nice, respectable-looking man like you to be lying in the gutter."

The man opened his tipsy eyes and saw the long, black coat.

"Are you a minister?" he asked.

"Yes," said Dr. Hall; "come, get up."

"Presbyterian?" queried the inebriate.

"Yes," was the answer, somewhat impatiently, "I am."

"Then," said the other, "help me up, I'm a Presbyterian myself."

Easy Way to Return Favors.

"If you owe somebody a dinner or something, or an entertainment," remarked the careful man, "the best way I know to return it is to send them complimentary concert tickets somebody has given you. I know a pair of such tickets that did duty six times in the way of returning obligations. I started them, they passed on to five other people, and by jingo! if they finally didn't get back to me."

HELP BUILD STATE

NECESSITY OF PATRONIZING HOME INDUSTRIES.

LOCAL MARKET IMPORTANT

Improvement of Town Must Mean Enhancement in Value of Farm Lands Surrounding It—All Classes Benefited.

There is much to interest the student in economy in the bulletins issued by the government relative to the results of the census of manufactures for the year 1905, and in the reports of the department of labor and commerce pertaining to industry and manufactures.

In 1906 there were 216,262 manufacturing establishments in the United States. In these establishments $12,686,265,673 capital was employed, and work given to 6,470,321 wage-earners. To these wage-earners were paid for the year $2,611,540,532, and the value of the products turned out reached the enormous sum of $14,802,147,087. Among the states New York leads in the amount of capital invested in manufacturing and also in the annual value of products. The year covered by the census report showed that the capital invested in manufacturing in the state of New York was $2,031,459,616, and the value of its manufactured products, $2,488,346,579. Pennsylvania stands second in rank, Illinois third and Massachusetts fourth.

It is interesting to note that the value of the manufactures in the United States for the year 1905 was more than a billion dollars greater than the combined manufactures of the three greatest European manufacturing countries during the year 1900, the latest reliable reports from these countries obtainable. In 1900 the United Kingdom, Germany and France produced manufactured articles to the value of $13,030,000,000. During the past year—1907—it is estimated that the value of American manufactures was approximately $15,000,000,000.

Manufacturing in the United States is mainly confined to a territory which includes the area north of the Potomac and Ohio, and east of the Mississippi river, commonly designated as the New England and Middle states, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Yet every state in the union has its manufacturing plants, and the south is making much headway in cotton and lumber manufacturing, the western states in flour and cereal products, in lumber and in iron and steel, and a little progress in other lines.

One of the noticeable things about manufacturing districts is that though the soil in contiguous country be poor, it is of greater value than like areas in the rich agricultural districts, owing to the manufacturing towns affording a direct—a home market—for all the produce grown. In a speech made before the Fiftieth congress, Hon. William McKinley, our martyred president, said: "The establishment of a furnace or factory or mill in any neighborhood has the effect at once of enhancing the value of all property and all values for miles surrounding it."

Mr. McKinley spoke a truth that should impress itself firmly upon the minds of all good citizens who would see their home place prosper. Wherever there are people there must be a means afforded them to obtain a livelihood. In cities and towns there must be either commerce or manufacturing in order that the town exist. Improvement of the town means enhancement of the farm lands surrounding it.

In the west manufacturing is now only in swaddling clothes. It is no exaggeration to say that nine-tenths of all manufactured articles needed by the people of the great agricultural sections of the west come from other than home factories. There are numerous lines of manufacturing that can never be successfully carried on in some sections of the agricultural United States. There are many other lines for which the west is particularly adapted, and there is no economic reason why these lines should not be manufactured at least in sufficient quantity to supply home needs.

Every citizen should assist his home state by using articles manufactured within it. Many states are carrying on a campaign of education along this line. Preference is always given to home goods, and thus is home industry helped along.

Makes Pertinent Point.

When the mail-order merchants themselves wish to buy goods, you may be assured that they do not purchase them from either description or "cuts," but their buyers must see and carefully inspect the article before it finds its way into the warehouse. If the mail-order concern adopts such measures, why is it not wise for the retail purchaser to do likewise? If they do this, are they quite fair in asking you to make your purchases in a manner that they would not consider for one moment in making theirs?—Pueblo (Colo.) Star-Journal.

Against Sound Economic Laws.

Any system of business that draws from a community the earnings of the people which should be retained to add to the wealth of that community, is a system that should be discouraged. The plans devised by many large concerns to draw trade away from agricultural towns may be legitimate, but are not in harmony with sound economic laws.

EVIL IN LITTLE JEALOUSIES.

Snobbishness on Part of Merchants' Wives Sometimes Injures Trade.

Since the time of Eve women has been accredited with being a jealous creature, and in history are recorded numerous cases where this element has had its influence in building up and tearing down nations. In the average rural town, among the little evils noticed, is that often merchants' wives do not consider the wives of the farmers their equals socially or otherwise. One woman in a town can cast the stigma of snobbishness upon quite a few others who are known as her associates, and sometimes to the detriment of the place. It may be that wives of merchants dress better than do the wives and daughters of farmers. Possibly the children of the town tradesman may wear better clothes. Envy is a knife that cuts deep, and perhaps without apparent reason some woman concludes that the wife of a certain merchant thinks herself better than the wives of the people who give her husband a means of living. It is the women of the farm household who have the greatest influence in the matter of buying. A word from the wife will often turn trade from the usual channel, and this word may be caused by the attitude of the merchants' wife who, through some neglect or discourtesy, unfavorably impresses the wife of the farmer. There is nothing like a friendly feeling as a trade stimulator. If the wife of the merchant would only cultivate more closely the acquaintance and the friendship of the women residing in the farming districts which give the town support, it would work wonders in the way of bringing additional trade to the town. Snobbishness never pays. The sturdy women who reside on farms are quite often the superiors of those who reside in the towns and are perhaps the wives of the merchants. The boys and girls reared on the farm average well with those of the towns. These facts should be realized. Petty jealousies should be done away with when they exist between the people who reside in the towns and those who reside in the country. It is best for the community.

The Country Editor.

If conscientious effort and merit mean anything, there is no good reason why the country editor should not expect to wear a golden crown and a diamond-studded harp in the good world to come. His sphere is surely one in which his usefulness is limited only by his ability to work. It may be a debatable question whether the average editor of a small town paper does more for the town than the town does for the editor. It may be true that one of the greatest sins that can be laid at his door is that of poverty—not poverty of brain but of pocket. He may labor for the enlightenment of an unappreciative people, but is there not compensation in knowing that a duty is faithfully performed? His efforts to boom the town may not always meet with an encouraging response in the way of good advertising patronage from the local business interests. His work of showing up his town as a live and progressive place sometimes falls flat because of a lack of good snappy advertising of the stores. There are few things that are a better criterion of the life of a place than the advertising pages of the local paper. By it a stranger is impressed either favorably or otherwise. If the paper is bright, newsy, well filled with advertising, there are in it indications that the town is progressive, the merchants prosperous, and that the people are of the class that make excellent neighbors. On the other hand, if there are only a few lines of local news, half a dozen small cards and announcements, and a few large advertisements of department stores and mail order houses in other cities, the impression is given to the reader that the town is a good place to steer clear of, and not the kind of place where one would care to build a home. D. M. CARR.

Educate Customers.

If local merchants would all follow the example of the mail order houses and educate their possible customers to the fact that they have the same goods, or better, at prices that are as low or lower and guarantee "satisfaction or refund," the mail order houses would be driven out of business, except in communities very remote from sources of supply.

It is within the power of the advertising man of every retail store to build up the business of his house by just such methods. The merchant who does not see the possibilities of advertising properly done is a square peg in a round hole and can offer no good excuse for posing as a business man.—Store News.

Builds Up All Business.

Money paid to workmen in a town finds its way through business channels to those who will use it in further upbuilding the place. Every enterprise that means the employment of labor is desirable for a town; but how much more important than to bring new industries into a place is the matter of building up and protecting those already established? A small factory may have a payroll amounting to $15 or $20 a day. If these $16 or $20 are sent to a foreign city for goods little benefits are gained by the town. It is the keeping of the earnings of the laborers and others at home that counts in making a place wealthy.

Postmaster-General Meyer is almost as enthusiastic for the establishment of the parcels post as are the Chicago big mail-order houses, which want to get trade away from country and village merchants.—Newburgh (N. Y.) News.

SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

An interesting compilation of baseball figures is given by the Spalding baseball record for 1908. In this an All-American baseball team is picked, based on the records of the players during their best years in the big leagues. The list follows: A. G. Spalding pitched 63 games in 1875 for the Bostons. His winning percentage was .899, his fielding average .868 and batting .312 for 96 games. Capt. A. C. cago Cubs, is the catcher. In 1906 his fielding average was .982 and his batting .312 for 96 games. Capt. A. C. Anson, Chicago, is taken for first base. In 83 games in 1881 he fielded .975 and batted .399. Ross Barnes, with Boston in 1873, is the second baseman. He worked in 60 games with a fielding average of .845 and a batting mark of .453. Harry Steinfeldt of Chicago is the third baseman. He was used in 150 games in 1906 and fielded .954 and batted .327. Hughey Jennings, the Detroit manager, is chosen for short because of his work with Baltimore in 1896. He played 131 games, fielded .943 and batted .386. Joe Kelley, also of Baltimore, is picked for left field. Kelley in 1894 was in 192 games and had a fielding mark of .951 and a batting average of .391. Center field goes to Hugh Duffy, who, with Boston in 1893, worked in 131 games with a fielding average of .958 and a batting mark of .378. Right field is reserved for Willis Keeler for his Baltimore performance in 1896, when in 127 games he fielded .973 and batted .392. When with Brooklyn in 1889 Keeler, playing center field, had a record of .970 in the field and .376 at bat. As he had a higher record as a right fielder he was moved in the make-up of the All-Star team and the place at center given to Duffy.

It is in the nature of a coincidence that the first name of the world's two greatest jockeys is Walter. Walter Miller leads all other riders in the United States, and Walter Higgs the knights of the saddle in England. Miller's rivals in this country are J. Lee, Puddin McDaniel, E. Dugan, Shilling, Nicol, Moreland, Preston, Koerner and Notter. Higgs of England won a total in stakes of $268,595, and this was the result of 146 wins. Second to Higgs came Danny Maher, both in races and the total amount won, the respective figures being 114 and $250,675. W. Halsey was third with 103 wins, the total being $223,160. Johnny Reiff and Lucien Lyne also figure on the list. Following are the figures given in English money:

Western golfing forces will mobilize this year at the Rock Island Arsenal Golf club for the amateur championship battle. The military course was an easy winner in its duel with the Kent Country club at the annual meeting of the Western Golf association at Chicago recently, being awarded the tournament by a vote of 66 to 15. The open championship was awarded to the Normandie club of St. Louis, which practically was the only bidder, as an offer from the Chicago Golf club was made only in case of an emergency.

Congressmen Listen to Suggestions

WASHINGTON.—If one is inclined to doubt whether the American people are interested in the proceedings of congress he should become a reader of the Congressional Record and note the number of petitions and memorials that come up to the legislative body daily from every section of the country. From two to four pages of every day's Record are filled with the suggestions from the people. And it may be said that congress is disposed to listen to these petitions and memorials. There was a time when such communications were treated lightly. Not so now. The first thing every senator and representative does when he reaches his office in the morning is to have his secretary compile the advice that has come in from constituents during the last 24 hours. The documents are then presented to the senate or house as the case may be, are printed in the Record and then referred to the appropriate committee. Committees, too, have come to pay heed to these petitions and memorials. The written suggestions that come in are looked upon as a sort of barometer to public sentiment. And what member of congress is not always anxious to learn the drift of public sentiment in his district touching any public question?

An examination of the files of the senate and house shows that the petitions and memorials come from all kinds of people. It frequently occurs that more than 10,000 names are represented on the petitions that reach the senate in a single day.

Over in the house the petitions are even more numerous. From 1,000 to 15,000 names are represented on the petitions that reach that body daily during the first weeks of congress.

Senate Investigation from Car Window

A YEAR and four months after the United States senate decided that some investigating ought to be done into the way customs revenues were coming in at New York the clerk of the senate finance committee awoke one bright morning and determined to act at once. He, A. B. Shelton, did so. He took a trip to Providence, R. I. (August 4 to 7, 1907, inclusive), and charged it to the government. The total, including "carriage hire, car fare, telephones and baggage," cost the government $45.50.

Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island is chairman of the finance committee and Mr. Shelton is his secretary. Providence, R. I., is given in the congressional directory as Senator Aldrich's home.

This trip to Providence was duly entered in the itemized list of "receipts and expenditures of the senate." "On business of the senate finance committee" is the way it appears in the record "under authority of senate resolution of March 3, 1905."

On September 5, 1906, A. B. Shelton again bethought him of the New York customs revenue, and resolved to act with vigor. So he took another flying trip to Providence, R. I. This time it cost the senate contingent fund $51.05.

On October 3, A. B. Shelton happened to think of going to New York on his way to Providence, R. I., to investigate the revenue receipts, and accordingly took a three-day trip to Providence "via New York." Cost, $46.10.

On November 4 Mr. Shelton tried the scheme of investigating the revenue receipts by going first to Providence, R. I., and returning on the third day "via New York city." Cost, $54.65.

On December 5 the experiment of going direct to Providence and returning through New York was repeated. It must have been a success, for it took but two days to be back in Washington, and it cost the government but $43.75.

But on January 3, 1907, the first method of investigating New York's customs revenues—namely, from the car window—was resumed, and Mr. Shelton ran on to Providence and back without disembarking in wicked Gotham. Cost to Uncle Sam, $36.95.

Now, isn't it funny that Mr. Aldrich's secretary should have to go to Providence, R. I., every time he wanted to investigate the New York customs revenues? And isn't it funny that an investigation authorized in March, 1905, should not begin until August, 1906? And should not cease until January, 1907? And should not then produce any report?

White House Aids Have No Sinecures

FROM the concessions of a man with army connections it may be said that all is not joy with the military and naval attaches of the American service who are on duty in Washington with White House duties as side issues of the regular routine. The places of aids to the president, social aids Washington calls them, are much sought, but it is declared that after a few months of it most of the social staff officers get tired unto death of their work and long for the sound of "boots and saddles" at a frontier post or a march order in the Philippines.

It must not be supposed that the military and naval aids of the president have nothing to do except to attend him personally when he is giving official receptions at the White House.

President Roosevelt is the easiest man in the world to get along with, so all the aids say, and they are tied to him in affection, but notwithstanding this one is told confidentially that the aids think their part in the social doings is a little undignified. At a big reception they have to open an aisle through the throng of people and then march ahead of the president like trumpeters who are sounding a march.

House to Have a "Homespun Brigade"

THEY are going to form a "homespun brigade" in the house and go back to first principles. Representative Wyatt Aiken of South Carolina is the organizer of the brigade. During the Fifty-ninth congress Mr. Aiken came up from his home in Abbeville with his rotund figure clad in an old-fashioned homespun suit. One day he was passing through the speaker's lobby and encountered "Uncle Joe" Cannon.

"Aiken," said the speaker, "where the devil did you get that jeans? Do you know, I haven't seen any of that cloth since I was a boy in North Carolina."

Mr. Aiken explained that an old woman in his district had made it, and the next time he went back to South Carolina he brought back a bolt of cloth and presented it to the speaker. "Uncle Joe" had it made into a suit which made him the envy of every man in the house. Since that time Mr. Aiken has been able to get recognition and postoffices whenever he wanted them, but he has been besieged by a score of members for cloth enough to "make a suit like Uncle Joe's."

Last spring when he went home he engaged the old woman to make all the homespun she could during the summer. The result was three suitings. These Mr. Aiken brought up to Washington and presented to Representative Ryan of New York, Representative Lee of Georgia and Representative Griggs of Georgia. These three, with the speaker and Mr. Aiken, will form the charter membership of the "homespun brigade." Other applicants will be admitted when the old woman turns out some more jeans. It is costing Mr. Aiken a lot for uniforms, but he doesn't mind that for he gets everything else he wants.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

WOULD PAY EX-PRESIDENTS

Senator James B. McCreary of Kentucky, who proposes to pay all our ex-presidents (we have only one) a salary of $10,000 a year and have them serve on all international exposition commissions, is one of the best examples of tenacity in American public life. He had been for over 30 years a leader in Democratic politics in Kentucky.

Senator McCreary is an imperialist in a sense; he is no parochial politician with an outlook bounded by the limits of his native town. In the 12 years he sat in the lower house of congress he had more to do with international questions than probably any other man. He devised the scheme of uniting North, South and Central America with a railway; and if there is ever a road built to connect Hudson's bay with the Straits of Magellan it will be a monument to his memory. He was the author of the resolution declaring against European control of any canal in American territory connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific. He fathered the bill authorizing the president to retaliate upon foreign vessels for injuries to American fishing vessels. He was the author of two bills to settle international disagreements concerning the fur-bearing seals of the Behring sea. He was the organizer of the Pan-American medical congress, which met in Washington in 1896. He brought about the passage of some important amendments to the Geary Chinese exclusion law and some legislation concerning Hawaii. Finally he may be regarded as the father of the new navy, for it was due to a ruling of his that the construction of that navy was made possible.

FIGHTS SENATOR PENROSE

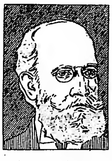
William Flinn, who has entered the lists against United States Senator Boies Penrose as the Republican leader in Pennsylvania, claims to be actuated only by altruistic motives. He does not want to succeed Penrose as senator, he says, but he objects to Penrose on the ground that his leadership has served only to perpetuate the tyranny established by "Mat" Quay, and that the public interests demand a new leader.

Penrose is the son of wealthy parents, and his way in life has been made smooth for him, while Flinn is the son of poor Irish immigrants, and had to fight his own battles. He is said to be worth $15,000,000 now, but be that as it may, he began life with nothing, he inherited nothing, and has never been charged with cheating anybody. The one man was sent to college and received a classical education, the other got his education in the public schools, and supplemented his slender stock of learning by his own efforts in later days.

Flinn was elected to the state legislature in 1878, serving three terms in the house and three in the senate. For 18 years he was delegate to every Republican state convention, and to five successive national Republican conventions.

It has been said of Flinn that he is an intermittent reformer, but even that is something more than is claimed for his opponent. It was Flinn who led the revolt against Quay during the session of 1899. Flinn is a man who was born to fight. He has the reputation of never saying yes when he means no.

FAVORS NEW CANAL



Frederick C. Stevens, superintendent of public works of New York state, seems to have a mania for canal building. In his official capacity he has charge of the building of the new Erie canal, which is to cost $101,000,000; he is the financial backer of William J. Oliver, contractor for the Panama canal, and now he is urging the United States government to join with the state of New York in building a new canal from Lake Ontario to the Hudson river, to place New York city in direct communication with the great lakes, enabling that city to retain its supremacy as a shipping port, a supremacy that will be threatened by Montreal if the Canadian government's Georgian Bay-Ottawa river canal goes through. If the United States acts on his advice, it is quite likely that Mr. Stevens will have direction of the construction of the newest canal, and thus be intimately connected with three of the greatest engineering enterprises of the kind in the world.

Mr. Stevens never sought the position he holds in New York state; it was thrust upon him by Gov. Hughes. Being a multi-millionaire, he took a merely academic interest in politics, and served a few terms in the state senate. He was instrumental in getting a reduction of the price of gas for the people of New York and compelling insurance reforms, and would have compelled an investigation of state banking but for the combined influences of the money power. It was resolved that so dangerous a man had to be crushed, and Congressman James W. Wadsworth, son-in-law of the late Secretary Hay and defender in congress of the Chicago packers, got Mr. Stevens' district gerrymandered in such a way as to oust him. Stevens is a mild-mannered man, but when the treachery was disclosed to him he vowed to have Wadsworth's scalp, and he got it.

OLDEST EX-CONGRESSMAN

Gen. Ephraim R. Eckley of Carrollton, Ohio, is the oldest living ex-member of congress. He is now 96 and remains in vigorous health, mentally alert and interested in all that is doing in state and national politics. He never misses a local or state convention of the Republican party, and for many years has been a notable figure at national conventions either as a delegate or as a spectator.

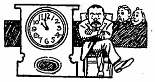
He has lived under the administrations of every president save Washington, Adams and Jefferson. He cast his first vote when Jackson was a candidate for president and has never missed voting even at a primary contest in his home village. He remembers the report of Napoleon's downfall at Waterloo, and wondered at the time what it was all about. Later on, when Napoleon's death at St. Helena was reported, the future congressman understood.

Gen. Eckley did not seek office until 1843, when he was elected to the state senate as a whig. Six years later he was again chosen to the senate, and later to the lower branch of the legislature. Then he was on the ticket with Sam F. Vinton as a candidate for lieutenant governor but was defeated. In 1853 the whigs of Ohio picked Eckley as the candidate for United States senator, but failed of election. Upon the downfall of the old whig party he became active in the organization of the Republican party and was a delegate to the first convention at Philadelphia in 1856, when Fremont was made the nominee.

TALK OF NEW YORK

Gossip of People and Events Told in Interesting Manner.

Wedding Reconciles the Vanderbilts

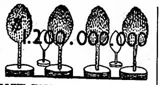


NEW YORK.—Not the least interesting part of the recent union of Gladys Vanderbilt and Count Laszlo Szechenyi of Hungary, so far as New York society is concerned, was the belated reconciliation which was made known when Cornelius Vanderbilt consented at the eleventh hour and under much pressure to lend formal sanction to the alliance by giving away the bride. This action restores him to his rightful position as head of the Vanderbilt family, an honor that was taken from him by his father years ago when he married Miss Grace Wilson. The eldest son had stood out strongly against the mother and sister and had refused to consider the young Hungarian nobleman as a suitor for his sister's hand. It was feared that his uncompromising Americanism would mar the wedding and open the breach still wider between Cornelius Vanderbilt and his family.

It is known that neither Alfred nor Reginald favored the match, but their opposition was not so manifest and pronounced as that of the eldest son. Reginald, the third son, is accredited with having acted as the chief agent in bringing about the formal reconciliation. Mrs. Vanderbilt, despite the strongly expressed aversion of her late husband to an international alliance, was her daughter's chief ally throughout the preliminary arrangements.

The question of the size of the countess' dot is still a matter of eager speculation. It was currently reported and believed that a settlement of $5,000,000 had been made upon the young Hungarian nobleman. This was emphatically denied, however, by the count's brothers and by his attorney. They maintained that his own income of $60,000 a year is all that he requires or desires, and that the marriage was the result solely of a love match.

City Parks Are Worth Over a Billion



NEW YORK CITY has one of the greatest public park systems in the world in extent, and the finest in convenience for the use of the people and natural and artificial beauties.

Records of the city department of parks give interesting figures and general information unknown by many of the residents of the city. It is estimated that the public playgrounds, the open places that are not only in bodies of many acres, but in small plots of green that are lungs for the great congested districts of the metropolis, are worth as vacant real estate $1,200,000,000. This enormous amount in value is tied up in land for the health and pleasure of more than 4,000,000 of inhabitants of the five boroughs and friends who may visit them and strangers who come to the city.

It is shown that the original cost of these parks, which number 113, was about $66,466,000, and they are worth now nearly 20 times as much as at the dates of their purchase. Take for illustration Union, Madison, Tompkins and Washington squares. They cost respectively $116,051 in 1883, $65,952 in 1847, $693,358 in 1834 and $77,970 in 1827, or $363,331 in all, and now real estate experts say that they are worth $20,000,000.

These numerous parks vary in size as much as they vary in location, from a small fraction of an acre at the junction of streets to 1,766 acres in Pelham Bay park, the most extensive park in the city, and forming a grand and magnificent system through the Parkway that connects it with Bronx park, of 661 acres, which, in its turn, is connected on the west by Mosholu Parkway with Van Cortlandt park, of 1,132 acres.

Manhattan, with its more congested population, naturally has the most parks, which number 48, with magnificent Central park, containing 843 acres, leading, as it leads the world. Brooklyn borough, with 38 parks, comes next, with Prospect park of 516 acres at the head of the list. The Bronx has the greatest park acreage, with 17 parks; then comes Queens with seven, followed by Richmond with three.

Rich Capitalists Turn Bootblacks

AN indication of the important part that the nickels and dimes of the public play in the everyday life of this metropolis is the leasing of the bootblacking privileges in the new twin McAdoo terminal buildings, on Cortlandt street, for 12 years at a rental aggregating $124,000. This is at the rate of $10,333.33 1-3 a year.

To handle the apparently insignificant job of shining the shoes of the permanent and transient population of this immense building a corporation called the Hudson Terminal Bootblacking Company has been formed. The names of the men who are putting up the money have not been made public, but they are capitalists who have figured in deals involving millions.

To earn merely the rent the industrious polishers of shoes in the corridors will have to serve 103,333 persons a year. Added to this they must earn the outlay for wages, brushes, cloths, blacking and other materials and tools before the profits begin to come in.

The backers of the syndicate figure, however, that they will have no difficulty in making a big winning on their investment.

The population of the offices in the building will be 11,000 persons. How many will pass through the corridors to and from the trains is a question that experience must settle, but, basing their figures on the ferry-boat travel, the bootblack promoters figure that at least 2,000,000 shoes will pass under the hands of their polishers in the first year.

Flowers Served from a Wheelbarrow

MRS. JOHN JACOB ASTOR gave a dance the other night at which she taught the Four Hundred that the newest way to serve flowers as favors is from the depth of an old-fashioned wheelbarrow.

So many guests were invited and so many innovations had been provided that Mrs. Astor used both her own mansion, at 840 Fifth avenue, and that of Col. Astor's mother, next door. After Sherry had served luncheon at midnight in a dining room decorated with myriads of pink roses, American Beauties and lilies, Mrs. Astor began the distribution of the most costly set of favors given to guests at any social function in New York this winter.

Out of the first box popped rose wands for the women and golden cigarette lighters for the men; from the second came forth French novelties in precious gems with silver pencils for the males. Then came brocaded boxes and bags and brocaded match safes and more trinkets in the finer metals until each guest bore a small load.

Finally a footman, farmer-dressed, wheeled into the big drawing room the gigantic wheelbarrow, smothered in smilax so that not a particle of the wood or iron framework could be seen. From this rustic flower bed guests picked bouquets of lilacs and lilies of the valley and great boutonnieres of the same flowers tied with white silk ribbon as the footman wheeled the ancient vehicle from group to group.

After this there was dancing until early morning, which furnished Mrs. Astor with another opportunity for her inventive genius. As the guests were preparing to depart they were served with the second collation of the function—in reality a buffet breakfast because of the lateness of the hour.

Women Speculators in Wall Street.

The number of women speculators is amazingly large—much larger than even the ordinary Wall street habitue would imagine. It is not commonly known, but it is a fact that many brokerage houses maintain private rooms for their women customers, with more often than not, private entrances. There are several reasons for this. One is that many women who speculate do so secretly, without the knowledge of their family, their relatives or their friends. On this account they desire privacy, desire to move and have their Wall street being unknown. Another reason, says W. R. Givens, in the World To-Day, is that the broker himself desires it, principally, be it confessed, because he is anxious that if there be any "scenes" they shall be private ones, "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife"—and sight. For truth compels the statement that women are poorer losers than men. It is the testimony of conservative brokers that a woman gambler is much more of a gambler than a man—much more, that is, in absorbing tenaciousness and almost vindictiveness. She seems to be carried out of and beyond herself to a degree that becomes uncomfortably disquieting when she loses. Even when she is a winner and, as I have said, the proportion of winners to losers among women is about one to twenty, there seems to be in her satisfaction a kind of maliciousness that is not good to see.

Before the Central American conference dissolved it added to its long list of memorable achievements the adoption of a measure that, if carried into effect, will do more, even, than the arbitration agreements to insure peace in the five republics. Revolutions are the bane of those countries, and they are too often successful because they are aided by citizens of an adjoining republic. Ambitious revolutionaries who have failed are safe as soon as they have passed into another country. The man who has succeeded in overturning a government and has announced himself as dictator or president is immediately recognized by the governments of the neighboring states. Now all this is to be changed. Revolution is to be discouraged, and one republic is not to be even neutral when a revolt breaks out in an adjoining country, but is to be actively hostile. No republic is to recognize as president of another republic any man who has not reached the position by the ordinary method of a regular election.

One of the reasons why "collecting" appeals to so many persons, of such different temperament and position, is undoubtedly the element of chance in it—the possibility of coming unexpectedly upon some great treasure. The matter is well illustrated by the story of a postage stamp which has just been added to a famous western collection. The stamp is what is known as a "postmaster's provisional," and was issued in Alexandria, Va., in 1847. Three or four copies of the same stamp, printed on buff paper, were already known, but this one is printed on blue, and is unique. The stamp was on an old letter which had been preserved merely for family associations. The owner of it chanced to show it to a New York collector, who was honest enough to tell her that it was of considerable value. Another collector, an old friend of the family, offered $200 for it; but the family lawyer succeeded in selling it for $4,000. Packages of old letters sometimes, although not often, become magic purses.

That decision of Lord Curzon, lately viceroy of India, to enter the house of lords because his physician says he cannot stand the strenuous duties of membership in the popular branch of the British parliament is something that cuts both ways. Interpreted in the way which most will be inclined to accept, it means that life in the lords is "easy," so far as political effort is concerned, and when a man goes there it is rather for rest than for work. It will not be remarkable if those who are so strongly opposed to the maintenance of the house of lords as a legislative body and check upon the house of commons shall find an effective argument in this incident. If the upper house is so useless why tolerate it? A good many Englishmen will probably reason after that fashion.

The "white plague" is no respecter of position or power. The alarming report comes from Japan that the heir to the throne has developed consumption and that a famous European specialist has been sent for to treat him.

M. Metchnikoff, the scientist, says people who want to live long should drink milk and refrain from worrying. And yet, after all we have read about milk, it is difficult to see how anyone can drink it and not worry.

"IT'S AN ILL WIND—"

BOY TRAMPS HOLD MEETING

EXCLUDED BY HOBOES, THE LADS HAVE OWN CONVENTION.

"Kids" from Various Cities Tell Their Experiences and Give Advice to Others.

St. Louis. — Boy tramps who were drawn here by the national convention of the unemployed, now in session, and who were not permitted in the councils, which were limited to "hoboes," held a meeting Friday at which addresses were made by men of reputation among the wanderers.

"Kansas City Kid" was the guest of honor, because his "moniker" (monogram) is on more water tanks than that of any other traveler, and short speeches, brimful of advice, were delivered by other well-known tramps.

"New Haven Kid" contrasted conditions in the east and west and said his experience had been that a tramp is more liable to arrest in the east than the west. "Kid Murphy" of Springfield, Ill., advised against the use of "white line" (alcohol and water), saying it caused many hold-ups. "Jersey Red," who recently returned from Africa, advised tramps to keep away from the sea, because they had to work hard on ships. "Chi Kid VI," with pathos in his voice, told of 22 arrests in two months and advised the boys never to get off trains in front of stations, and recited the advantages of a "good front."

"Gen." J. S. Coxey urged the tramps to settle down that they might be voters by the time his bill came up in congress.

Rev. John Ellis and Dr. Reitman, who styles himself "King of Tramps," also spoke, urging the tramps to become "hoboes" and seek after work.

YARMOUTH MARRIAGE ANNULLED

Alice Thaw Freed from Earl by British Divorce Court.

London.—Sir Birrell Barnes, president of the divorce court Wednesday granted the countess of Yarmouth, who was Miss Alice Thaw, of Pittsburg, a decree nullifying her marriage to the earl of Yarmouth. The case was heard in private. At the time fixed for the commencement of the proceedings every one not actually engaged on the case was excluded from the court room. The case was practically undefended, and the hearing lasted for only half an hour. The countess, attired in a fashionable black gown, was present, but the earl of Yarmouth was not in court.

The earl of Yarmouth did not defend the case, his lawyer satisfying himself with pointing out that the evidence of the doctor removed any stigma placed upon the earl by the evidence of the plaintiff and that there was no ground upon which the countess could have sued for divorce. The judge pronounced his decree, annulling the marriage without comment. In the ordinary course of events it will be made absolute in six months. No mention was made of a marriage settlement, and it was learned from an authoritative source that, contrary to certain published statements, the question of revising the settlement has not been discussed by the principals or their solicitors and that it is not likely to be discussed. The brevity of the proceedings came as a surprise to everybody except those engaged on the case.

Woman Attorney Wins Case.

St. Paul, Minn.—Miss Elsia Williams, the first woman attorney who ever pleaded before the supreme court of Minnesota, won her case Friday when the supreme court affirmed the judgment of the Ramsay county district court in the proceedings for contempt brought against Robert C. Holbert. The case involved a judgment given for the defendant in an action brought by the receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings. Holbert was charged with contempt, but the lower court dismissed the proceedings.

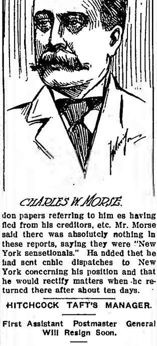
DENIES THAT HE RAN AWAY.

C. W. Morse Interviewed on Board the Campania.

Queenstown.—A correspondent of the Associated Press Friday night boarded the Cunard line steamer Campania and found Charles W. Morse of New York in the smoking room enjoying a game of cards.

Without a moment's hesitation Mr. Morse granted an interview to the correspondent.

He was shown extracts from London papers referring to him as having fled from his creditors, etc. Mr. Morse said there was absolutely nothing in these reports, saying they were "New York sensationals." He added that he had sent cable dispatches to New York concerning his position and that he would rectify matters when he returned there after about ten days.



CHARLES W. MORSE.

HITCHCOCK TAFT'S MANAGER.

First Assistant Postmaster General Will Resign Soon.

Washington. — Announcement was made Friday of the approaching retirement from the postal service of Frank H. Hitchcock, first assistant postmaster general. Mr. Hitchcock will assume the management of the campaign of Secretary Taft for the Republican nomination to the presidency.

The exact date of the retirement has not been determined definitely, but it probably will be about February 15.

Mr. Hitchcock will be succeeded as first assistant postmaster general by Dr. Charles P. Grandfield, who, for a little more than two years, has been chief of the bureau over which Mr. Hitchcock presides. Dr. Grandfield has been actively identified with the postal service for about 20 years and is widely known and highly esteemed, personally and officially.

May Move Thaw to Poughkeepsie.

Fishkill Landing. — With the purpose of seeking an asylum more congenial to Harry Thaw than Matteawan state hospital, where he is now under observation, Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and Daniel O'Reilly, one of Thaw's counsel, will inspect the insane asylum in Poughkeepsie next Monday. Mrs. Thaw and Mr. O'Reilly visited Thaw Friday, when the contemplated visit to Poughkeepsie was discussed.

LAID IN ROYAL TOMB

FINAL ACT IN BLOODY TRAGEDY OF PORTUGAL TAKES PLACE.

FUNERAL IS IMPRESSIVE

Manuel and the Queens Unable to Follow Coffin on Foot—Franco Arrives at Bordeaux.

Lisbon.—The simple but impressive funeral services Saturday were the final act in the bloody tragedy of the royal family. All the arrangements for the solemn march through the city and the ceremonies at the Church of San Vincente were carried out.

Although it is the ancient custom in Portugal for the new sovereign to walk behind the coffin of the dead monarch, as King Carlos did when his father was buried, neither of the queens nor the boy king was able to endure this trying ordeal. Additional troops were brought into Lisbon to accompany the cortege and line the route of march.

Many Floral Tributes.

The last of the special foreign missions to attend the funerals arrived in Lisbon Friday night and hundreds of floral tributes were received at the palace. Practically every government was represented. Charles Page Bryan, the American minister, sent two wreaths, one to King Manuel, with expressions of the most profound sorrow of President Roosevelt and the American people, and the other to Queen Amelia, conveying the heartfelt regrets of the American nation. The bodies of the king and the crown prince were viewed by the members of the diplomatic corps Friday afternoon as they lay in the royal chapel.

Every hour during the day masses were said at the altars in the palace chapel and, according to tradition, priests prayed before the caskets, sprinkled them with holy water and burned insense. The principal mass of the day was celebrated by the Papal Nuncio. It was attended by King Manuel and Queen Amelie and the members of the diplomatic corps in uniform and the gentlemen and ladies of the court.

Franco at Bordeaux.

Bordeaux.—Senhor Franco arrived here Friday. The former premier of Portugal brought a large amount of baggage with him. A group of newspaper men awaited him at the station, but when they stepped up he waved them away with a gesture of weariness and ignored the questions they asked him. He walked quickly to his hotel.

The face of the man is haggard and he appears to be pre-occupied. He looks constantly to the right and to the left, as if he felt he should be prepared to forestall some impending physical danger.

Senhor Franco told the manager of the hotel that he would remain over night, as he wished to change his Portuguese money into French money, having none of the latter. He did not say where he purposed going Saturday. The hotel was guarded all night by the police.

ICE DEALERS SENT TO JAIL.

Three Prominent Toledo Men Given Six Months.

Toledo, O. — Roland Beard and Compton Leamen of the Hygeia Ice Company and Joseph Miller, manager of the Toledo Ice and Coal Company, were Tuesday sentenced to six months in the county jail and to pay costs of prosecution by Judge Kinkade for conspiracy in restraint of trade.

These men were found guilty last July and at that time Judge Kinkade sentenced each of them to six months in the workhouse and to pay $2,500 fine. The case was appealed and a few days ago the supreme court handed down a decision declaring the convicted men could be sent to jail, but not to the workhouse. They were remanded to the common pleas court for resentence and while the fine was not assessed the workhouse sentence was changed to the county jail.

No further effort will be made in behalf of the defendants. They at once began their term of sentence. All the men are of prominent Toledo families.

Shoots at Train, Wounds Woman.

Mount Vernon, Ill.—Mrs. P. H Hough, wife of the superintendent of the Beardstown division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, was shot in the head and seriously wounded Wednesday by John Rutherford, a 13-year-old boy, who took a shot at the Burlington train on which Mrs. Hough was a passenger.

SON SLAYS JUDGE HARGIS

NOTORIOUS KENTUCKY FEUDIST KILLED AFTER QUARREL.

Victim Long Prominent in Politics and Had Been Accused of Complicity in Many Murders.

Jackson, Ky.—Former County Judge James Hargis, for many years member of the state Democratic executive committee, accused of complicity in many murders and a prominent figure in the feuds which have disrupted Breathitt county for several years, was shot and instantly killed in his general store here about 3:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon by his son, Beach Hargis.

The son fired five shots in rapid succession at his father, who fell dead while his clerks were waiting on customers.

The exact cause of the murder has not been learned, but it is supposed to have been the result of differences which have existed between father and son for some time. The two men are reported to have had a severe quarrel several months ago, when the father, it is alleged, was compelled to resort to violence to restrain his son.

Young Hargis, it is said, has been drinking heavily of late. He came into the store late in the afternoon and was apparently under the influence of liquor. Judge Hargis, it is said, spoke to his son about his drinking and a quarrel resulted. Father and son stepped behind a counter in the store, when the son, after only a few minutes' conversation, drew a revolver and fired five shots. Four took effect, the noted mountain character falling dead. The young woman stenographer and the customers in the store rushed for the doors and fled in fright.

Young Hargis was arrested by the town marshal and Grover Blanton and placed in jail. He was raving like a maniac and the officers were compelled to drag him to jail.

Judge Hargis had been for years a prominent figure in Kentucky in political and criminal circles. He had figured in the courts in the mountains for years on account of the murders of Dr. Cox, Attorney Marcum and James Cockrill.

NIGHT RIDERS TERRORIZE.

Destroy Tennessee Barns and Wound Several Persons.

Adams, Tenn. — Night riders, well armed and mounted, visited the farms of Hugh C. Lawrence and Wash T. Vicker, within three miles of this place, destroyed the barns on both farms, together with 20,000 pounds of tobacco, shot and wounded Lawrence and his son Bradley Lawrence, and whipped a negro named Motlow unmercifully.

The riders first visited the farm of Lawrence. He and his son were in the barn loading their tobacco on wagons and heard the night riders coming. They came out of the barn and started toward the house, and when within 15 or 20 yards of the house they met ten or a dozen of the riders and at once opened fire on them. They returned the fire, wounding Lawrence in the cheek and hand, and his son in the leg.

The raiders retreated at the Lawrences' first fire, but rallied with some ten or fifteen reenforcements and renewed the attack, firing 70 or 80 shots through the windows of his house, where he and son had retreated after emptying their weapons. The Lawrences returned the fire, but no casualties occurred. Mrs. Lawrence, who was in the house, narrowly escaped being struck by the flying bullets.

Country in Grip of Storm.

Chicago.—A sleetstorm which turned to rain Wednesday seriously affected telegraphic communication between Chicago and many outside cities, especially in the west. St. Louis, Omaha and Kansas City were entirely cut off from the east during the early hours by a sleetstorm which surrounded St. Louis and extended into Iowa. In Chicago the storm affected much of the transportation in rush hours. Electric railroads were the principal sufferers.

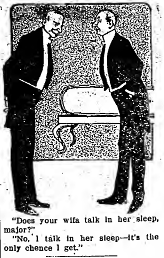
HIS ONLY OPPORTUNITY.



"Does your wife talk in her sleep, major?"

"No, I talk in her sleep—it's the only chance I get."

SHE COULD NOT WALK

For Months—Burning Humor on Ankles—Opiates Alone Brought Sleep—Eczema Yielded to Cuticura.

"I had eczema for over two years. I had two physicians, but they only gave me relief for a short time and I cannot enumerate the ointments and lotions I used to no purpose. My ankles were one mass of sores. The itching and burning were so intense that I could not sleep. I could not walk for nearly four months. One day my husband said I had better try the Cuticura Remedies. After using them three times I had the best night's rest in months unless I took an opiate. I used one set of Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills, and my ankles healed in a short time. It is now a year since I used Cuticura, and there has been no return of the eczema. Mrs. David Brown, Locke, Ark., May 18 and July, 13, 1907."

The Prevailing Excuse.

"Jedge," said the prisoner, who had been caught with a chicken in a sack, "you oughter go easy with me."

"Why? You stole the hen."

"I admits it, jedge; I admits it," responded the prisoner. "But it's solemn truf dat hen jest seemed to be my affinity; yes, sah!"

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

To Fight the Lid.

St. Paul.—An organization representing business interests which are injured by the enforcement of the 11 o'clock lid has come into the field with the avowed intention of resisting the efforts of the anti-saloon element in its campaign for radical restriction and at the same time for the purpose of purging the saloon business of many evils which exist to-day. The name of the new body, which was organized at Elks' hall, is the Traveling Men's Liberty League of Minnesota and is composed of traveling men representing business interests allied to the wholesale and retail liquor trade. Although wholesale and retail liquor interests are not directly identified with the league, it was stated by a retail dealer that the body is an amalgamation of all interests. The body does not actually include in its membership wholesale and retail liquor dealers, but their support, it is said, will be given in the campaign to be made by the league.

Teachers to Organize.

Moorhead.—The Commercial Club of Moorhead is co-operating in the efforts which are being made by a number of educators in this section of the state of Minnesota for the organization of an association similar to the Northwestern Minnesota Educational association, which usually meets in Crookston. The start for this move was brought about at an informal gathering of school men from Clay county and adjoining counties during the meeting of the state educational association at St. Paul in December. Mr. Richards of the Commercial club will appoint a committee to take the initial steps in the arrangements for a big meeting of school teachers in Moorhead March 13 and 14. The proposed association probably will comprise an area covering Clay, Becker and adjoining counties.

Homestead Plan.

Crookston.—The Crookston Twenty-five Thousand Commercial club is planning on an aggressive campaign for an increase in the population of the Red River valley during the coming summer, and A. D. Stephens and other members of the club have formed a unique plan to induce actual settlers to come to this vicinity.

Valley land has become so valuable in the last few years because of the great demand for it that a great deal of it was snapped up and now is being held by speculators. Senator Stephens' plan is to get a number of owners of land to dispose of it on a sort of homestead plan. That is, they will sell it to an actual settler, who will agree to live on the land for a certain number of years, at $10 per acre lower than the actual market value.

Severe Punishment.

Owatonna—The most sweeping punishment ever administered at Pillsbury academy was meted out to seven high officers of the military battalion of the school when they were reduced to the ranks and two of them were dismissed from the school. The punishment came as a result of a series of student escapades in which officers were accused of taking part. When the day on which the officers were to receive their commissions from the commandant of the corps, the corps was drawn up for review the order reducing the men to the ranks was read.

Load Town on Cars.

Sparta.—Work on the new site for the village of Sparta has been renewed by the steel corporation, and it is believed that the actual work of moving the village will be started in the near future. Sparta is a town of 15,000 population and the business section is underlaid with iron ore. The business buildings are to be hauled to their new locations on flat cars, this being accomplished by using two engines and two cars on the double track.

JEALOUS, AND IS SHOT DEAD

A DULUTH HUSBAND IS KILLED THROUGH INTERFERENCE BY HIS WIFE.

She Warns the Boarder. The Husband Starts to Kill the Boarder with a Hatchet and Instead Is Himself Killed.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 10.—Henry Bolot early Sunday morning shot and almost instantly killed Marquis Chirbeuno at whose house he was a boarder.

It is said Chirbouno was jealous of Bolot, imagining he was paying too much attention to Mrs. Chirbonno. If it had not been for Mrs. Chirbouno, Bolot would have been killed instead of her husband.

Bolot had retired for the night and was asleep, Chirbeuno sat up in the kitchen until late. He was smoking his pipe and was silent and depressed. Mrs. Chirbonno and the ten-year-old daughter of Mr. Bolot had retired to a room together for the night.

Mrs. Chirbonno was awakened late to hear her husband moving about in the hall muttering that he would kill somebody. She got up quietly and peered through the door of her room and from there she could see her husband stealthily entering Bolot's room. Chirbouno had a hatchet in his hand.

Quietly as possible the woman ran up behind her husband and caught hold of the arm that held the hatchet. Chirbouno uttered an exclamation of anger and tried to throw her off. The room was lighted dimly by a light turned low.

Bolot, awakened, and taking in the situation, reached for a revolver that lay on the dresser. Observing that Bolot was awake and prepared to defend himself, the woman let go of her husband and ran fearing that he would strike her with the hatchet in his rage at being interrupted in his designs on Bolot.

Chirbonno then approached Bolot threateningly not fearing the revolver apparently and Bolot shot him inflicting a wound from which he died quickly.

TRAIN HELD UP IN ST. PAUL.

Masked Bandits Loot a Burlington Freight Train.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—Three masked highwaymen held up a freight train in the Como yards at 5 o'clock yesterday morning and got away with a lot of silks. A brakeman who interrupted them was forced to drop his lantern and hold up his hands until the bandits made escape.

The train, No. 951 of the Burlington had stopped in the yards to take water. The highwaymen who appeared to know what they were doing broke the seal on the cars containing the silks and proceeded to get away with the valuables. They were just cleaning up the last of the shipment when Brakeman Wyland saw some one alongside the train.

The brakeman went back to see what was the trouble, not suspecting that he had robbers to deal with. He was covered by a revolver before he realized what was being done. The thieves made him drop his lantern and hold up his hands. They threatened him with instant death if he attempted to give any alarm. He then waited until he thought the thieves were out of range and then gave the alarm to the conductor and the yardmen.

The silks were consigned to Canada and the value of goods taken is not known.

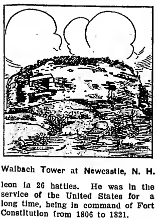
FORT BUILT IN A NIGHT.

Famous Old Walbach Tower In New Hampshire Crumbling Away.

Boston.—The most picturesque object on the Piscataqua river is Walbach tower, built in 1814, on the ridge of a high ledge in Newcastle, N. H. For years it has slowly been crumbling away, and is now almost in ruins. In these modern times it seems so small as to suggest a fortification in miniature or model rather than for real use. It is built of brick, the top being covered with peat, cut from Col. Walbach's own swamp and which he intended for his winter fuel.

Col. Walbach was a German count, who, it is said, fought against Napoleon in 26 battles. He was in the service of the United States for a long time, being in command of Fort Constitution from 1806 to 1821.



Walbach Tower at Newcastle, N. H.

The entrance to the fort is difficult of access, as bricks and mortar have nearly choked the doorway. Inside this Martello tower is a rude pintlestone, on which to swing a 32-pounder. There are three embrasures for small cannon or muskets and under the floor a magazine.

Like other historic pieces, Walbach tower has a legend connected with it. It seems that on one September morning three English ships were seen in the distance, lying under Appledore Island, and when a rumor reached Newcastle that they intended to land, brave Col. Walbach resolved to build a tower which should protect all the beaches. That night men, women and children gathered and worked as they never worked before. It seemed as though every other course of bricks was laid by unseen hands, the work progressed so rapidly. The morning sun looked upon the tower completed and on the exhausted but satisfied people. The hostile ships, approaching the river mouth, saw the little town's defense, and, turning, fired a gun astern and sailed away. Thus, without a blow, the tower put one foe to flight.

This old landmark is within the government reservation, about a stone's throw from the disappearing guns which were placed in position soon after the Spanish war. In putting these guns in place the jar from the immense charges of dynamite nearly destroyed the walls of the old tower.

AN EMPRESS' PLEASURE BOAT.

Marble Ship of China's Ruler That Does Not Sail.

London.—One of the most interesting photographs that have come from Peking illustrative of the life and caprices of the empress dowager gives us a picture of her majesty's pleasure boat.

Pleasure Boat That Does Not Sail.

This boat is stationed in a lake in the gardens of the summer palace, and it differs from all other boats in that it stays where its builders put it, notwithstanding it has no anchor nor moorage of any sort. It is unique, also, in that it does not float. Another item in its uniqueness is that it is built of stone—marble, in fact.

It really is a gorgeous summer house constructed in the form of a beautiful boat of the best Chinese type.

Precisely when it was built is not publicly known, but it is not an old craft, nor even so old as to have lost its charm for the lady by whose orders it was constructed. It is said the dowager empress spends a good deal of her time when she is at the summer palace aboard this substantial, unsinkable, and in all respects reliable craft.

The furnishings of the boat are extraordinarily beautiful, according to the Chinese standards, and this is especially true of the room where the empress occasionally dines.

The largest rooms of destiny may be entered through the smallest doors of duty.

STAIR IN POLITICS

VERSATILE BUSINESS MAN ENTERS NEW FIELD.

Is Theatrical Magnate, Financier and Publisher—Likely to Be Michigan Delegate-at-Large to G. O. P. Convention.

New York.—Wanted—The transformation of a versatile business man into a Republican leader. Apply to Edward D. Stair of New York and Detroit, newspaper proprietor, theatrical magnate and financier.

This might well be the form of announcement adopted by Mr. Stair if he desired to be entirely frank in the publication of his aspirations to be the delegate-at-large from Michigan to the Republican national convention. Now 48 years old, Mr. Stair has been steadily progressing in the business world since he was 13, when he began his fight for the attainment of his ambitions. In finance and business he has reached the goal at which he aimed. But it now appears that there is something more which is essential to Mr. Stair's happiness and to the real quintessence of bliss.

The indefatigable little political bee has recently got extremely busy with the newspaper-theatrical-financial men. The bee has stung him once, to common knowledge, making Mr. Stair desirous of applying salve in the shape of the position of delegate-at-large. The bee has also begun to sting him, by report, a second time. If the bee completes the last bit of work Mr. Stair will be seeking additional salve in the guise of even higher political honors. This, at any rate, is the gossip among men who announce that they are familiar with the topic they are discussing.

If Mr. Stair succeeds as well in politics as he has in business he certainly will let the country know that another "live one" has come to the front. The business versatility and success of the New Yorker-Detroiter, whose business headquarters are in New York and residence in Detroit, are shown by the fact that he is:

A newspaper man, being a large owner of the Detroit Free Press and of the Detroit Journal.

A theatrical man, the firm of Stair & Havlin controlling 158 theaters in the United States and Canada.

A financial man, being director of several banks and trust companies and a heavy dealer in real estate.

And now he wants to shine with equal brilliancy in a fourth firmament and become a political star of the first magnitude.

He is a comparatively newcomer in the New York business world, having moved his headquarters here from Detroit only in 1900. It is in Michigan that he has spent most of his life, and it was in Michigan that he laid the basis of his fortune.

Mr. Stair started his life struggle with newspaper ambitions only. Through all his success in the theatrical field he has been true to his first love and has always been connected with newspapers in one capacity or another. He is, moreover, more prominent as a theatrical magnate than as a newspaper proprietor. His firm owns all or part of every popular-priced theater in the United States. Every theater Mr. Stair has bought, according to his admirers, has paid from the moment he took control of it, as though there were magic in his touch. In the theatrical world he is considered a marvel for another reason—that is, because, with all manner of temptations to take a prominent part in the gayeties of "great white way," he leads a most abstemious life. The sparkle of champagne is not for him. Not even does he smoke. Neither does he chew. Whether he swears or not his biographers do not state.

Morenci, Mich., was Mr. Stair's birthplace, and it was here, at the age of 17, that he first became a newspaper proprietor, having established The Morenci Review. Later he published the Midland Review and the Maple Rapids Dispatch. Then, at 21, he turned westward. He edited the Davenport Dispatch and then the Cooperstown Courier. Then he turned back again to Michigan. There he bought the Livingston Republican and made it a power in state politics. Afterward he went into the theatrical game, at which he has thus far held a winning hand.

The present announcement of the Stair candidacy for the post of delegate-at-large follows the withdrawal from the race of Assistant Secretary of the Navy Truman H. Newberry.

Satan Terrified.

There is as great genius displayed in advertising as in the higher branches of literature. No problem daunts the modern advertising men. In the window of a little bookstore in Eighth avenue, New York, was recently heaped a great pile of Bibles, marked very low—never before were Bibles offered at such a bargain; and above them all, in big letters, was the inscription: "Satan trembles when he sees Bibles sold as low as these."—Woman's Home Companion.

PURE FOOD.

No Food Commissioner of Any State Has Ever Attacked the Absolute Purity of Grape-Nuts.

Every analysis undertaken shows this food to be made strictly of Wheat and Barley, treated by our processes to partially transform the starch parts into a form of Sugar, and therefore much easier to digest.

Our claim that it is a "Food for Brain and Nerve Centres" is based upon the fact that certain parts of Wheat and Barley (which we use) contain Nature's brain and nerve-building ingredients, viz.: Phosphate of Potash, and the way we prepare the food makes it easy to digest and assimilate.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey in his book on "The Biochemic System of Medicine" says:

"When the medical profession fully understands the nature and range of the phosphate of potassium, insane asylums will no longer be needed.

"The grey matter of the brain is controlled entirely by the inorganic cell-salt, potassium phosphate.

"This salt unites with albumen, and by the addition of oxygen creates nerve-fluid, or the gray matter of the brain.

"Of course, there is a trace of other salts and other organic matter in nerve-fluid, but potassium phosphate is the chief factor, and has the power within itself to attract, by its own law of affinity, all things needed to manufacture the elixir of life. Therefore, when nervous symptoms arise, due to the fact that the nerve-fluid has been exhausted from any cause, the phosphate of potassium is the only true remedy, because nothing else can possibly supply the deficiency.

"The ills arising from too rapidly consuming the gray matter of the brain cannot be overestimated.

"Phosphate of Potash, is to my mind, the most wonderful curative agent ever discovered by man, and the blessings it has already conferred on the race are many. But 'what shall the harvest be' when physicians everywhere fully understand the part this wonderful salt plays in the processes of life? It will do as much as can be done through physiology to make a heaven on earth.

"Let the overworked business man take it and go home good-tempered. Let the weary wife, nerves unstrung from attending to sick children or entertaining company, take it and note how quickly the equilibrium will be restored and calm and reason assert her throne. No 'provings' are required here. We find this potassium salt largely predominates in nerve-fluid, and that a deficiency produces well-defined symptoms. The beginning and end of the matter is to supply the lacking principle, and in molecular form, exactly as nature furnishes it in vegetables, fruits and grain. To supply deficiencies—this is the only law of cure."

Please observe that Phosphate of Potash is not properly of the drug-shop variety but is best prepared by "Old Mother Nature" and stored in the grains ready for use by mankind. Those who have been helped to better health by the use of Grape-Nuts are legion.

"There's a Reason."

BRAIN POWER

Increased by Proper Feeding.

A lady writer who not only has done good literary work, but reared a family, found in Grape-Nuts the ideal food for brain work and to develop healthy children. She writes:

"I am an enthusiastic proclaimer of Grape-Nuts as a regular diet. I formerly had no appetite in the morning and for 8 years while nursing my four children, had insufficient nourishment for them.

"Unable to eat breakfast I felt faint later, and would go to the pantry and eat cold chops, sausage, cookies, doughnuts or anything I happened to find. Being a writer, at times my head felt heavy and my brain asleep.

"When I read of Grape-Nuts I began eating it every morning, also gave it to the children, including my 10 months old baby, who soon grew as fat as a little pig, good natured and contented.

"I wrote evenings and feeling the need of sustained brain power, began eating a small saucer of Grape-Nuts with milk, instead of my usual indigestible hot pudding, pie, or cake for dessert at night.

"I grew plump, nerves strong, and when I wrote my brain was active and clear; indeed, the dull head pain never returned."

Entered as Second-class matter August 20. 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn, under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The socialist are talking of putting up a county ticket. They had 130 votes in the county at the last election, and that ought to be good enough to give some ambitious office seeker a start and he could hustle for the rest of his votes.

How would it be for the prohibitionist party to run IT for sheriff? He would certainly be a good example for them to point to when they talked whiskey reform, and he could holler; down with the whiskey and beer! Put it down I say! Down the whisky!

We understand IT is to again be a candidate for sheriff of this county. He will find out what the people think of him when he gets the election returns. He will get some votes as he has more special deputies than any other sheriff that we ever heard of.

There is no candidate that has been mentioned as sheriff of Polk County that would give as clean and business like administration as A. C Daniels, the present deputy sheriff, and we would advise any of our friends living in that county, that they would make no mistake if they give him their vote at the Primary election.

Polk county is going to have a warm [illegible] this year judging by the number of candidates that are [illegible] the field and there are [illegible] more.—Thief River F[illegible]

How [illegible] Lake? We are of the [illegible] that politicts will be warm enough to make the [illegible] in this county, before next November.

There is being quite a number of candidates mentioned for the republican nomination for governor, E. T. Young our present attorney general seems to be rather the favorite up to this time, but there is a number of prominent men who would come into the convention with a good following if the people were allowed by the politicians to chose their candidates. There is one man that has been scarsely mentioned that would roll up a vote in the country districts that would surprise the natives. His name is Elias Steenerson who is at present post master at Crookston, and a brother of our able Congressman Halvor Steenerson. We do not believe there is a man in the northern part of the state that could poll as big a vote as the nominee of the republican party for governor as he would, and if the people were allowed to pick their man with no packing of county conventions we believe he would go into the state convention with a solid vote from the northern part of the state. He is a man that has spent his own money freely to establish the rights of the people against the corporations and has never asked for or recieved any credit for doing so, and it is now time for the people living in this part of the state to [illegible] his name as their candidate for the republican nomination for governor and if he is nominated, we believe we could win back the control of this state, and again place it where it belongs in the republican column.

The post office inspectors, that are sent out to look over Star Routs do like to recommend a change in route, if they are bad changes, but they can not forse us onto a mail route that compells us to get our mail across Red Lake River. They of course have the power to try to put us onto the Thief River Falls route, but they may as well draw a pencil mark through Sunbeam post office and discontinue it as to have our mail route cross the river, for every settler up here knows that we could not get our mail regular, and would move their mail to the nearest post office south of them.

One of "Private John" Allen's favorite stories is about a Georgia bishop.

One of the members of the bishop's church met the reverend gentleman one Sunday afternoon and was horrified to find the bishop carrying a shotgun.

"My dear bishop," he protested, "I am shocked to find you out shooting on Sunday. The apostles did not go shooting on Sunday."

"No," replied the bishop, "they did not. The shooting was very bad in Palestine, and they went fishing instead."—Cleveland Leader.

"But Sir John counts upon you, Mr. Harris," declared Lady Henrietta. "I'm sure you're not going to desert him at a time like this?"

Josh Harris, leaning over his garden gate, looked at her with shifty eyes, but said nothing. Lady Henrietta's car stood in the lane waiting to take her on to outlying quarters of the electoral district where she hoped to stimulate the waverers.

Every vote was of consequence. Sir John was fighting hard to retain his seat in parliament. The outlook was alarming.

"Come, Mr. Harris," she said. "Sir John has been a good friend to the village. You'll not refuse him your vote and influence?"

"Seein' as 'ow your ladyship's been kind enough to promise to take us to the poll," answered Harris, in what he should found a hearty tone, "I suppose I must do as you wish."

"That's right. Then I'll come and fetch you to-morrow at five sharp," she smiled, as she got into her car. "Mind, I shall expect to find at least half a dozen of your neighbors waiting for me."

Although Lady Henrietta smiled she had grave suspicions of the genuineness of Harris' promise. The worst of it was that he could influence a good many votes in the village, and therefore had seriously to be reckoned with.

Lady Henrietta had a heavy day's work, and her canvass was not altogether satisfactory. Sir John's own efforts had likewise been unencouraging.

"It's touch and go," he told her as they sat down to a late dinner. "Half a dozen votes will make all the difference between success and failure. If we can only rely on the village I think I am safe, but if they rat—" He broke off in rather a despairing tone.

"I'm going in the Pullman myself to fetch Harris and some of the others to-morrow," said Henrietta. "I won't trust to strangers."

"That's right, my dear," nodded Sir John. "I'm a bit frightened of Harris. If he doesn't go against me, I believe I shall just scrape in."

"It's as close as that, is it?" murmured Lady Henrietta, thoughtfully.

Before five on the following afternoon, a small group of free and independent electors stood expectantly outside Josh Harris' cottage. They wore an expression of suppressed glee.

"You be sartin sure her ladyship's a comin', Josh?" one of them was asking. "It be fower mile to the pollin' station, and we dusn't get there late."

"No fear o' thet," derided Harris. "She's a comin' in that there noo big motor car o' hern whet goes as fast as a steam-injun. We'll be there in no time. All we've got to do is to let her think we're votin' for Sir John, and never let on different or otherwise, and when we gets to the poll put a cross agin Mr. 'Olmes Walker's name. Un'erstand?"

There was a chorus of affirmation accompanied by quiet laughter which was hushed as the car came round a bend in the lane. Its two big acetyline lamps were lit, and Lady Henrietta sat in the driving seat. As she pulled up she greeted the group with her sweetest smile.

"Eight," she observed to herself, counting them. "A nice covey, if I can only bag them!" Aloud she said: "You're all solid for Sir John, I hope?"

They were "all for Sir John." The reply was unanimous; there was a forced enthusiasm about it, too, that struck her ladyship as curious. Practice in electioneering had made her keenly observant, and the furtive glances that passed between the free and independent ones did not escape her.

With the assistance of the chauffeur, the eight conspirators were safely packed in the brocaded interior of the Pullman, and Lady Henrietta let in the clutch. She started without hurry; she wanted to think.

"How much petrol is there in the tank, Betts?" she asked her chauffeur.

"About six gallons, your ladyship. The tank's half full."

Lady Henrietta laughed to herself a little nervously. "I'm not quite sure whether it's legal, but I'm going to do it," she meditated

With that, her foot pressed the accelerator and the car shot forward. Twenty—25—30 said the speed indicator as the hand rose on the dial. Two minutes at this pace took them past the turning that led to the polling station. Lady Henrietta kept straight on. The chauffeur looked up at her with a question in his eyes.

"It's all right, Betts," said she. "I'm rather in a hurry."

Betts dutifully touched his cap and opened a feed valve on the dash.

Inside the car Harris and his friends were making merry. The situation appealed to them as a joke which they could not enjoy too hugely. To be driven, by her ladyship herself, in this splendid vehicle, at this glorious pace to the hustings to register their votes in favor of Sir John's opponent was, indeed, something to crow about—a 'sell' of the first water!

"An' to think as she'll never know it! It do seem a rare waste of a good joke!" chuckled one of them.

"You be satisfied wi' gettin' tother chap in, an' keep your tongue still," enjoined Harris.

"Ay, it won't do to talk," agreed another; and the sentiment was echoed by the rest.

"We be goin' a terrible pace," observed the first speaker anxiously a little later on.

There were glances through the windows; but what, with the speed of the car and the gathering gloom of the autumn day, nobody inside seemed certain of their whereabouts.

"You leave it to her ladyship," said Harris. "Like as not, she's takin' us for a bit of a spin as a reward for our support."

The sally was received with guffaws and, for a little while further, criticism of the route was supended. But as the minutes passed and the car kept up its wild career, Harris' face began to show signs of anxiety.

"We ought to be there by this time," he reflected.

He pulled down a window and put his head out. But what he said was lost in the roar of the wind. No response came from the driving seat. Harris closed the window and began tapping vigorously on the glass panels in front to attract her ladyship's attention. No notice was taken of the signal, however, and consternation seized one and all when it was apparent that they possessed no means of communication with the pair outside. Time was slipping by. They hadn't the remotest notion of where they were, or where they were being taken. The pace was alarming, and they were powerless.

Lady Henrietta glanced at the small clock on the splash-board. "Half-past six!" she said. "I think that will do. We must be 40 miles at least from the polling station."

"Half-Past Six!" She Said.

"Yes, your ladyship," responded Betts. It was all one to him.

"Then we'll stop at the inn, yonder."

The car came to a standstill. Betts, at her ladyship's bidding, alighted and opened one of the doors.

"Where are we?" gasped Harris, as he hurriedly got out.

"Fox and Hounds, Little Chart," said Betts, briefly.

"Where's that?" was the anxious inquiry.

"Forty-odd miles from home, Mr. Harris," came her ladyship's answer. "I'm afraid you'll hardly get there in time to vote for Mr. Holmes Walker."

"By gum! She's done us!" escaped Harris.

"I hope and believe so," she laughed. "Next time you go to the poll in a motor car, take my advice and see that there isn't a speaking tube in it. Good-night!"

The car backed across the wide turnpike road, turned and sped back the way it had come.

At 11 o'clock that night, Lady Henrietta was standing by her husband's side while, amidst wild cheers the returning officer announced Sir John's election by the narrow margin of five votes!

Bureaus Not Useless.

"I see the navy may decide to get rid of its bureaus."

"Is that so?" she responded, brightly. "Well, I supose roll-top desks would suit the navy better, and John, if those bureaus are the old-fashioned mahogany kind, with a lot of drawers, I wish you'd write to the secretary and find what he'd take for one."

Something New.

CHARMING NECKWEAR EASILY FASHIONED IN LEISURE HOURS.

The woman with nimble fingers and a little time can fashion herself the most fascinating and charming neckwear imaginable if she will only study the latest neckwear displayed in the fashionable shops. The coming winter did not by any means abate the popularity of dainty white neckwear. If anything, it increased, until every well-dressed woman now has some bit of launderable linen at her throat. It surely is an attractive fashion, for it gives womankind that immaculate look that comes only with the laundered stock or linen collar. The most popular styles are the variations of the Marie Antoinette frills and jabots of lace and linen and lace.

To make one of the most fashionable of these jabots you will need a piece of insertion 16 inches long for a center. This insertion is edged with a little fold of batiste and into this is set a frill of batiste edged with wide lace. The batiste portion is 2¾ yards long and is 1¾ inches wide at the top and tapers to one-half an inch at the bottom. It is gathered full, and especially so at the top, so as to make it fall in graceful folds. An elaborate jabot of this sort is worn with a plain little tucked waist in preference to one of more elaborate design.

New Hair Decoration.

The Grecian tunic effects have brought out new hair decorations in the shape of filets. These seem to be the only correct coiffure adornments when a gown built on Grecian lines is worn, and bands of gold, silver and of jet are seen in a number of designs.

There is the single wide filet, those fashioned of three narrow strands, and a third patterned in coronet shape narrowing at the sides to a single slight band in the back.

Fashion in Children's Bonnets.

Children's bonnets are very fanciful and summery in effect, fitting close to the head and ornamented with clusters of tiny roses or bunches of small, dainty flowers and loops of soft satin ribbon in two or three shades of the same color. These have falling ends, and are fastened on either side, covering the same completely.

IN VOGUE

One of the latest hat designs combines a fur crown with a satin brim.

Guimpes of net and lace have long tight sleeves.

White, pink, or purple hyacinths are suitable for hat blossoms.

Effective ginghams for children's frocks are to be seen on every side. The designs are charming and the price moderate.

Earrings are of two sorts, the screw and the drop. Among the latter the loops and rings of diamonds and pearls are copied from old monarchy pieces.

Dainty watches in gold, crystal and enamel figure among the most charming novelties. They are worn on the corsage, hanging by chains.

HAIR RIBBONS IN COLORS SUITABLE FOR SMALL MAIDEN.

For quite small girls, whose heads are bobbed, a dainty pink or blue bow that ties the lock off the face, the loops coming on the left side, is a pretty decoration.

A very fair child of five years of age is the only type to whom the colors are more becoming than white.

Little brunettes and those considered neither blonde nor dark will be all the more attractively costumed for a touch of a delicate shade in their dresses.

Next to all-white hair ribbons come those in Dresden designs and pompadour effects. Those, too, give an agreeable finish to the white toilet, but when the frock is of flowered organdie or similar fabric plain ribbons of the prevailing color in the dress are best.

Very delicate colors in hair ribbons should be used when the hair is dressed to roll back from the face and is tied just at the back of the ears. This brings the bows close to the face and decided colorings are not always becoming in piquant little features.

White, of course, may always be relied upon, blue is comparatively safe, but pink or green should be used with caution.

GOLDEN YELLOW SATIN.

Satin of the soft, clingy sort is the favored material for evening and reception gowns and the dainty canary and rich golden yellows lead in popularity for colors. The gown illustrated is the latter shade. It has a long, round skirt, trimmed at bottom with clusters of half-inch tucks. Down the front is a panel of antique lace, through which runs a thread of gold. Some lace is elaborately used on the decollete bodice, which has kimono sleeves, finished with a flounce of embroidered yellow chiffon. The accompanying hat is brown velvet, with shaded yellow and brown plumes.

Don't Pin Shirt Waists.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the shirt waist, but many girls spoil their nice blouses by pinning them to the skirt. I always put an eye in the center of my belt. Then make a small pad and a hook in the center of it. Hook it on, thus keeping the skirt and waist from parting.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL MOMENT.

"Pa, what's a psychological moment?"

"We will suppose that your mother wanted a new $30 hat, and that I was downtown and had just met a beautiful young lady who found it exceedingly difficult to keep herself from falling in love with me. We will suppose also that I greatly admired this young lady, and that we had paused in front of a candy store and said a lot of complimentary things to each other and that I had finally invited her inside and bought her a big box of candy and that we had looked at each other and done a lot of sighing, and that then the girl had sadly said good-by and started out and that I had followed her. We will suppose that, having reached the street, I was about to start after the young lady when I heard your mother's voice. Remember this is all a mere supposition, but we will say that I paused with a feeling of guilty fear and, turning, saw your mother only a few feet away and hurrying toward me. 'John,' we will suppose she said, 'wait a moment. I wish to speak to you.' You may easily imagine what my feelings would be in the circumstances. But we will suppose that I paused, expecting her to tell me that she had been following me for hours and that she would place the case in the hands of her lawyer at once—say, you understand, that this is merely a hypothetical case—that it is merely a fictitious case constructed for the purpose of illustration, don't you? Well, while I was turning over in my mind such thoughts we will suppose that your mother came up to me and said: 'John, I—I really don't look well in anything but that $30 hat. Don't you think you could afford to get it for me?' That would be a psychological moment. She would get the hat."

Baseless Fear.

"Say," whispered the wild-eyed man who had sworn off, clutching the other by the arm, "is there a four-legged animal with web feet and a bill like a duck's?"

"Yes, sir," said the attendant at the museum of natural history. "It is called the ornithorhynchus. There's a specimen in that glass case back there."

"Thanks," rejoined the man, immensely relieved. "When I saw it a minute ago I thought I had 'em again!"

Women Not in Demand.

Mr. Arnold Shanklin, just returned from Panama, says that men who go to Panama seem to think a wife one of the first necessities, but generally they are provided with sweethearts, who either come to them properly chaperoned or they go back to the states for them. The government builds nice six-room houses for the married men, and there is a very pleasant social set being formed. He did not seem to agree with Miss Helen Verick Boswell that old maids or bachelor girls are wanted there, the inference being that the right sort of men are either married or about to be when they go to Panama.

It is an enormous yielder.

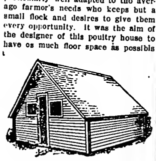
POULTRY HOUSE FOR 60 FOWLS.

Single Room Structure Which Proves Satisfactory.

A conveniently arranged and properly constructed hen house is one of the indispensable requisites in profitable poultry raising. The main object to be observed in designing such a structure is to secure as much floor space as possible and hold roof space to moderation. The object is to save expense in construction, as the real value of a house for this purpose depends upon the number of square feet surface area on the floor in proportion to the actual cost of the building.

The sketch included with this article illustrates a very unique design of farm poultry house. The building is particularly well adapted to the average farmer's needs who keeps but a small flock and desires to give them every opportunity. It was the aim of the designer of this poultry house to have as much floor space as possible with a small roof surface as would serve the purpose. I have observed a great many different designs of poultry houses and have several in use, but believe this one approaches nearest the ideal for the average farmer's conditions. It overcomes to a large measure the difficulty so common with the majority of hen houses, that is, side surface exposure to severe winds which have a tendency to keep the temperature of the building low when it should be warm and comfortable.



Single Room Poultry House.

The dimensions of the building are 16x20 feet inside measurement. The house is located upon well drained ground insuring dryness and healthful surroundings. Before the construction of the building was begun a sound foundation was laid. One object was to preserve the building and another to make an air-tight bottom so as to retard the penetration of cold air during severe weather. The foundation should either be of stone or cement, as the life of the structure is largely dependent upon this part. The frame work is made entirely of sound 2x6 stuff to insure a strong and durable frame. The sills were laid in cement to assist in making the base as tight as possible. The siding is pine shiplapping of excellent quality. This is very essential to insure a warm comfortable building. The inside of the building is sealed with the same material.

In putting together the ship-lapping on the inside, coal-tar was used to paint the grooves before the matched stuff was put together. This not only insures a tight sealing, but also prevents lice and other germs working and multiplying where inconvenient to disinfect. Tar paper was also put between the siding and sheething.

For roofing, explains Prairie Farmer, shingles were used, laid five inches to the weather. As will be observed, the roof is very steep; this gives plenty of space within for air, and also makes a more durable roof. The windows are in both ends. Were the house being rebuilt I should have more windows low down along the side, so the fowls could have more direct sunlight. This poultry house is sufficiently large to accommodate about 60 fowls.

CLEAN DRINKING VESSELS.

Will Help to Keep Disease Out of Flock.

Unclean drinking vessels are doubtless the immediate means of spreading some of our contagious diseases, such as roup. Roup is a disease in which slime accumulates in the mouths of the fowls and strings out of their mouths when they open them to drink. Nothing is easier than for such a fowl to leave slime in the drinking water, which is then partaken of by the other fowls. This leads to the fowls all becoming quickly affected. As roup comes on in the fall very often when we get the changes in temperature at night, it is necessary that the drinking vessels be kept clean and every fowl that shows signs of a cold should be taken at once from the house so that it will not be possible for her to spread the disease.

Beef Scrap for Fowls.

Most poultry men keep beef scraps constantly before their fowls. The birds pick at it when they like. In one flock of 30 pullets the consumption has been about five pounds a week. From this you can figure about how much to feed in mash and otherwise. Toulouse geese lay usually from 20 to 40 eggs in a season.

Don't Let Eggs Get Chilled.

It is again becoming unsafe to leave eggs out over night, and a close watch must be kept of the "stolen" nests, or a whole hatful may be frozen and ruined, unless soon found, when they can be used for cooking purposes. The hay mows of barns are favorite places for nests these cold days.

BEES IN WINTER.

Cheaper Grades of Sugar Are Just as Good for the Bees.

It is not necessary to go to the expense of buying the finest grades of white granulated sugar, for a straw colored sugar will answer just as well provided it is crystallized. Molasses sugar should, however, be avoided, because it contains burnt or caramel sugar which is injurious to bees. In feeding, the writer prefers to use the feed lukewarm if possible and late in the day so that the bees will gather the feed mainly by night. This helps against robbing. The entrance to each hive should be small during feeding operations as a further precaution against robbing practices. In wintering out of doors there is nothing better than a double-walled hive packed with chaff, straw or paper.

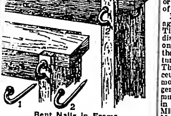
Roofing paper fabrics afford excellent protection to exposed hives, says the Farmers' Voice. Some protect hives by placing them in a row and covering them as they would cabbages. Others put them in clamps. The main idea of course is to protect against long continued cold weather. Bees cannot stand cold, at least not lower than 70 degrees. But the best plan of wintering bees in most of our northern states is by means of a dry cellar in which a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit can be steadily maintained. In addition it should be dark, noiseless and well ventilated. Where there is a door to the cellar inside a building it is best because this door to the stairway can be left open and yet no light can get in. If in addition to this there is no disturbance of the bees during their long sleep it is likely they will come through their imprisonment with little loss, besides requiring very little food—not more than ten pounds perhaps.

A good many bees die during the winter, so many as to be quite alarming to a beginner. They are the old veterans, and in any case would die of old age and hard work, so do not be alarmed. Some beekeepers provide a space beneath the frames for the dead bees to fall into and the same space affords an excellent opportunity for the bees to cluster together something like half a sphere. They are warmer than if kept separated by the combs. They leave the cluster occasionally to go after feed, but soon return to their comrades in the cluster. They murmur contentedly as if all they had to contend with was one long, silent night.

HIVE FRAME SPACERS.

Common Nails Bent Properly Provide an Excellent Medium.

The arrangement here shown, if properly applied, is excellent; but, says the Gleanings in Bee Culture, in the first place it is difficult to bend the nails, and, in the second place, it would be more difficult still to bend them all with exactly the same curve, for it would be important to have the bee-spaces alike. In the third place, one would have to bore a hole in order to drive them into the frame, for the reason that the hammer-head would strike one side of the line of penetration of the wood, bending the nail over. Taking it all in all, the ordinary staple is much easier to insert, and far cheaper.



Bent Nails in Frame.

CHICKEN TALK.

Eggs are better than birds to start duck farming because they can be shipped with no danger of injury.

Removable perches may be kerosened and burned over at a safe distance from the house and all vermin destroyed by fire.

The price of a bone grinder is not great, but it is sometimes unhandy or impossible to get a good supply of bones. It is a good scheme to make arrangements with a butcher for bones before buying the grinder.

More and better green food supply and more meat of some kind are what the hen needs for winter egg production. As to what is enough green food we would say all they will eat. As to the quality of cut bone or meat, all you can afford to give them and hold a profit, as a possible egg yield of say three eggs per week per hen. Give them of animal food less than one-tenth of their whole ration of meat, and from this up to one-fifth of their whole ration of meat as cost will permit.

Early Layers.

Frequently a pullet starts laying before the others and continues to lay well all the year; such a one should be carefully watched and her eggs saved, providing sufficient size was attained before she began laying. Other pullets will lay a few eggs in the autumn and then cease until spring; these should, of course, be discarded. Those that begin laying prematurely are not desirable, as they should attain the size characteristic of their breed before commencing, and then lay continuously during the rest of the fall and winter.—Michigan Station.

CARE OF THE KITCHEN.

Clean Walls Are an Essential to Sanitary Cooking.

It is not only important to know how to cook, but it is equally important to know where to cook. Cooking in a dirty kitchen can never produce good food. The idea is simply preposterous, yet kitchen walls are left for months—sometimes for years without cleansing.

In the first place the kitchen wall should have a light tint that the merest fleck of dirt can be seen; that the sheerest cobweb can be brushed away; that the tiniest water bug can be discerned. It is all folly expecting clean food in a kitchen with dirty walls.

Never put a wall coating on a kitchen wall that is mixed with hot water or that has glue in it, or sour milk in it if mixed with cold water. Glue walls made from horses' hoofs colored up with cheap colorings do not indicate good housekeeping. The glue is constantly flecking off, falling into the food and the idea of food flavored with glue made from horses' hoofs is not appetizing.

Kitchen walls to be thoroughly satisfactory should be alabastined the same as every other wall in the house. They should be coated regularly in the spring and fall of each year with a light tint.

The care of the pantry requires constant attention. The walls should be brushed over every year, the dishes removed from the shelves which should be thoroughly wiped with hot water. If there are ant holes or any other insects in the pantries a thick putty of the wall coating can be made and all the ant holes, even small mice holes can be filled with it which will protect the pantry from the incursions of disagreeable insects and mice.

Merchants Visit Milwaukee.

This is the season when merchants throughout the Northwest are turning to Milwaukee for their spring and summer stock. Milwaukee jobbers and manufacturers have in turn prepared for the occasion. A visit to the metropolis of Wisconsin will repay those who intend to purchase their stock of spring goods or place an order for machinery in any of the renowned factories.

Milwaukee jobbers deserve the patronage of the business men of this city. They offer good goods and as splendid a display at right prices as can be found anywhere. The absolute superiority of the product of Milwaukee's manufactures is known throughout the world. The reduction of the railroad fare to two cents a mile has brought Milwaukee more closely in touch with merchants generally who may now travel at a minimum cost with maximum profit. While in Milwaukee a visit to the rooms of the Milwaukee Association of Jobbers and Manufacturers, 45-49 University Building, will bring any information that is needed.

The messenger boys paused outside the Army building, says the New York Sun. One of them was selecting a cigarette from a box.

"Gimme one," said the smokeless boy.

"Naw," said the other, "they cost money."

"I'll owe you a cent," said the first boy. "Come on, I'll pay you after."

"They cost more than a cent," said the boy with the cigarettes. "Nothin' doin'. Your credit ain't no good."

Every lot is level as the floor. City water is piped upon the ground, but fine well water can be had by digging to a depth of from 15 to 20 feet.

Every lot is worth more than $150 today, and those near the depot could easily be disposed of now at from $300 to $500.

If you want a profit after four months, we will undertake to double your money, and if you hurry and get your money in quickly, and succeed thereby in securing any lot numbered from 1 to 150, you will want to keep it as a first-class investment. Every lot in the Addition will be worth double the purchase price when the Milwaukee road is in operation in the spring of 1909.

There is no hot air about this proposition. It is absolutely bona fide, and we are disposing of this Addition quickly in order to inject new blood into Lind, which is destined to be one of the best towns in the state.

All lots will be sold in a few days after this ad. has been placed, and of course the first ones to send in the purchase price will secure the choicest lots, so YOU'LL HAVE TO HURRY!

There will be more purchasers than we have lots to dispose of, but money will be promptly returned to those who are not successful in securing a lot.

IMPORTANT—Be sure to write your name and address plainly. All money must be sent either by Telegraph, Registered Letter, P.O. Money Order, Express, Bank Draft or Cashier's Check.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist Is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

New Religious Movement Brings Men to the Fore

Philadelphia. — Within the past nine months there has arisen a new movement in the Protestant churches of the United States and Canada which is bound to arrest the world's attention by its significance. This is the organization of men by men, for the purpose of putting the missionary enterprise on a basis commensurate with its importance; for this foreign missionary business represents an annual expenditure of $21,000,000, which is equivalent to six per cent. on a capital of $350,000,000. The magnitude of this long despised missionary enterprise seems to have at last penetrated the understanding of the men who are responsible for it.

The new organization is not engineered by the preachers or by board secretaries, or by young and visionary enthusiasts. It had its origin with successful business men, and it has swung along to its conspicuous success, independent of ecclesiastical promotion. The officials of the denominations are interested and approve, but they are not in the saddle; and they are not by any means certain of the lengths to which the movement will go. A complete revolution in missionary finances is assured, and doubtless also, many changes in methods. For the first time during the whole Christian era, there seems to be a reasonable prospect that the entire "heathen" world will be made acquainted with the Christian teaching, within a generation.

Millionaires and Missions.

Before showing how these plans are to be accomplished, the identity of the men behind the movement should be made known. The idea of the laymen's missionary movement took form in connection with the Haystack Centennial celebration in New York last November. That meeting, which was really the anniversary of the American board of foreign missions was marked by a prayer meeting, quite in contrast with the little gathering of impecunious college students under a haystack 100 years before. For this gathering comprised 64 business men, of whom a score were millionaires.

At this meeting, announcement was made that the laymen were resolved to take hold, systematically, and energetically of this missionary business. They made three definite propositions, which are the basis of the present movement, to the secretaries of the missionary boards of all the denominations in the United States and Canada. These propositions were as follows:

1. To project a campaign to secure intelligent and generous interest in missions among laymen to be conducted by groups of laymen under the direction of the various boards.

2. To devise a comprehensive plan (in conjunction with said board secretaries) looking towards the evangelization of the world in this generation.

3. To endeavor to form, through the various boards, a centennial commission of laymen, 50 or more in number, to visit as early as possible the mission fields and report their findings to the church at home.

With respect to the last proposition, by a curious coincidence, I had myself undertaken, six months previously, such an investigation, of which the articles in these columns have been the outcome. Already a large number of business men have gone to the foreign field, and some are now there.

The men who constitute the central organization of this laymen's missionary movement are the following, some of whom will be recognized as national figures:

Samuel B. Capen, Boston; Harry Wade Hicks, Boston; Edward H. Haskell, Boston; W. N. Hartshorn, Boston; William Shaw, Boston; John L. Bates, Boston; H. P. Andersen, New York; Seymour M. A Sign of the Times.

The men who keep posted upon the trend of current events in all spheres have noticed that of late years the emphasis in religious affairs has been laid upon the masculine element. Succeeding the powerful young people's movement, as represented by Christian Endeavor and kindred organizations, came the brotherhood idea, as most prominently expressed in the Protestant Episcopal church. It is a common sight "down town" to see business men of the best sort wearing a modest little button bearing a St. Andrew's cross. These are members of the Protestant Episcopal Brotherhood of St. Andrew, a men's society which has wrought notable results in identifying first-class business men with active religious work. Nobody could ever accuse this St. Andrew's Brotherhood crowd with being weaklings or sentimentalists.

Older, but less aggressive, although widely pervasive is the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, which began in the Reformed church in the United States and quickly spread to other denominations. Last year the Presbyterian church, which has a conspicuous array of public men in her membership, held a great men's convention in Indianapolis, and formally launched the Presbyterian Brotherhood, William J. Bryan being one of the promoters and speakers. The Southern Presbyterian church followed suit, and it is to hold its first laymen's convention this fall. The Methodists are now pushing the brotherhood idea; and, altogether, it is manifest that the most marked present-day development of Christianity is among the laymen.

The visible connecting link between these denominational men's organizations and the present laymen's missionary movement is to be found in the United Presbyterian church. This body, more than a year ago, held a business men's convention in Pittsburg, which attracted attention in church circles everywhere, because of its enthusiasm for missions, and for its determination to put the church's missionary work on a business basis. The prime figure in this meeting was J. Campbell White, a brilliant young layman who has spent ten years in Calcutta, where he had established the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. White has been made the general secretary of the laymen's missionary movement.

Going After Heathen Businesswise.

Every reader of the funny papers, as well as every one familiar with church life, knows that the backbone of the missionary work of the past century has been the women and the children. But it is the men who have the money. Only the man with the pocketbook could be equal to the big spending which an adequate prosecution of the missionary enterprise entails. The present outgo of $21,000,000 a year, enormous as it is, comprises only a fraction of the expenditure which is necessary, if the job is to be done thoroughly.

So, naturally, as soon as the laymen really took hold, they began to do some figuring. To put the work which has heretofore been largely sustained by impulse and sentiment, on a business basis, they first divided up the "heathen" population of the world among the Christian countries and churches. Here is the interesting way they go about it.

There are approximately 1,000,000,000 "heathen" in the world. On the basis of one missionary to every 25,000 of these, the present force of 13,000 missionaries accounts for 325,000,000 of heathen. Or this same result may be reached by allowing two dollars a head as the cost of evangelizing each "heathen," for so the thing has been figured out by these men who want a working basis for their undertaking. It becomes a mere matter of subtraction to show that 675,000,000 of people are at present unprovided for by the present missionary arrangement. Therefore, the laymen say that the missionary bodies should have $80,000,000 a year and 27,000 more missionaries, for 25 years, in order really to do the job. This sort of figuring would probably have made William Carey or Robert Morrison, pioneer missionaries, gasp with astonishment, but it is the modern way.

All this is not the speculative figuring of dreamers. The laymen are after results; so they put the proposition up to every denomination by showing just how many heathen each church is responsible for and the amount of money it will have to give. And this plan of confronting a denomination definitely with its share of the gigantic scheme of world-wide evangelization has been received seriously by the various bodies. The United Presbyterians were first to accept the challenge, and they are asking of every member an average gift of eight dollars a year for their missionary work. The Presbyterians followed, a great men's missionary convention having been held in Omaha in February, and the idea later approved by the general assembly, the Southern Presbyterians did likewise. The Canadian Presbyterians and Southern Baptists have also joined in the movement. The Congregationalists and Northern Baptists will take up the subject early in the fall. The Episcopalians have not yet had opportunity officially to adopt a basis, but its laymen are in the forefront of the new movement.

Stirring a Continent.

So remarkable has been the response, up to date, on the part of business men of Protestantism, where this proposition has been definitely put up to them, that the leaders are sanguine of enlisting the entire body of the laity of the churches of the United States and Canada. To this end, a series of laymen's dinners, covering the big cities of the continent are projected for this winter, on the line of those successfully held last winter in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, Toronto, Washington and elsewhere. These are not conventional missionary meetings, but gatherings of the strongest Christian business men in each place, managed and addressed by laymen. The business men who are behind the movement plan a systematic propaganda that shall reach every man in anywise connected with the churches, even to the remotest cross-roads congregation.

Already the movement is formidable; the most important news of the year in religious circles. Its consequences will doubtless be far-reaching. Men of foresight are already predicting certain unplanned for results. One of these, they say, will be the elimination of all independent missionary work on the foreign field. The latter are a serious drain on the resources of Christendom, and, say the laymen, who have already returned from their tour of investigation, they do not come up to the representations made by their eloquent representatives in this country. The laymen's movement stands squarely behind the denominational boards. Nevertheless, it is predicted, the laymen will hold the boards strictly to account, that their missions be manned only by competent workers and that they be conducted on the broadest, most effective and most economical lines.

Great Britain in Line.

A deputation from the laymen's missionary movement has just returned from the other side of the water, where it went to introduce the project to the laity of the British churches. The report brought back is remarkable. The deputation was welcomed and feted everywhere by archbishops, church leaders and business men. They ate enough complimentary dinners to give them all dyspepsia. The serious outcome of their labors was the definite organization, with unexpected enthusiasm, of the laymen's missionary movement in England and Scotland.

The most striking feature of Great Britain's acceptance of the project is the fact that the high church party of the Church of England has entered into alliance with other religious bodies in this undertaking. This is unprecedented. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the famous High Church Missionary organization, has indorsed the new movement, and its representatives are working side by side with men from the nonconformist bodies. Great Britain, with less than half the population of the United States and Canada, already gives $8,973,000 a year to foreign missions, a little less than is given by the North American continent. The balance needed to make up the world's total $3,327,000 being given by all other countries. It is expected that the gifts of Great Britain will be stimulated in proportion to those on this side. In any case, even Wall street will have to take notice of the flow of money into foreign mission channels.

Women More Honest Than Men.

Statistics compiled by American guarantee companies show that, as regards honesty, women are superior to men. Women in America are employed in business as extensively as men, and yet the record shows that almost every embezzler and defaulter was a man. There are more women cashiers than men. The universal stores and shops of almost every kind employ women to handle their receipts and to give change; yet there were a hundred cases of men cashiers stealing to one case where a woman cashier took her employer's money.

PROTECT THE HOME

NATURAL LAWS EVIDENCED IN COMMUNAL RELATIONSHIP.

PRACTICES THAT DESTROY

Necessity for Harmonious Co-Operation if the Highest Interests of the People of a Community Be Best Subserved.

Cities and towns are the natural outgrowth of the inborn desire in man to fraternize in a protective as well as in a social way. Primitive man illustrated a high type of individualism. Examples of his methods can be found in the barbarous, wandering tribes in some sections of the world to-day. As far as possible, he existed independent of his fellow creatures. Like the wild animal, he tracked down his prey and subsisted the best he could. A natural law binds together creatures of certain types. As intelligence in man developed, a sense of interindependence directed that tribal methods of living in community be put in force. This was necessary for self-protection and for defense against attacks of common enemies.

As far back as evidence can be found relative to man's existence, there existed resident places corresponding to our present "home towns." With the advancement of civilization, methods of living became revolutionized. One resident of a community found that his interests were best subserved by dependence upon other members and by close co-operation with them. In modern life, there are many complex conditions which make necessary the recognition of obligations of one person to another. The small city or town of to-day affords an illustration of the highest type of communal relationship. Here is found ideals as to co-operation and a full recognition of the necessity of harmonious labor, not for self alone, but for others of the community. It is by this co-operation that the highest type of society is built up. It is by this harmonious action that churches are builded, schools maintained, public libraries for the enlightenment of the people supported, roads kept in condition and all conveniences for mutual interchange in the social and commercial life recognized as necessary.

A town cannot in itself exist. It must draw the subsistence for its people from the surrounding country. The basis of the city or town is agriculture. The growing of food stuffs must be in order that people shall live. An agricultural town of a thousand population cannot exist by itself alone, but must draw its support from the contiguous territory. Those residing upon the farms find the town an essential to their welfare and enjoyment. Thus a community must be considered an entire and indivisible social organization, in which each member participates in whatever prosperity and general advancement exists within it. Thus we find that all comprising the community have equal interest in increasing its prosperity, its wealth and all its moral, social, educational and commercial advantages. This participation is not exclusive to those residing within the limits of the town, but must be enjoyed by the residents and the workers on the adjacent farms, and all who labor within the radius of which the town is the center. Perforce of this, the town becomes the apex of the social activity, as well as that of a business nature. And the social and the commercial are so entertwined that one is necessary for the other.

A spirit of mutual co-operation should permeate all of a community. Each and every one comprising the communal organization of a district has equal interest with the others. There can be no affair important to the townspeople but which is also important to the farmers and others of the community; and there can be no affair of interest to the dwellers in the rural district but is of equal import to the residents of the towns.

How desolate, how monotonous and how isolated is the life on the farm without a home town. In human kind social instincts are predominating. Unless social desires are gratified there is despondency. The records of our insane asylums prove that from the isolated farms, where social intercourse through certain conditions is most restricted, come the majority of inmates of these institutions. Without social intercourse intelligence is benumbed and ignorance prevails. Then how important it is to the residents of rural districts that the prosperity of the home town be encouraged. There is the social feature, the educational, the moral and religious, and as important as any and most essential for the highest perfection, is the business relations. The more prosperous the home town the more prosperous are the farmers residing within its trade radius, because the liveller the town the better the home markets.

There are complications in the business world to-day and the building up of systems of business that interfere with the highest development of the small cities and towns. Railroads, telegraph, telephone, rural delivery—all has tended towards enhancing life in the country. But these means have also encouraged business methods that work against the higher development of community interests. In order that the home town exists, there must be employment for those who reside within it. This employment is solely dependent upon the town's commercial and manufacturing interests. Thus we find that the home town is reliant upon the trade, not alone of those who reside within it, but of those in the surrounding country. Any system that robs the home town of this trade is contrary to highest economic law. Such a system retards progress and works against all within the community. Dependent upon the prosperity of the home town are the degrees of efficiency of the schools, the classes of churches, the libraries, the public halls, improvement of streets and public conveniences of every class and kind. In accordance with the increase of wealth new industries come into existence to give employment to a greater number of people, and thus carrying on an upbuilding process.

In summing up conditions as they relate to the community and the home town, it is patent to the man of intelligence that the patronizing of every home enterprise best subserves his interests, as well as the interests of all of the community. The patriotic man who would be a model citizen will make it his rule to put forth every effort to build up the local community. This effort should be directed to the patronizing of every home industry; to keep within the community as far as possible all the earnings of the people; to invest surplus capital in home enterprises; to improve the schools, the churches, the roads, develop every resource of the place; and with increased prosperity of the town more happiness, more contentment and more wealth results to all the worthy ones comprising the community.

D. M. CARR.

Remember that trusts and combinations are never builded up in the small towns. They find their origin and flourish in the large cities.

"SECONDS" OR "OFF" GOODS.

How They Are Disposed Of by Big Manufacturing Concerns.

Manufacturers who put out their goods under brands are watchful as to keeping their output up to the standard. Big concerns whose goods are widely advertised and are known for their excellency will not allow defective articles to go from their factories. Everything is inspected, and it must be perfect before the brand is allowed to be marked upon it.

In the large cutlery factories, the silverware manufacturing plants, the collar and shirt factories, and the like, regardless of what care is exercised, defects will be found in a certain percentage of the work turned out. In cutlery the temper of a blade may be uneven; the handle may be marred, the lining may be imperfect, and all such defects cause the knife to be discarded, that is, thrown out and not marked with the brand, if the maker has a reputation to maintain. In shirt factories the defective shirts are placed aside just the same, and so it is with hundreds of manufactured articles. All these articles are dead loss to the manufacturer unless they be remodeled, or disposed of at a cost covering the expense of the raw material and the time of employers used in their making. Thus manufacturers welcome a means of "playing even," of disposing of this damaged stock so as to prevent loss.

In many cases the damaged goods are sold to "job-lot" men who auction them off to small jobbers. But the majority of these goods are sold by contract to large houses located in the big cities, and it may be said that fully 50 per cent. of the goods that these houses handle are either of the damaged class known as "seconds" or prison made or contract goods, cheaply turned out in sweat houses.

A number of concerns have contracts with these houses for all the "off" goods made. These goods are wrapped up in such a way as to cover their defects. The concern buys them for about 30 to 40 per cent. below prices at which perfect goods can be had in the markets. Thus it can be seen how some concerns can make low prices on goods that look about as well as regular dealers carry, but which are far inferior.

Were there only large cities, how poorly would fare the farmers and the others who toil for a livelihood.

Commercial Travelers Interested.

There are more than 100,000 commercial travelers in the United States. These men are trade missionaries. They are a very necessary cog in the commercial wheel. While there are some who take the view that they are not producers, they are nevertheless important in the system of distribution of that which is produced. The successful traveling man is a close student of human nature. His vocation is such as calls for a high class of intelligence, particularly as to trade conditions and the lines which he represents. His keen observation of the trend of affairs has made him a pronounced home-trader. He realizes that his interest lies in protecting the business of the small city and town. Were trade in mercantile lines concentrated in the large cities, the field for the traveler would be narrowed. Thus we find him a strong combatant of systems that mean concentration. Circumstances have made him as equally interested in protection of local trade of merchants as the merchants themselves, and he is also interested on this account in the welfare of the people who are the customers of the merchants. The force and power of the great army of travelers in the United States is not to be considered lightly. Their influence is widespread. They will be found quite willing to work most harmoniously with the townspeople and the residents of rural districts in the matter of home protection.

That town which has not sufficient industries to employ its people is sure to go backward.

SPORTING GOSSIP

The remarkable ability of blind boys as athletes is brought out in an article by J. E. Baker in a recent issue of Outing Magazine. He says, in part: "The most popular of all outdoor events probably is the 35-yard dash. No, nobody with or without eyes can run straight very far unless it be toward some mark. The sighted sprinter has his alley to guide him and the tape in front. So for the blind boys a string of sleigh bells is rung at the finish. Collisions resulted twice only during last season. The abandon which the boys display in this race is a revelation, and their performances are very creditable. It is the opinion of the writer that, other conditions being equal, the sightless boy gets a faster start than his seeing brother; the blind boy never looks out of the "tail of his eye" and his co-ordination between ear and muscle is closer and more nicely adjusted. The success of blind boys in athletics, the same as with boys who know the light, is determined largely by the personal equation. Some boys are naturally graceful, others naturally awkward. Some will learn a gymnastic feat almost without effort, others only after the most faithful labor. In short, some have a well-developed muscular sense, while others have but the faintest traces of it. For those who measure success by marks the records made by sightless athletes of the Wisconsin School for the Blind will be interesting. These records should not be supposed to be equal performances of high school boys, because the training was for all-round development. No one specialized in any one event:

Standing broad jump	7 feet 9 inches
Standing high jump	3 feet 7 inches
Running broad jump	17 feet 8 inches
Running high jump	4 feet 6 inches
Shot-put, (12-lb.)	37 feet 8 inches
Discus throw	85 feet
Football punt	39 yards 1 foot
Hundred-yard dash	12 seconds
Thirty-five-yard dash	4 seconds flat

Robert Boyd Burch of Cincinnati, 1909, has been elected captain of the Yale football eleven for the coming year. Burch is 21 years old, five feet seven inches high, and weighs 165 pounds. His opponent was Arthur Edward Brides of Brockton, Mass., a medical school junior. The fact that Burch was an academic man and Brides a medical school man swung the election over to Burch, as at no time in the history of football at Yale has a medical school man had the honor of the football captaincy. Brides played on his freshman team, a year ago he played guard all the way through the season on Morse's team, and this year he played guard, then shifted to end and then to halfback, being one of the best defensive halfbacks Yale has ever had. Burch played end on his freshman eleven, and in one of the early games last year broke his shoulder, keeping him out of the game for the remainder of the season. This year he started at end, but was ill twice with ptomaine poisoning and twice sprained his ankle. The last ten minutes of the Yale-Harvard game he played at end. The regular end was Clarence Alcott, who made Camp's all-American team.

ROBERT BOYD BURCH, '09.

Rube Waddell, who has received more advertising than any other ball player since Mike Kelly and Arlie Latham, is gifted with an acute sense of humor, as any of his ball playing companions can testify.

The clever George Edward is a fellow of many parts, and no one can be found who would be willing to testify on oath that the big Rube is not eccentric. The speedy pitcher is also witty in his eccentricity.

As a gay cut-up the big Philadelphia twirler has no peer. He stands alone in a class. Last August, when the Athletics were playing in Washington, during their practice time George Edward Waddell was engaged in carrying on his monkey shines, much to the delight of the spectators, when Dr. Mike Powers half laughingly asked Rube:

"What the dickens makes you so foolish, Ed?"

"I don't know," replied Waddell, "except it came about through my father making me sleep under a crazy quilt when I was a boy."

Washington Whisperings

Interesting Bits of News Gathered at the National Capital.

"I" Out of the White House Alphabet

WASHINGTON.—The question that has been agitating the public mind in Washington for some days has been:

"Who are we?"

No, it is not a college yell; it is the demand for information concerning the president's meaning when he abandoned his old friend "I" and studded his message with references to "we," "us," and "our policies."

The idea that the president meant himself by "we" and was merely adopting a royal fashion is scouted by those who know the president and are aware of his distaste for getting into the low and vulgar class to which mere kings belong. It is generally accepted that Mr. Roosevelt was talking in the plural.

Consequently there is much curiosity to learn the identity of the members of the "We club." Careful inquiry results in establishing the fact that there are more of them than had been believed. Here is a practically complete list of "we," obtained with vast difficulty from high sources:

President Roosevelt, who holds the highest position in the club, that of "I;" Secretary Taft, who holds the next highest, that of "me, too;" Herbert Knox Smith who is "first assistant me;" Milton D. Purdy, "chief trust buster and second assistant me;" Charles J. Bonaparte, "assistant to Mr. Purdy and deputy trust buster;" James R. Garfield, who holds the post of "almost I;" Kenesaw Mountain Landis, Frank B. Kellogg, George Von L. Meyer, Jonathan Bourne, Herbert Parsons and Francis J. Heney, who serve in the ranks, and are known collectively by the title of "us."

There is the highest authority for the statement that Edward H. Harriman, J. Pierpont Morgan, William D. Haywood Chancellor Day, John D. Rockefeller, Joseph B. Foraker and Bellamy Storer do not belong to "we." The allegation that they do, from whatever source it may come, may be safely met with the shorter and uglier word.

"Uncle Ike" Objects to Hotel Bills

"UNCLE IKE" Stephenson, the new 71-year-old millionaire United States senator from Wisconsin, is having an awful hard time trying to have money and be a senator at the rate of $7,500 per annum.

"Uncle Ike" is a brother of Samuel M. Stephenson, former representative from Michigan, who entered congress during the Fifty-first session just after Isaac had retired. When the new senator came to town in December he brought with him his whole family, even to the third generation, and the daughters-in-law and the sons-in-law.

Senatorships don't happen every day, quoth "Uncle Ike," and what's the use of being stingy about spending a few extra simoleons while one is getting $7,500 a year for running department errands and sitting in the senate and looking wise. So he took a fine suite of rooms at the New Willard and prepared to wear a buttonhole bouquet every day and put on all the dog there is.

All went well until the bills began to come in, and then "Uncle Ike" went to one of his colleagues and said:

"Senator, got any idea where a man could find a good, modest priced boarding house?"

"Where are you living now?" was asked.

"At the Willard."

"Well, senator, that's the best boarding house in Washington."

"I know it is good," answered "Uncle Ike," "but it costs like blazes."

"But you're the richest man in the senate, so what's the difficulty?"

"Probably I've got a little more saved up than some of the boys," was the Wisconsin senator's reply, "but, gosh ding it, I want to spend it in my own way. Why, just before I came east I gave $150,000 to colleges. I expect to give some more, and I'm blamed if I want all of my substance eaten up by hotel bills."

"Uncle Ike" pounded his knee by way of emphasis and proceeded to give further vent to his indignation by hunting a newspaper and looking through the want ads to see if he could locate a place where good board could be had for a small section of his income per week.

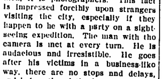
Camera Pest at the National Capital

IF there is any one thing that is more numerous in Washington than statesmen, it is photographers. This fact is impressed forcibly upon strangers visiting the city, especially if they happen to be with a party on a sightseeing expedition. The man with the camera is met at every turn. He is audacious and irresistible. He goes after his victims in a business-like way, there are no stops and delays, and before the victim hardly has time to realize what has happened the photographer has his order for a picture to be delivered that evening at his hotel.

The particular delight of the camera man is a party of excursionists. He catches them, perhaps, as they emerge from the handsome new union station, or as they come out of the capitol, or some other public building. He holds up his hands as a signal for them to halt, then he admonishes them to look pleasant, please, and the next thing he and his agent are passing through the crowd taking orders. And they do take orders, and lots of them.

One photographer makes crowds on seeing-Washington automobiles his specialty. He usually catches them on Executive avenue at the beginning of the trip. When they get back to the starting place the pictures, printed and mounted, ready for them.

Uncle Sam Tests All Paper He Buys



"THERE," sighed the professor, as he placed a drop of what looked like soup, but was really dissolved paper, on a glass slide, "three waves of my wand and we will see what this rascally jobber has been selling to the government."

It was in the paper-testing division of the United States bureau of standards that this monologue took place. The government printing office had sent some samples of paper to be tested. The samples were warranted to be "pure poplar pulp paper."

"That's the poplar," murmured the professor, as he dropped some liquid from a glass tube upon the small globule of soup, and watched it turn purple. "Now for the spruce."

It required but a moment to pick up another glass tube and apply another drop of colorless liquid. Under its magic influence part of the soup turned pink.

"Ho," sighed the professor; "about 10 per cent. of spruce. Once more."

A third drop was applied with a third glass tube, and the soup began to show several points of bright yellow.

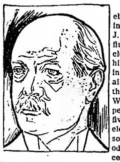
"Rags," said the professor. "About five per cent.

"That jobber," said he, "either does not know what is in the paper he is selling or he is a liar. But the eye of the bureau of standards sees it all."

And so, indeed, it does. Even after the wood, rags, and other ingredients have been ground up into pulp and then made into paper, the hand of science resolves them again into their original ingredients and the eye of science sees the relative proportion of each as certainly as if the professor had stood beside the pulp mill when the paper was made.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

HANDLED GOTHAM PANIC



William A. Nash, president of the Corn Exchange bank, probably did as much as any man in New York to put a stop to the recent panic, J. Pierpont Morgan alone excepted. When the flurry came on he was made chairman of the clearing house committee, and it fell mainly to him to pass upon the securities offered by banks in need of assistance, to decide which should be aided and which suspended. He was regarded by the other bankers as the balance wheel of the Wall street situation. Nor is this his first experience of a panic, for in 1903 he was one of five men who, as executive committee of the clearing house, had that panic in charge. His sound common sense, his keen business methods and his far-sighted mental vision in each case saved him from making any very grave blunders, and he came through both ordeals with flying colors.

Mr. Nash commenced life as messenger boy in the bank of which he is now president. He won his advancement step by step, through his own efforts, and 25 years from the day he entered the bank he was its president. It then had a capital of $1,000,000; now it has $8,000,000. He was the father of the branch system and the Corn Exchange was the first bank to open branches when the law was passed authorizing it to do so. To-day it has 22 branches and minor depositories throughout the city of New York.

Mr. Nash's favorite hobby is the collection of books, and his library is one of the best in private hands in New York. He is intensely fond of reading and is never happier than when he can spend an evening alone in his library.

CHANCELLOR MAY RESIGN

Chancellor von Buelow, finding that it requires a man of more than the average attainments to fill the shoes of the late Prince Bismarck and to conduct the affairs of the German empire, is said to be on the point of retiring to private life. His uncompromising attitude towards the socialists, who are rapidly gaining in strength, has been the means of blocking many of the emperor's schemes and has caused the utmost difficulty in his getting the money he wants for an immense army. He has won for himself the hostility of some of the court favorites, because he has denounced their scandalous behavior, and he has even made enemies in the kaiser's own household by his opposition to the marriage of the crown prince to the beautiful Cecilie, because she was the daughter of a Russian grand duchess whose escapades were the talk of all Europe. All this has reminded Germany that Von Buelow was not so very impeccable himself when he was a young man, and that his marriage to the lovely Princess Camporeale was achieved only after she had run away from Count Charles von Doenhoff, her rich but aged husband.

Roman society conveniently forgot the elopement, and Von Buelow having married the lady when her husband had divorced her 11 years after the elopement, they were received into the most exclusive circles. The incident is now being recalled in Berlin society, however, and strong pressure is being brought to bear upon the emperor to induce him to dismiss his chancellor.

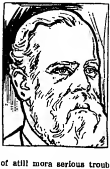
EX-SENATOR'S PLIGHT

Warner Miller, formerly United States senator from New York and once prominent in Republican politics as leader of the "Halfbreeds," has failed as a result of the Martinique disaster several years ago, "bankrupted by the acts of God and William Nelson Cromwell," as one of his friends expressed it.

He did not own a foot of land in Martinique, nor did he have a dollar invested there, yet the terrible explosion of natural forces that blew off the top of the mountain, wiped a city from the face of the earth, laid waste the fields and caused much destruction among the shipping caused his ruin years later. Deeply interested in the Nicaragua canal project, Miller had invested much of his money in it. The United States had virtually decided to undertake the work. Miller stood to make a fortune. Then came the disaster, which brought with it the fear of similar outbreaks in Nicaragua. The Panama canal people had meantime come to their senses and were preparing to make an equitable bargain. The Nicaragua canal project was dropped and Miller was deeply involved. To meet his obligations he disposed of his pulp mill and lumber holdings and pinned his faith to the Sierra Consolidated Gold Mining Co., a West Virginia corporation. He held about one-third of its total stock of $3,000,000, hoping to recover his standing through that, but the mines never became producing properties, although he held on for 12 years, and in the end it came to crash, bringing Miller down with it.

Miller first came into prominent notice when Senator Roscoe Conkling and Thomas C. Platt resigned their seats in the senate, to appeal to the people for their indorsement. They failed to receive the indorsement they sought, and Miller became senator to succeed Conkling. He never did anything remarkable in the senate, and retired almost as obscure a personage as when he entered.

TROUBLE IN INDIA



Lord Elgin, secretary of state of the colonies, is accused by the British press of being responsible for the latest ferment in the Transvaal by allowing the colonial legislature to treat British Indians as criminals and send them to jail if they refuse to register their finger prints and other marks of identification. Many of the proud-spirited high caste Indians have gone to jail rather than submit to such an indignity, and in a few days their "martyrdom" will be known all over India.

Just as the stories sent home by Indian residents of the Transvaal before the Boer war of the powerlessness of the British there brought on several uprisings and two rather serious wars on the northwest frontier, so the story of the treatment of these Indians now may be the cause of still more serious troubles.

Lord Elgin is said to have explained that he was forced to consent to the registration law of the Transvaal on threat of a rebellion, but if he yielded to such a threat he showed himself to be a much weaker man than he was ten years ago when he was viceroy of India. The frontier was then in a disturbed state and the Afghans, stirred up by Russia, were committing outrages. Lord Elgin took upon himself the responsibility of sending an army to bring the disturbers to terms, which he did in short order.

Lord Elgin, although a Scotch nobleman and a descendant of an uncle of King Robert the Bruce, was born at Monklands near Montreal, while his father was governor general of Canada.

Matteawan Asylum, Thaw's New Home

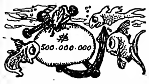
NEW YORK.—The ending of the Thaw trial will no doubt bring relief to a large number of people. As to the justice of the verdict the consensus of opinion is that it was practically the only one the jury could return.

While the Matteawan Asylum for the Criminal Insane is not the most pleasant place in the world to live in, there are also many less inviting places. The distinguishing feature of the asylum is the absence of anything in the extensive buildings or the broad grounds that surround them to suggest that the patient is in a jail. Barring a few details rendered necessary by a consideration of the safety of the inmates, the person who dwells there might well think that he was in some well ordered hotel, where he is spared the necessity of work to meet the frequent calls of the cashier, and where every effort is put forth to make his stay both pleasant and profitable.

There are no uniforms or stripes to suggest to the patient that he is a prisoner. Even the attendants are dressed in ordinary street clothes. If "Bathhouse John" should go there he would find that he might exercise his vagaries in dress to his heart's content. One man there now, it is said, insists on changing his clothes every hour and persists in wearing a silk hat and gloves and carrying a cane as he walks up and down the corridors.

Perhaps the one thing that is more institutional than any other is the dining room. The inmates, about 500 in number, are seated at 24 tables, on which are plates, bowls and spoons, no knives or forks being allowed.

Manhattan Anchored by Costly Bands



MANHATTAN ISLAND will not float out to sea. There is no danger of it losing its moorings on the surrounding shores and carrying its two million or more inhabitants down the bay. It is tied with bands of steel on all sides that have cost $500,000,000, and they promise to be increased soon.

Not being satisfied with 19 bridges anchored to its borders, it has completed, or nearly completed, seven tunnels, carrying steel rails under the surrounding waters which unite it to the further shores.

Many inhabitants of the island do not realize the number of these fixed bands that tie it on all sides. They know that there are bridges, and they have recently heard a great deal about tunnels, but comparatively few persons can name these connections and tell exactly where they are located. The best known of these steel ways is the great Brooklyn bridge, from Park row, that has been in use about 24 years and cost $21,000,000. The Williamsburg bridge, from the foot of Delancey slip, opened three years ago, and costing $12,000,000, comes next for a place in the public mind.

After these come two other East river bridges, the Manhattan bridge and the Blackwell's Island bridge, which are now well under way. Then come 14 structures, almost as important but less pretentious, over the Harlem river, Spuyten Duyvil creek and the Ship Canal.

These are to be followed by the great New York and New Jersey bridge, over the Hudson river, which has been situated between West Forty-ninth and Fiftieth streets, and which will cost $20,000,000.

The underground tunnel connections now number seven, six being under the East and North rivers, equally divided, and one under the Harlem. These will probably be doubled in number before many more years.

"L" Road Boasts One Cheery Guard

IF THE public service commissioners could enforce the employment of entertaining guards and conductors for the cars there would be fewer complaints from straphangers. People want to be amused, and really something ought to be done to make the noisy, jolting trip between stations pass pleasantly. The advertisements are not changed often enough to be of any use as a diversion and an amusing trainman would surely make his mark.

It is interesting to know that at least one guard has found this out and that there are always two cars full of cheerful people in the city.

This benefactor is a guard on the Third avenue elevated, and he gets more fun out of his trip from Bronx park to Brooklyn bridge than all the rest of the guards put together. The minute you enter his car you are struck with the smiles on the faces of all the passengers and immediately you wonder what the joke is.

Gazing on his audience stands the cheerful guard with a twinkle in his eye, and as a station comes in sight, he says confidentially and with a certain air of mystery: "Ladies and gentlemen, this station is Fifty-ninth street." For the first time everybody is much pleased to know that it is Fifty-ninth street, and there is a laugh.

This guard has a voice capable of many inflections, while his enunciation is so startlingly perfect that a combination of the two is, as the billboards say, amusing as well as instructive. One might mistake Theis—that is his name—for a friendly guide pointing out the places of interest on Third avenue, for each station is called out as if there were some particular and charming interest attached to it. Some are chanted in a monotone; some are sung on an ascending scale; others are recited in the most dramatic fashion, and the passengers are truly sorry when they hear the last number of the program at city hall and the bridge. Would there were more of him!

Passing of Club Cars of Commuters

THE "club cars," which are used to carry fashionable commuters between their suburban homes and the city, bid fair to go out of business. Cause, financial stringency. There are several of the cars in service, particularly on the Jersey roads. Morristown sends in two in the morning that return in the late afternoon. Bernardsville sends one—Plainfield and Lakewood contribute one each over the Jersey Central, Tuxedo one, Nyack one over the Erie and Newburg one over the West Shore. Brewster sends one down over the Northern; while four start from stations on the Long Island railroad.

The price for a reserved seat in one of the cars is approximately $125 a year for every 25 miles, in addition to commuted fare. The club car may run empty, but its luxury is not for the average commuter under any conditions. Nor will Morristown share its club car privilege with Summit or Short Hills. Nor Plainfield with Westfield or Cranford. Nor Lakewood with anybody, nor Tuxedo with Paterson. They are singular and expressive evidences of exclusiveness.

One of the roads has notified its patrons that a club car will be put on for 20 subscribers this year from any station. Hitherto it demanded 30 patrons. It has also reduced its price by five dollars. But, notwithstanding these tempting offers, some of them have been taken off simply because the people have not the money to spend for that purpose. In one case a darker cause was discovered. They play cards on the trips and a professional gambler secured a membership and plied his vocation so successfully as to disrupt the community as well as to nearly bankrupt it.

A New Spanish Navy.

Monarchs, like other men, combine business with pleasure, and sometimes stop on the way to the doctor's to have something sent home which has appealed to them from the shop window. King Alfonso of Spain was supposed to have had no other object in his recent visit to England than the wish to consult a noted English physician in regard to the condition of his lungs. It has since developed, however, that a representative of a Clyde shipbuilding company was with the king on his shooting excursions, and before he left had succeeded in bagging very considerable game in the shape of a commission to build a new Spanish navy. There has prevailed for some time a feeling that the Spanish navy was not all that it ought to be, or, in fact, all that it used to be. Even the Spaniards themselves have come to see it, and to admit it, and so they have authorized a new navy, at a cost of $80,000,000, to be completed in 1910. Since modern battleships cost from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 each the Spaniards should be able to secure from eight to a dozen vessels. The question naturally arises: How many of them will be turned over to the United States, to replace those which were captured by the American navy, but which sank, or turned turtle, or blew up before they could be got to port, or proved far inferior to the advertisements after getting to port? It may, of course, be necessary for a special grievance committee to present the matter, says the Youth's Companion; but the Spanish people are so courteous and so generous that they will hardly need so pointed a hint. A simple description of such of their former vessels as fell into our hands, with a brief history of them, quietly forwarded, should be sufficient to bring us half the new Spanish navy as a present.

During the recent fire in New York 45 lengths of hose burst, and it was afterward acknowledged by a member of the fire commission of that city that the hose bought under a late contract had not been put to the usual test because it was known not to be up to the standard. Such a condition as this is criminal. With faulty hose even the best water supply is worthless, and consequently not only immense amount of property but human lives may be jeopardized by inefficient means to fight fire. It is to be hoped that the men who are guilty of installing this worthless hose will be severely reprimanded and punished and that there will be no danger of a recurrence of such conditions, remarks the Baltimore American.

Tolstoi's poetic imagination makes him an inspiring prophet even to those who disagree with his opinions. In a recent message to the contentious world, in whose combats he sees no light, he compared the struggling parties to the panic-stricken prisoners in a house from which they are trying to escape. They fight to force the door open, and only seal it more hopelessly, for it opens inward, as the doors of the soul must open to the light.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., says the command to sell what thou hast and give to the poor should not be obeyed literally nowadays, lest it should make the poor improvident. Evidently the great benefits which would come to the rich from acquiring the habit of giving would not compensate for the harm it would do to the poor by making them expect gifts, thus ceasing to rustle for a job cutting ice when they had no overshoes.

A bill has been introduced in the New York legislature to the effect that if an automobilist runs a man down he must stop and give his correct name and address. It is a pity that neither the etiquette of the road or plain humanity has made this little courtesy customary, and that it has been found necessary to invoke the law to consider failure to accord it a misdemeanor.

Secretary Straus of the department of commerce and labor has decided that federal inspectors have no right to consider a man's lame legs as a disability when his efficiency does not depend upon legs, but upon eyesight and mental qualifications. Mr. Straus may get into trouble if he insists on substituting common sense for government red tape in this way.

A colored man who claims to have once held George Washington's horse has applied in New York for a marriage license. It is probably only his native gallantry that keeps him from explaining that the lady whom he is to marry used to do Martha's ironing.

Another indication of the fact that the money stringency has ceased to be serious may be found in the attention the people are again giving to murder mysteries, fashionable weddings and charity balls.

THE DELUGE.

SOLDIERS SENT TO ALASKA

TROOPS TO QUELL STRIKE RIOTS IN FAIRBANKS.

Riotous Crowds Congregate on the Streets and Capture Nonunion Men as They Arrive.

Washington.—By direction of the president, Acting Secretary Oliver Thursday ordered a company of infantry from Fort Gibbon, in Alaska, to Fairbanks, in that territory, to preserve order during the mining strike in that section. This action was taken upon representation from the United States court in Alaska to the attorney general that the presence of federal troops was needed.

Telegrams from Fairbanks to the attorney general claim that open air mass meetings are being held by the striking miners and that threats of violence have been made. The marshal has been directed by the attorney general to use all the force at his command to arrest law-breakers and to prevent intimidation. The military is expected to give the marshal moral support and also to take action should the disorder prove too great for any force he may be able to secure.

The distance from Fort Gibbon to Fairbanks is 155 miles and the troops will be carried by sleds over that route, which is said to be a very good one. If there is urgent necessity for the presence of the soldiers at Fairbanks they can get there in four or five days, but under ordinary conditions the trip takes six or seven days. Fairbanks is in the center of a mining country with a population of 7,000 or 8,000.

Persons in Washington familiar with the conditions existing at Fairbanks say the trouble is the outcome of a strike a year or more ago for higher wages and shorter hours for the miners.

Fairbanks, Alaska.—United States Marshal Perry has sworn in 250 special deputies for the protection of life and property against riotous mobs of strikers who are congregated on the streets. These mobs have been attempting to capture recent arrivals here with a view to deporting them. The marshal's force has dispersed the rioters and guarantees protection to all men in camp. All saloons are closed.

CHILEANS GREET THE FLEET.

American Battleships Reviewed in Bay of Valparaiso.

Valparaiso, Chile.—The great American fleet of 16 battleships, under the command of Rear Admiral Evans, passed Valparaiso Friday afternoon and continued on its voyage northward for Callao, Peru, the next stopping place.

All Valparaiso and thousands of persons from other cities in Chile witnessed the passing of the fleet. President Montt and the other high officials of the republic went out from shore to greet the battleships, and almost the entire Chilean navy exchanged salutes with them as they swung around Curaumilla Point and into Valparaiso bay in single file, headed by the Chilean cruiser Chacabuco and five Chilean torpedo boat destroyers. The day was perfect and the spectacle of the fleet stretched in a great semi circle as seen from the high hills around the bay was magnificent.

President Montt and other Chilean officials embarked on the training ship Gen. Baquedano and took a position well out in the harbor. Around the Baquedano the vessels swung at a speed of four knots, firing the presidential salute as they passed in review. It was one hour from the time the head of the fleet entered the bay until the last vessel had passed the president's ship and turned toward the open sea. Then the Baquedano lifted anchor and escorted the fleet well out of the bay and on its way to the north.

It was a view such as has never before been seen in Valparaiso bay, and one that will long be remembered by the people of Chile who came miles to see it.

NEW AMERICAN SKI RECORD.

John E. Venson Jumps 116 Feet at Close of Duluth Tourney.

Duluth, Minn. — Following a day's postponement on account of soft weather, the fourth annual tournament of the National Ski Association of America was wound up here Thursday afternoon on Chester Creek Hill.

The large crowd that had gathered with the expectation of seeing a new American record established, was getting ready to return home disappointed, when John Wennobo, a director of the local club, hung up a special prize for the rider that could beat 110 feet. A number of them tried it, but all fell short. Then John E. Venson came tearing down the mammoth slide, shot through the air and landed 116 feet away from the scaffold.

TORNADOES IN SOUTH

TYLER, TEX., DEVASTATED BY TERRIFIC WINDSTORM.

SEVERAL PERSONS DEAD

Towns of Mossville, Soso and Service, in Mississippi, Are Blown Away and Many Killed.

Tyler, Tex.—Tyler was swept by the most disastrous tornado in its history Friday morning about four o'clock. Coming up from the southwest, the storm swept over the main residence section of the city, leaving a trail of death and devastation.

The known dead in Tyler number four, C. A. Francis, agent of the Dallas News, wife and child about one year old, and a negro named Moses Lea, 80 years of age.

Francis was about 28 years of age and occupied a high place in the esteem of his fellow-townsmen. His dead body was found 100 yards from his wrecked home, and the body of his child was found in the street. Mrs. Francis was in the wreckage of the building.

Six Seriously Injured.

Six persons were seriously injured. They were Irwin Franklin, Mrs. Franklin and their four children. One of the children is expected to die. They were caught in the wreckage of their homes. Twelve buildings were wrecked and in the confusion which exists it is difficult to compile an accurate list of the casualties.

Wires are down in all directions from Tyler and, while reports from farmers who are hastening in to ascertain the extent of the damage are to the effect that farmhouses all around Tyler were blown down, it is impossible to ascertain the loss of life or to approximate the extent of the disaster. It is known, however, that the tornado swept everything clean for a distance of five miles.

Mississippi Towns Destroyed.

Meridian, Miss. — Three small Mississippi towns were practically demolished by a tornado Friday. Reports of the number killed range from six to ten, with the smaller number probably correct.

Mossville, Service and Soso are the towns destroyed. They are all in Jones county and all are very small, being merely a handful of scattered dwellings. L. S. Morrison, a resident of Mossville, who came here after the storm, said he was outdoors during the blow and was compelled to grasp a wire fence to keep from being blown away. He said the dead at Mossville are Alec Windham and wife, negroes. Near the town, he said, four white persons had been killed, a man and wife and their two children, whose names he did not learn. Near Service one child of Ike Holloway is reported dead and also an unknown negro.

BIG AUTO RACE BEGINS.

Six Cars Leave New York for the Run to Paris.

New York.—The six automobiles contesting in the New York-to-Paris race started from Times square, Forty-second street and Broadway, Wednesday cheered by a throng of several thousand people. Accompanied by more than 200 motors of all descriptions the racing machines made their way up Broadway and Riverside drive to the city limits, where they turned north on the road to Albany.

From that city the route to San Francisco, which is the objective point of the first stage of the trip, lies across New York state to Buffalo, thence through Cleveland and Toledo to Chicago, to Omaha, Cheyenne, Ogden, Reno, Goldfield, San Luis Obispo and San Francisco. Mayor McClellan was to have given the word to start, but was delayed, and Colgate Hoyt of the Automobile Club of America took his place.

All traffic in the neighborhood of Times square was stopped a half hour before the start. Automobiles clogged the intersecting streets and lined the route for many blocks up Broadway. No such aggregation of machines has been seen in or about New York since the last Vanderbilt cup race was run. A band in the official grandstand played the anthems of the nations as the cars lined up for the start. A pistol shot sent the contestants away amid the cheering of the people.

GIRL'S LOVE USED AS BAIT

MOTHER'S PART IN BARGAINING FOR COL. SNELL'S GOLD.

Ardent Epistles, Said to Have Been Written by Minister's Wife, Read at Trial.

Clinton, Ill. — The pitiful, miserable story of a woman's sordid desire for money was raveled in all of its revolting phases in the famous Snell will case Wednesday. It was the story of a wife—alleged to be a minister's wife—who bartered her soul for gold and sold into bondage her 15-year-old daughter.

Mute witnesses of an alleged contract made between Mrs. Lura Hamilton, wife of Rev. E. A. Hamilton, and the tottering old millionaire, Col. Thomas Snell, in the shape of letters declared to have been written by Mrs. Hamilton, were introduced and admitted as evidence in Judge Cochran's court. The letters were unsigned, but they were introduced as Mrs. Hamilton's by the attorneys, who declared there will be no trouble in proving their authenticity.

"Pat must love you. I will see to it that she is your little sweetheart. Send me money and she shall be youre and do anything you want," wrote the woman, and from all evidence the 85-year-old lover ran after both mother and daughter and supplied them with money to buy houses and lots and finery, with which to bedeck themselves.

"I love you. You are my own sweetheart. I have loved you since I was a girl of 20 years. What a fool I was not to tell you then. I have suffered agonies for 25 years for love of you," wrote this woman of 47 years.

Whether Rev. Mr. Hamilton knew the contents of the letters alleged to have been written by his wife is a mooted question. It appears from letters which have been introduced in the case that he was fully aware of it. The writer said:

"My husband says that I can go anywhere with you. He loves you. He will trust me to your care. I can take a trip to Chicago with you, and I am crazy to go. My husband has given his full permission."

Clinton, Ill. — Charles Cline, assistant postmaster of Clinton since 1891, refused to give the names of school girls with whom millionaire Col. Thomas Snell corresponded, in the will case Thursday.

He admitted that he knew the names of most of the girls, ranging in age from 12 to 18 years, for whom the eccentric old man ranted private boxes in the Clinton post office that they might send to and receive letters from Col. Snell, but said most of them were from the best Clinton families and had now grown to womanhood.

The witness told how the aged millionaire wrote love notes daily to numbers of schoolgirls, in which he inclosed from $5 to $20 in bills. He would govern the amounts returned to the writers according to the number of terms of endearment and suggestive declarations.

JANESVILLE WOMAN MURDERED.

Hotel Employe Found in Her Room with Her Throat Cut.

Janesville, Wis.—Mrs. Martha Anderson was found dead, lying on a cot in her room Thursday with her throat cut from ear to ear. Investigations by the police indicate she was murdered.

They found that the screens of the outer door had been torn away as if some one had used that means of getting into the house, the glass in the inner door broken and the door to the woman's room open.

The woman who lives downstairs said she heard voices and then shortly after groans and she called the police. The room was found to be covered with blood. Mrs. Anderson was lying on a cot with her throat cut and the windpipe severed. A razor was found lying on some clothes behind her on the floor. Her two children, who do not make their home with her, but live in the city, said that their mother had a razor, but that the one found on the floor was not hers. Mrs. Anderson worked in a local hotel and had always had a good reputation.

This is the third death mystery in Janesville. Two other women, Mrs. Madeline Clayton and Miss Helen Malone, were found dead in the river near the same spot. The mystery of their deaths have never been cleared up.

The indictments followed the refusal of the Dock and Cotton council to permit the Coal Wheelers' union to coal the steamer Hahil, which cleared here several days ago for Puerto Cortez.

BABY CRIED AND SCRATCHED

All the Time—Covered with Torturing Eczema—Doctor Said Sores Would Last for Years—Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"My baby niece was suffering from that terrible torture, eczema. It was all over her body but the worst was on her face and hands. She cried and scratched all the time and could not sleep night or day from the scratching. I had her under the doctor's care for a year and a half and he seemed to do her no good. I took her to the best doctor in the city and he said that she would have the sores until she was six years old. But if I had depended on the doctor my baby would have lost her mind and died from the want of aid. But I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and she was cured in three months. Alice L. Out of the Usual.

"Guess where I've been," said a man at the noonday lunch counter. "It is a city where in at least two churches they have little cuspidors which match the decorations of the church in the corners of the pews. In the vestibule of one of the large churches hangs a sign to this effect: 'No Spitting Allowed Inside the Church, Throw Away Your Tobacco as You Enter the Vestibule.' This a fact. I can prove it!"

One to Three at Whist.

The late Senator Hoar was extremely fond of whist, which he played with remarkable skill.

A friend says that the only time he ever knew the usually placid and genial man from Massachusetts to be absolutely impatient was when on one occasion at whist the senator had an unusually stupid partner. Notwithstanding this handicap, the pair were winning right along even against good players.

In the middle of one game, some one paused behind the senator's chair and asked, "Well, senator, how are you getting on?"

"Very well, indeed," was the reply, "in view of the fact that I have three adversaries."—Sunday Magazine.

COFFEE DRINKING

A Doctor Says It Weakens the Heart.

"In my opinion," says a well known German physician, "no one can truthfully say that coffee agrees with him, as it has long since been proven that caffeine, contained in coffee, is an injurious, poisonous substance which weakens and degenerates the heart muscles.

"For this reason the regular use of coffee, soon or late, causes a condition of undernourishment, which leads to various kinds of organic disease.

"Convinced of this fact, I have often sought for some healthful beverage to use instead of coffee. At last I found the thing desired in Postum. Having had occasion to forbid people using coffee, whose hearts were affected, I have recommended Postum as a beverage, since it is free from all injurious or exciting substances. I know this from results in my own family, and among patients.

"Hundreds of persons who now use Postum in place of coffee, are greatly benefited thereby." "There's a Reason."

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

The State Wins.

Duluth—Holding that the law specifying definitely the privileges granted in a permit to cut timber from state land must be strictly adhered to by the courts, the supreme court yesterday held for the state in its suit against the Rat Portage Lumber company, reversing the St. Louis county district court. The court holds that the argument that inconvenience might result from a strict enforcement of the terms of the law cannot be heard in defense when the law is couched in definite and certain terms.

This suit was brought by the state to recover the value of 934,010 feet, board measure, of logs removed by the company from state land, for the cutting and removing of which a permit had been granted to the company by the state under the timber act. This permit had expired, however, after the logs had been cut and some of them removed, those involved in this suit remaining on the land until after the expiration of the permit. The company claimed that its failure to remove the logs within the life of the permit was due to the inclement weather and the difficulty of securing experienced woodsmen for the work.

$50,000 Gone.

Minneapolis—A tin box, the contents of which are valued at $50,000, and personal property of Daniel C. Hopkins, vice president of the Hopkins Land company, has disappeared from his office in the Metropolitan Life Insurance building, Minneapolis.

The Mill City police are trying to solve the mystery and seem to be baffled. They say the case is one of the most difficult that the department ever has attempted.

Mr. Hopkins believes the bonds and securities were stolen from his desk. The papers were locked in a safe deposit box, which was left on Mr. Hopkins' desk for a moment while he stepped into a rear room. Since that the papers have not been seen by their owner. Mr. Hopkins says he has absolutely no recollection as to whether the box still was on the desk when he returned.

Think City Deer Killed.

McKinley—The deer that made McKinley famous has disappeared and it is believed that it has been killed. It was a doe, captured in the woods in the spring, together with its twin sister, and was the property of Ald. Joseph Ahlim. The deer had great intelligence and extraordinary pugnacity, having attacked and bested the prize bulldog of the town. A boy twisted its tail, was knocked down and his face cut by the deer's hoofs. Although the animal has often remained out for a day or two, it now has been gone for ten days, and is believed to have encountered some poacher who took advantage of the animal's tameness. A liberal reward will be paid by the citizens of McKinley for information that will lead to the arrest and punishment of the guilty person.

Wins Prizes Easily.

Pine Island—Minnesota butter and cheese makers are becoming so accustomed to winning prizes that they no longer have to make an effort to win them. George Hoefler has just found this out.

A short time ago he sent samples of brick and limburger cheese which he had made at the Pine Island factory to a friend, who is an inspector in the New York dairy and food department. A little later he read in a dairy paper that he had won two prizes in the cheese contest in which the best cheesemakers of New York state participated. A letter to the New York inspector brought the information that he had entered the two samples sent him and he inclosed a check for the prizes won.

A Small Check.

Sparta—O. H. Haehnke, justice of the peace, has just received from the Oliver Iron Mining company, the operating company of the steel corporation, a check for 7 cents. Now the company remits the balance. So far as known on the range this is the smallest check ever given out by the great steel corporation.

THE FLOOD IS FAST SUBSIDING

WATER AROUND PITTSBURG AND ELSEWHERE IS QUICKLY RECEDING.

Millions of Dollars of Damage Has Been Done. No Loss of Life has Been Reported, but Some Have had Narrow Escapes.

Pittsburg, Feb. 17.—After reaching 30.8 feet at noon yesterday and remaining at that stage for three hours the high water in the river is now slowly receding. The danger mark in this city is 22 feet.

The damage and suffering caused by the annual flood is widespread. A remarkable feature, however is the absence of fatalities. As far as is known there has been no sacrifices of human life, and this is attributed to the local United States weather bureau.

Live stock has perished in considerable numbers and there are many reports of persons having narrowly escaped death in an endeavor to save their property and live stock.

Miles of property in Greater Pittsburg and vicinity are submerged and it will be some time to-morrow before the water will be back in the channels of the rivers and numerous small streams.

Thousands of business firms in the down town portions of Pittsburg are attempting tonight to clear the cellars of their buildings of water. Every few feet along the sidewalk are men pumping the water and hundreds of these little streams can be seen spurting into the street. Electric light plants in these buildings and other valuable machinery is practically a total loss.

The actual monetary damage cannot be ascertained at this time, but from all accounts it will run up to several million dollars.

The suffering caused by the high water is intense. Thousands of persons are living in the upper floors of their homes, using skiffs as a means of transportation to and fro. The lower portion of their homes are filled with water.

SUFFOCATED IN WELL.

John Huhn is Buried by Ground Materials at New Ulm.

New Ulm, Minn., Feb. 15.—John Huhn, an employe at the Eagle Roller mill, was suffocated while at work Friday afternoon by falling into the chute from one of the shorts bins and being buried in the stuff which he was handling. He was extricated as soon as possible, but lived only a moment or two after reaching the air. He had four sons working with him on the mill.

Huhn and some other men were loading a car and Foreman Herzog sent him into the bin to release some of the shorts that had got clogged there. He went down on an iron rung, steadying himself by holding to a rope, and began to loosen the clogged shorts with a long stick. While he was working in this way he lost his balance and fell into the chute.

The aperture was too small to allow his body to pass through, and he was caught there. As he fell the material which he had been loosening with his stick began to slide, and he was buried almost instantly.

Men who were working in the car which was being loaded saw Huhn's predicament and at once chopped away the chute and released him, but after being taken out he only gasped once or twice and died.

RESPECTABLE STUDENTS IN BOLD BURGLAR BAND

COMMIT DARING THEFTS LED BY REPORTER WHO WRITES UP THE CRIMES.

Utica, N. Y.—A remarkable criminal conspiracy that threatens to envelop sons of many prominent Utica families and send several heretofore highly respected young men to the Elmira reformatory or other similar institutions has been uncovered by the local police.

Two students of the Utica free academy, Ashley Lock, aged 19, and John P. Jones, aged 18, have been arrested on a charge of burglary, and they have made confessions.

Young Jones is the son of a leading Welsh clergyman here. His duties as a reporter on a Utica paper afforded opportunity for the wide play of his criminal tendencies, for it was in connection with his newspaper work he perpetrated many of his most daring burglaries.

He Confessed to Stealing Money.

Jones confessed to looting classrooms at the academy, stealing money, wearing apparel and school supplies. These thefts were fully described by Jones in articles he wrote for newspapers. From a drug store he stole $200 in cash at different times while telephoning stories to his newspaper. His success along this line prompted him to take a partner, and he invited his schoolmate, Ashley Lock, considered one of the brightest students in Utica academy, to join him.

Others among the students also went into the criminal combine about this time, according to the confession of Jones and Lock, and the scope of their thefts was considerably extended. Jones and Lock robbed the home of a contractor residing next to Jones own home. Jones wrote a thrilling account of the burglary.

Next Jones and his band turned their attention to the newspaper office where he was employed. They stole the pay envelopes of his fellow workmen and incidentally his own. Jones and his companions used the proceeds of their thefts to speculate in the stock market.

IMPALED ON DEER'S ANTLER.

Student's Side Pierced in Park When Escorting a Young Woman.

Wheeling, W. Va.—In a successful attempt to save Miss Helen Bloch, daughter of a millionaire tobacco manufacturer of this city, from an enraged buck, Frederick Hall, a university student and son of James K. Hall, postmaster here, was seriously wounded the other day. The deer charged the couple repeatedly, and at last, unable to evade it, Hall placed himself between the animal and the girl. He was struck in the side, and a prong on one of the antlers went deep into his body.

Two men beat off the deer with clubs when Hall was helpless on the ground and Miss Bloch was without protection. The young couple were walking along quietly, when suddenly the buck charged them. The girl screamed, but Hall swung her clear and as the deer went past he attempted to carry her to the fence, 100 feet distant. But he was kept busy sidestepping the deer with the girl in his arms. So quick were the charges that the youth was without a moment for rest, and soon he found himself unable to evade the buck. Miss Bloch continued to scream, and her cries were heard by two men working on the estate.

They were just going through the fence when the buck struck Hall, driving him about ten feet. He was unable to rise, but the girl struggled to her feet and was standing paralyzed by fear, with the deer ready for another charge, when the men came up. The buck promptly went at them with lowered head, and one of them knocked it down with a blow from a club on the head. Both men then laid on heavily with their clubs until the buck got up and raced off. An operation was performed on young Hall in his home, and it is believed he will recover. Miss Bloch escaped with only a fierce shock.

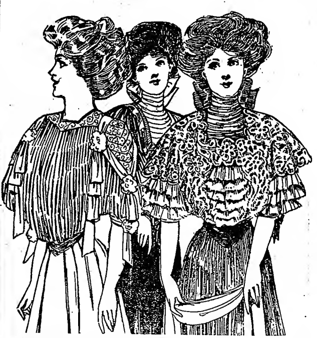
Evening Frocks



The group of gowns shows an evening waist of pale blue chiffon over self-tone silk combined with lace and velvet ribbon, as well as tiny rosettes. It may be worn with a dark colored skirt, but a light tan would be the prettiest.

The other waist is of filet lace, with foundation of chiffon, worn with a rajah silk skirt.

The central figure is an imported gown of rose chiffon, cloth trimmed, with tiny rosettes of maline and festooned velvet ribbon. The dress is embroidered in gold thread, with gold tassels on berthe and sleeves.

"HOMY-LOOKING" ROOM THAT CALLS ONLY FOR CARE AND GOOD TASTE.

A girl can learn nothing more useful than the simple little trick of having her own room beautiful, attractive and clean. There are girls and girls and rooms and rooms, yet somehow or other some girls care little for their rooms, and some rooms have the frowning aspect of a bastile. It is not always possible to have fine furniture, but one can have a "homy-looking" room. One thing is absolutely necessary—a room must be clean. A few good pictures, clean bedspreads, pretty linen dresser pieces, neat, but not garish, and chair cushions are necessary. Cover the ugly trunk with a pretty silkateen cover, and have a scrap basket to hold the little odds and ends which must be burned. On the table have well-selected books and magazines. Never let a trashy book have space in your home. Select pictures as you would friends, carefully and for their real value. Keep gay postal cards in a neat postal-card book. Do not decorate the walls with them, for pretty as many are they soon hang crooked and make the room look like Dickens' curiosity shop. Have a place for shoes, for if anything makes a room untidy it is a pair of tan shoes lying pigeon-toed under the bed, a pair of black slippers cuddled under the dresser, while the center stand is decorated with red woolen ones—a common sight in most girls' rooms. Keep the clothes press in order so that when the door is opened you will not be ashamed for any woman to see how you keep your clothes. If you put things away as you use them, you can have a room like this. And whatever you have, let one pretty flower grace your room. It can be a palm, fern or blooming plant, and if it does die in the room, get a new one. A room is the only home some girls have; then make it a homy home and find home contentment in it.

Stocks in Ruff Form.

Modified Elizabethan ruffs are returning in the form of stocks to complete my lady's toilet. They are a decided improvement on the ancient neckwear, for they are both comfortable and chic.

One is a plain white collar with a ruffle of narrow nainsook at the top and a plaited ruffle of the same material at the bottom, the latter shaped like a bib. Sometimes this is of lace and sometimes it is inlaid with insertion. The bib is not quite as wide in the back as in the front, but it prevents any discrepancy between the blouse and collar.

A very beautiful collar of this description is made of fine linen done in narrow tucks. The top frill is of gathered linen, while the bib is Irish lace just full enough to prevent binding.

When a touch of color is desired the bib may be of heavy linen embroidered all round in the buttonhole stitch.

The new stocks all hook on the back and are fastened in place with a long jeweled or plain gold bar pin directly in the center of the front.

Roman Striped Pillow.

Colors required for pillow: One spool each burnt orange, bright dark blue, dark red, moss green, rose pink, black. For a Delicate Baby.

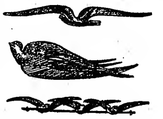
One woman finds that the white of a raw egg, beaten up until it is stiff with a pinch of salt added, can be digested by a baby or an invalid when all else fails. Prepared in this way, it is tempting to the appetite.

BATISTE MUCH USED FOR SHIRT-WAISTS AND THIN DRESSES.

Batiste is shown in nearly all of the finer waists and thin white dresses. Certainly it is something suitable for the purpose and looks exceedingly well with its natural trimming of valenciennes. Fancy waist sleeves for dressy occasions are not long nor short. The puff is elbow length, with a cuff reaching about half way down the forearm. It is quite ornamental, being fashioned of tucks and insertion and edged with lace ruffles, possibly three-fourths of an inch wide. The cuffs are not so wide, either, and the puffed portions show considerable trimming of tucks, inlaid panels of lace and other decorative features frequently seen in lace effects. Mandarin materials are used for the colored waists, though the mandarin lines are fast disappearing, only where drapery in diaphanous effects are desired for sleeve arrangements. For general wear the shirt waist is strictly tailored and can be made in practically any of the tailored modes. The sleeves are long and often just a common coat sleeve with the little extra fullness plaited and stitched at the hand or finished with a cuff. The bishop sleeve is a standard pattern and will be seen on many shirt waists, while the leg o' mutton sleeve is mostly used for thin dresses, particularly the white batiste frocks.

BIRD DESIGNS ARE POPULAR.



Bird and insect designs are fashionable in novelty jewelry. A charming necklace has in the way of pendants, suspended by almost invisible chains, a flight of swallows in rarely colored enamel. Brooches, too, and stickpins show a fancy for graceful flying birds and dragon flies.

Sash of Ribbon.

A most exquisitely dainty girdle is made of about four yards of ribbon four or five inches wide. The girdle is boned and is made to fit snugly. It is a trifle longer in the back than at the sides and front. Two ends are left to hang half-way down the skirt and these ends are trimmed with narrow ribbon quilling. Two rosettes hide the opening of the back and they are made of the quilling on a foundation of crinoline, with a tiny cut steel buckle in the center of each rosette.

Home-Made Perfume.

To extract the essence of any flower, put layers of any desired flower in an earthen jar, covering each layer with salt. Do this until the jar is full. Cover closely and set in a cool spot. Leave this for a month and then strain off the essence by means of a press. Put this essence in a bottle and set it in the sunshine, where the dew can fall on the tightly corked bottle for several weeks. A few drops of this clarified essence will give a sweet fragrance in a pint of water.

To Brighten Tired Eyes.

If, after a day's work, reading or shopping, you find that your eyes are heavy, tired and lusterless, lay over them for a few minutes tea leaves soaked in hot water and folded in a soft handkerchief. Then bathe the whole face in water and eau de cologne. This is wonderfully refreshing and brightens tired eyes in a remarkable way.

Bennie Steenerson Drowned.

Benjamin Steenerson, the only son of Congressman and Mrs Halvor Steenerson, was drowned, off the tug Annie R. Wood on Sunday last, on the way from Newport to Fort Greble R.I. He is supposed to have perished in attempt to save a marines life, by the name of John M. McIntosh. There are some suspicion of foul play in connection with the drowning and Mr Steenerson left for there at once to investigate. At last accounts the body had not been recovered.

The Crookston Daily Journal says "General sorrow is felt here as a result of the tragedy. Bennie was born in Crookston 24 years ago and was popular with all who knew him. He is the only remaining child of Congressman and Mrs. Halvor Steenerson they having buried their daughter only a few years ago, which makes the shock doubly hard to them. The many friends of the family will unite in extending their heart felt sympathy to them in their hour of trouble."

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

The Orloff Diamond.

In the Russian scepter is the famous Orloff diamond, which once adorned the head of a Brahman idol. Stolen by a French soldier, it was sold to an Indian merchant for $10,000, resold for $60,000 and purchased by Catherine II. for $450,000. Wilkie Collins turned its history to good account in his weird romance, "The Moonstone."

Every Dog Has His Day

By C. M. JENNINGS

(Copyright.)

George Lester stood at the window of his flat watching the pretty girl who lived opposite.

She came down the steps, crossed the road, and then, as she reached Lester's side of the pavement, disappeared from view beneath him.

"Just my luck!" he murmured. "If she'd only kept to her own side of the street I could have enjoyed the sight of her for half a minute at least!"

With a sigh of disappointment he left the window, and went back to his book and pipe.

A minute later, his man-servant came in. "A lady to see you, sir," he announced.

Lester stared at the card on the tray. "Miss Claire Grantley," he read. "Who is she—what does she want?" he asked, somewhat irritably.

"I think she's brought a dog, sir," hesitated Collins.

"Think! What do you mean by 'think?' If she's got a dog—"

"Beg pardon, sir, but it's wrapped up."

Lester jumped up. "By Jove! It's Jock! Some one must have found him, and come in answer to my advertisement. Show the lady in at once."

He had barely time to put his pipe away and stir the fire when the door opened. Lester stared. Before him stood the identical girl he had been watching from his window—the girl who lived opposite! She carried something wrapped in a shawl.

"Miss—Grantley?" he faltered, offering her a chair.

"Yes," she answered, a little shyly. "I—I think I've found your dog. I only saw your advertisement this morning, or I would have come sooner."

She began untying the shawl. "He was so very frisky, and I was afraid he might run away again," she explained, while Lester leant forward expectantly.

"Yes, that my Jock all over! He's always running away. It's really most kind of you to take so much trouble—"

"There, he's out!" she broke in, as a small brindled mongrel escaped from the shawl. Save in size and coloring, it was as unlike Lester's valuable Aberdeen terrier as a dog could be. But he had no time to say so, for, as the animal leapt to the floor it seized his extended hand between its teeth and bit viciously.

"Oh, I hope he hasn't bitten you!" cried the girl in alarm.

"No—it's nothing," he declared, retreating before the snarling mongrel.

"Oh, but he has," she insisted, jumping up. "Do let me look."

The touch of her soft white fingers thrilled him. She misinterpreted the little satisfied ejaculation that escaped him as her hand met his.

"Now I've hurt you," she lamented.

"Hurt isn't exactly the word—"

In the quick glance that she gave his face she read her mistake.

"Your own dog, too," she said, dropping his hand. "How very extraordinary!"

"Yes—isn't it," he stammered.

She was so distractingly pretty that he hadn't the heart to undeceive her—to admit that the dog was not his. The truth would only mortify her pride, and perhaps bring the interview to an abrupt end.

"It's a mere scratch," he went on. "He—that is, Jock—always was a bit uncertain, you know."

"And yet," she declared, "he was quite friendly with me."

"Does that surprise you?" he asked with a smile of much meaning.

"But perhaps—perhaps you are not very fond of him," she returned, ignoring both question and smile.

Lester gave the small cur a glance of misgiving before answering. "On the contrary, I—I'm quite devoted to him," he stammered.

"I don't mind confessing," she returned, "that I was very disappointed when I saw your advertisement. You see, he had followed me home—"

"Naturally!"

"And I had got quite attached to him."

"Would—would you like to keep him?" he asked with unnecessary eagerness.

"I believe you want to get rid of him," she chided.

"Not at all," he protested; "but if you—"

"You did want him back, I suppose, or you wouldn't have advertised."

"Of course," he said feebly.

There was a short pause.

"You'll let me give you some tea?" he asked, partly with the object of changing the subject.

She began by demurring, but gave way. Lester pressed the bell.

"I've often wondered when we should meet," was his next speech, made in the nature of a reconnaissance.

"Have you really?" she responded, taking cover.

"I see you every day, you know."

"Ye—s—I suppose—I think I've seen you—sometimes."

The admission, made with feminine hesitation, elated him. Her interest perhaps squared with his in her.

"You do look lonely sometimes," she smiled.

"You've noticed that?" he asked eagerly. "Do you know"—he drew his chair nearer—"I really have gregarious instincts."

"I don't think I quite—"

"I yearn for companionship," he explained.

"But you'll have it now—now that you've got Jock back," she countered.

Unconsciously he began regarding his hand.

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" she cried. "I quite forgot your damaged hand."

"And my lacerated heart," he added recklessly.

She laughed a little nervously. "Does Jock bite as deep as that?"

"I'm deadly serious," he said.

"If you feel like that, I don't think I ought to leave Jock with you."

"No, don't—I mean stop with him."

"But you must have so much to say to one another!"

Lester was about to disclaim the necessity for confidential intercourse with the strange beast when a succession of loud barks—the real Jock's barks—froze his powers of conversation. Miss Grantley listened attentively.

"It sounds like a dog," she remarked.

Lester tried hard to appear unconcerned. "It does—rather," he admitted.

She looked at him narrowly. "Do you keep—many?" she asked.

"Oh, a few," said he airily, as a mighty scratching began at the door.

"He wants to come in, I think."

But the door was opened before he could reach it, and Jock dashed in. Collins stood in the doorway expectantly.

"It's Jock come home, sir," he observed.

He waited for a moment, but not liking the look in Lester's face, retired rather hurriedly. Jock, meanwhile, had sprung at his master in an ecstasy, licked both his hands, made a friendly inspection of Miss Grantley, and became aware of the stranger under the sofa. With a growl and a dash he was upon him. Miss Grantley screamed. Lester rushed into the melee, got hold of Jock by the tail, and dragged him off the masquerader.

He Drew His Chair Nearer.

Then he looked at Miss Grantley. Humiliation, distress and reproach were some of the expressions he read in her face.

"You had no right—" she began indignantly.

"I know," he interposed with contrition. "I wish I hadn't, but—"

"I should prefer not to hear your excuses, Mr. Lester. You meant me to go away under the impression that the dog I found was yours!"

"On the contrary, I meant you to stop and be assured that he was."

"How do you mean?" she asked stiffly. "He is a stranger to you. He bit you."

"I don't think you ought to hold me responsible for either of those facts," he pleaded.

Miss Grantley relented a little. Her tone became less indignant. "Whatever must you think of me?" she flushed.

"If I were to tell you, you might be angry."

"I don't think that would distress you much," she pouted.

"It's because you think me a fraud that I must tell you," he said, earnestly, drawing nearer. "In self-defense, I won't go as far as to say that I'd rather die than that you should have a bad opinion of me, because if I did you'd think me an ass; but don't you see it's just because I have a very great—regard for you that I didn't like to undeceive you?"

She kept silence.

"Are you very angry with me?" he went on.

"I'm not really angry with you. But I must go now," she said, picking up her dog.

Lester stopped her. "You can't have your dog back—unless you'll have me as well—Claire!"

She turned away to hide a rosy flush. "I didn't ask for the reward," she murmured demurely.

"I'm a poor sort of a reward."

"But—I'll take it—in kind!" she hesitated, turning to him.

"I'll pay now!" he said, as he kissed her.

MAKING BARN SANITARY.

Good Light, Pure Air and General Cleanliness Essential.

Dairy experts agree that the essentials of a good dairy barn are plenty of light, pure air and as little filth as possible. There are but few barns that cannot be transformed into reasonably sanitary stables at moderate expense.

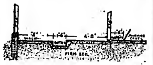
It is not difficult to put in extra windows, and every stable for dairy cows should have windows that will admit direct sunlight on bright days and at least one 3x3-foot window should be put in for each two stalls. The frame must fit tight, so as to secure protection during cold weather. Arrangements should be made for opening these for ventilation. Make walls tight by putting in an inside wall of thin lumber, if necessary filling the space between with cut straw or sawdust.

Good ventilation can be secured in several ways. If the stable is low and without extensive outside wall, a ventilating flue on the King system, opening near the floor, with an outlet near the gable of the barn, will give plenty of change of air. A flue two feet square will change the air for 20 cows. The inlets should be near the ceiling of the stable.

Stable Floor of Wood.

In well-exposed stables muslin curtains at the windows may be used, says Farm and Home, one-half of the windows of the stable being replaced with light frames covered with thin muslin. Experienced dairymen who have used this system give two square feet of curtain per 1,000 pounds of cow as best. The change of air through these will keep the stable free from foul air. While this is a new scheme it has been fairly successful.

To avoid undue filth in the stable a good floor is absolutely necessary. Cement and concrete are, of course, ideal, but wooden floors are fairly satisfactory if well laid with proper slope. The main trouble is that they decay too quickly. Build them as shown in Fig. 1 with a slight slope of the stall and walk towards gutter. Do not put a board floor directly upon the ground, but raise it sufficiently so that it will be dry underneath, although not exposed to the outside air, or it will be cold. Good floors make the animals more comfortable, save more of the valuable manure, make it easier to clean the stable and make possible cleaner milk. The best mixture for a cement floor is six parts gravel or stone, two parts sand and one part Portland cement laid three inches thick on a firm basis of earth, stone ashes or gravel, which has been tamped solid, as shown in Fig. 2.



Stable Floor of Concrete.

After you have a well-lighted, well-ventilated and clean-floored stable, then you must practice cleaning it thoroughly every day and make some provision against dust. Plain old-fashioned whitewash made of one-half bushel of unslaked lime slaked in boiling water and applied with a spray pump is the best covering for walls. If the walls are quite smooth a brush may be used, but the spray is more effective. A bushel of lime should make 30 gallons of whitewash. Some recipes for whitewash involve the use of salt, oil, glue, etc., but these are too complicated for ordinary use. A little salt may be added if handy, but frequent applications of plain whitewash are effective.

Ventilation of Stable.

If your stable is ventilated only from above, you are drawing off the warm air, which means loss to the cows in comfort, and loss of the purest air. Foul air must be drawn off on a level with the stable floor, for bad air is much heavier than good air. When the cows lie down and the ventilation is poor, they breathe foul air. It has its effect on the cows as well as on the product.

Solder the Pails.

Milk pails with rags drawn in through holes in the bottom are a miserable nuisance. You can get a little kit of soldering tools very cheap, and it is not much of a trick to learn how to use it. Scrape away the metal around the hole, drop a bit of resin over the place, or a little sulphuric acid, and then go ahead with your solder. Make a nice, smooth job of it.

A Cow Shed.

Have you an open shed facing the sunshine for your cows to run under in the warm part of the day? If not, wouldn't it be a good plan to build one as soon as you can? The stock will take lots of comfort in it.

Rainy weather has made the yards muddy during mild days and horridly rough and frozen. Plenty of room under a tight roof is appreciated now.

FEEDING SILAGE IN FIELD.

Method Followed by One Man Who Has Sixty-Four Cows.

E. R. Hembrough, Morgan county, Ill., has an idea of feeding cattle which we believe not many are practicing at the present time.

Mr. Hembrough, says the Farmers' Review, has used a silo for several years and has drawn his silage out to the feeding lot in wagon loads and there thrown it into the rack direct from the wagon. He also feeds a large amount of it in the barns.

Last season he decided to put up a large silo in this feeding lot, deciding on this location for several reasons: First, that it was out of danger of fire; second, it was easier filling it, as there was nothing in the way; third, that he could load his wagon in peace and save the cattle from being disturbed, and fourth, having the feed close to where he was going to use it.

At the present time Mr. Hembrough is hauling a 40-bushel load of silage twice a day, feeding it to 64 head of cattle, taken from the silo by means of a chute over the doorway, so that the silage drops directly into the wagon box.

The silo erected by Mr. Hembrough last season was 18 feet in diameter and 30 feet high, made of Oregon fir, with full length stave, and believes that he has one of the best and most convenient made.

The silo that he uses at the barn is of a smaller size and is a home-made one built several years ago. The general idea of placing a silo is supposed to be at the end of an alley and beside a feeding barn, while many might practice Mr. Hembrough's way of feeding to a better advantage, as oftentimes it is difficult to set the silo where it would be convenient to feed all stock.

Insurance would not be necessary when placed at a distance from the barn. Mr. Hembrough feeds stock in different places about the farm, sometimes on grass, again in the feed lot and also in the barn, and he wanted it convenient to load it.

His mentioning that he liked to load the silage in peace makes it apparent that the stock relish this feed, and when the silage is stirred up in loading, the odor from it tells the cattle that it is feeding time, and, if running loose, they will get as near the wagon as possible.

It is now a fact fully established that all kinds of cattle like silage and do well on it.

CONGESTED UDDER.

Method of Treatment Which Should Be Followed.

When it is noticed that the udder is attacked with congestion, which soon runs into the inflammatory stage, characterized by increased heat, swelling, tenderness, etc., prompt action should be taken. In full, fat, heavy milkers it is wise to administer a full dose of cathartic medicine (epsom salts, one pound; fluid extract of goldenseal and fluid extract of ginger, of each one-half ounce; hot water, one pint. Apply warm fomentations to the udder for at least one hour, twice a day, and after each bathing with warm water rub the udder gently with a liniment made of camphorated oil, eight ounces; extract of belladonna, one ounce; mix. Draw off the milk four times a day, carefully using a teat syphon if necessary. When these precautions are taken in time, as a rule, it saves further trouble. When neglected—pathological (diseased) changes—the products of inflammation are liable to follow, and there appears to be no end to the trouble, inconvenience, and loss that usually is experienced in such cases. In the advanced stages it is so difficult to comprehend the real condition of the parts from a written statement, which is so often devoid of necessary details, that it is not always an easy matter to describe the necessary treatment.

If one or more of the quarters of the udder are indurated (hard), causing some pain on pressure, apply warm fomentations, and if suppuration follows open freely with a sharp knife.

There is rarely any hope of restoring the milk secretion to a normal quantity, and the better way is to let the cow go dry as soon as practicable. What the cow will amount to in the future as a milk producer it is impossible to predict. Much depends on the present condition of the udder and the chances of its being restored to a normal state.—Dr. Tuthill.

THE MODEL DAIRY COW.

Features Which Distinguish Her from the Poor Animal.

Some years since Hoard's Dairyman prepared a drawing of what it considered the true form of a dairy cow with a naming of the various points. This cut we print in connection with this article. It may be well to say that in actual experience it will be found that not all cows with this form are first-class dairy animals, neither are all cows who do not have this shape and proportion poor dairy animals. But as a rule, cows possessing such a form are much more likely to be profitable dairy cows.

PERUNA EDITORIAL NO. I.

Dr. Hartman is now offering Peruna to the public as a regular pharmaceutical product. It is just as ethical as any compound put up for the medical profession. No straining of medical ethics can find any fault with it. THE PRINCIPAL ACTIVE INGREDIENTS are prominently incorporated in the label on the bottle, that the people may know that the claims made for Peruna have a true justification.

The only departure we shall make from medical ethics in the conduct of Peruna affairs in the future, is the fact that we shall continue to advertise and sell our product TO THE PEOPLE.

If we would agree to sell to doctors only, to advertise for doctors only, than the medical fraternity would be obliged to recognize Peruna as being entirely within their approval.

BUT WE SHALL NOT DO THIS.

We shall continue to offer Peruna to the people. We shall continue to convey to the people our claims for Peruna as a household remedy. We shall continue to supply the people with free literature, teaching them how to use our medicine, teaching them how to avoid disease, teaching them many things of benefit to the home. We shall continue to do this, whether the medical profession like it or not.

We are proposing from this time on to take the public into our confidence. Notwithstanding that some imitators and substitutors will be attempting to put up something which they consider just as good as Peruna, we are going to draw aside the veil of secrecy and allow any one who chooses to know exactly OF WHAT PERUNA IS COMPOSED.

This ought to disarm all honest criticism. We expect, however, that criticism will continue. On some pretext or other those who are envious of the success of Peruna will continue to find fault. But we are determined to give such people no just complaint.

People Who Object to Liquid Medicines Can Now Secure Peruna Tablets.

PERUNA IS A GREAT MEDICINE.

It has become a household word in millions of homes. Our faith in the remedy is stronger than ever. Every year we expect to establish new plants in foreign lands until the people of all the world are supplied with this valuable household remedy.

WE CLAIM PERUNA TO BE A CATARRH REMEDY. Buy a bottle and try it. If it helps you, be honest and acknowledge that it has helped you.

If you want us to we will publish your statement exactly as you furnish it to us. We will add no words, take away no words. If you wish us to we will publish your portrait in connection with it. We will not do this without your written request, without your entire consent.

Peruna has cured thousands of people of chronic catarrh, in many phases and locations. At least, that is what the people say to us, through unsolicited testimonials. Peruna will cure many thousand more, in spite of fabricated slanders to the contrary.

WE GUARANTEE EVERY BOTTLE OF PERUNA TO CONTAIN THE INGREDIENTS PRINTED ON THE LABEL.

We guarantee that every testimonial we use is absolutely true—in the exact language of the testifier.

We guarantee that every photograph published is the photograph of the person whose name it bears, that every word of every testimonial was authorized by the hand that signed it.

We are determined to beat our opponents by being fairer than they are, by dealing squarer than they dare to. We are determined to meet falsehood with truth, duplicity with candor, insincerity with sincerity.

We know that the users of Peruna will appreciate our stand. We believe that the dealers in Peruna will applaud our course. We expect even our opponents will be obliged to acknowledge finally that Peruna is not only an honest and useful remedy, but one of the GREATEST HOUSEHOLD MEDICINES ON THE CONTINENT.

The One Hundred and Seventy-Sixth Anniversary of Washington's Birth

George Washington was born on the banks of the Potomac, in Westmoreland county, Virginia, on February 22, 1732.

At the age of 16 he was a good surveyor and at 19 he was adjutant of one of the Virginia militia districts, with the rank of major.

At the age of 21 he was selected by Gov. Dinwiddie of Virginia as a "person of distinction," under orders of the British government, to demand an explanation of the French, who were forming settlements in the northwest and in the Mississippi valley.

At the age of 23 he was commissioned as colonel in the British army, and from that time, when as a "soldier of the king" he became distinguished on the field, until he took leave of his officers on November 23, 1783, after having overthrown the royal government, he was the most important factor in the affairs of the new country.

Ending an eventful and successful military career, he retired to his home at Mount Vernon, Va., from which place in 1784 he wrote to Lafayette: "I have become a private citizen on the banks of the Potomac, and under the shadow of my own vine and fig tree, free from the bustle of the camp. . . . I am solacing myself with those tranquil enjoyments of which the soldier who is ever in pursuit of fame, the statesman . . . and the courtier . . . can have little conception."

At the time Washington wrote the quoted words to Lafayette he had no thought that he would be called as the president of the republic, the living reality of which he had created. But so, and on the 30th day of April, 1789, having been elected on the 6th day of the same month, he took the oath of office in New York city, having journeyed to that place from Mount Vernon in his private carriage.

Washington served his country as its first chief executive for a period of eight years—two terms—and declined a third term. No other president since Washington has enjoyed that distinction.

The national government, in conjunction with the states, has undertaken to do honor to his memory by making his birthday a national holiday and by erecting monuments of marble pointing skyward, but the grandest and most expressive tribute is embraced in the lettering: "First in War, First in Peace, First in the Hearts of His Countrymen," as chiseled on the statue which stands on the plaza at the east of the capitol.

Washington was a very enthusiastic Mason, and was identified with the lodge in Alexandria, Va., which was chartered in 1783 under the Pennsylvania jurisdiction, but in 1788 it was rechartered as the Alexandria-Washington lodge, No. 22, and Washington was named as worshipful master in the charter.

Christ church, Alexandria, Va., ivy and moss covered, was completed and delivered over to the vestry on February 27, 1773, the construction having been begun January 1, 1767. Col. Washington was one of the first vestrymen of the church, and on the day that it was turned over by the builders he purchased pew No. 5 for the sum of £36 10 shillings, agreeing also to pay an annual rental of £5 for the same.

The church was consecrated by Bishop Claggett of Maryland on June 14, 1814. This ancient and historic edifice is still used as a place of worship. It is kept open every week day, and is annually visited by thousands. A small admission fee is charged for the purpose of defraying the expense of keeping it open to the public. In the rear of and on the south side is an old burial ground, and some very old tablets, antedating the construction of the church, are still standing, and are in a remarkable state of preservation.

The square pew, with open door, on the right of the pulpit and under the balcony, is pew No. 5, which was occupied by Col. Washington when attending services there until the date of his death; he never changed his membership from the church. A silver plate, bearing his autograph, is on the top of the pew door. Originally all the pews in the church were built in a square form, but later, with the exception of the Washington pew, were changed to the present-day style of construction.

On the east wall, under the balcony and to the right of the pulpit, is a memorial tablet placed to the memory of Gen. Washington.

A similar tablet, placed to the memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee, occupies similar space on the wall to the left of the pulpit. Gen. Lee was a vestryman of the church at the commencement of the civil war, and the pew occupied by him is across the aisle from and a little to the rear of the Washington pew. This pew is indicated by a silver plate showing his autograph.

Washington received his commission in 1755, as a colonel in the British army, from Gen. Braddock, in the Carlyle house, at Alexandria, Va. This house was erected in 1732 by John S. Carlyle on the brow of a hill, and its base rests on an old fort built in 1615 by Capt. John Smith on one of the occasions when he came up the Potomac to trade with the Indians. Originally the house was reached by a fine flight of stone steps from a beautiful lawn reaching to Fairfax street and adorned by 16 Lombardy poplars arranged in four parallel rows. The poplars and lawn have long since disappeared, and long ranges of rooms of the present Braddock house occupy their site, and the house is only visible to the public from the eastern or rear side.

It was also in this house that the unfortunate expedition against Fort Duquesne was arranged by Gen. Braddock and the governors of Maryland, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Virginia, in 1755.

VOLUMES MIGHT BE WRITTEN

Of the Success That Awaits the Farmer in Western Canada.

The story of wheat farming in Western Canada (that portion of Canada lying north of Dakota and Montana) has been frequently told, but it will stand a lot of telling, and still retain its touch of interest. During the year just closed 277,376 persons made their homes in Canada as compared with 215,912 for the year 1906, an increase of 61,464. Those from the United States numbered 56,551. A writer in "Industry" recently said: "To-day the "Dominion of Canada is witnessing a "mightier movement of population "than ever stimulated a Biblical writ-"er to pen a chapter of Scripture." The same writer says: "From the Rhine "and the Rhone river valleys; from "the port cities of Germany and the "farms of the Fatherland, from the "peasant soil of Russia; and out from "the grimy Lancashire and over-popu-"lated Yorkshire, the discontented "and ambitious of every clime are "seeking to take advantage of the "opportunities afforded by the fertile "soil and exhilarating climate of the "Empire of the North."

Continuing the same writer says: "While a million human beings throng "the shores of the United States every "year, the smaller number arriving in "Canada come with a more well-de-"fined purpose." The question has been asked why do these people come to Canada? The available land between the Mississippi and the Pacific has been exhausted, and the farmers within that territory find that their sons have to seek newer climes. Canada offers one hundred and sixty acres of land free to each. This land yields from 20 to 40 bushels of wheat to the acre. In Southern Alberta, the winter wheat belt of Canada, as high as 60 bushels per acre have been harvested. Less yields than the one mentioned have netted the farmer as much as $35 per acre. There are no words that tell the tale so effectively as those of the farmer himself, the man who has ploughed the fields, sowed the grain, and with folded hands rests while nature, bounteous in that country, in less than three months, placed at his disposal hundreds of acres of ripened grain, now waiting the arrival of the reaper, and therefore we reproduce the following letter.

Any agent of the Canadian government will be pleased to give information regarding the district mentioned or any of any other that may be desired.

E. T. Holmes, Esq.,
Canadian Government Agent,
St. Paul, Minn.

Dear Sir:—

In 1905 I located on a claim about 30 miles from the town of Wadena, on the Canadian Northern Railroad, have lived on my claim most of the time since. I consider this to be one of the best districts in the country for grain growing. In 1906 wheat averaged from 30 to 51 bushels per acre on some of my neighbors' farms, within 4 miles of my claim. Oats go from 75 to 100 bushels. It is also a good country for stock. Where I am there is plenty of fuel. Homesteads nearly all taken the settlement being largely Germans, and Americans, all well-to-do. I left Wadena in February, 1907, returning April 25, so that I missed part of the winter, which the old settlers tell me was one of the worst they ever saw, but there was no suffering, as the people are pretty well fixed, and there are no blizzards in that country, at least there never has been known to be one. Wild land sells at from $10 to $15; closer to town it is higher.

In the summer we have all sorts of wild fruits very plentiful, and I never saw better vegetables, and game is so plentiful a man need not starve for want of something to eat. Plenty of good water too. You need not hesitate to recommend this district, but the homesteads are nearly all taken, most of the homesteaders are living right on their claims.

THE START

The Funny Things One Sees in Smiling Round the World

By
MARSHALL P. WILDER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Foreword—There is a compensation in everything—even to the man who was blessed (?) with a disorderly wife. No matter how much everything was at sixes and sevens in the house, and nothing in its rightful place, he could always get up in the middle of the night and put his hand on the fly-paper without ever having to strike a match. Merrily yours, Marshall P. Wilder.

There is a morbid desire latent in the breast of nine-tenths of humanity to have it out with Fate, sooner or later, and to "best" her, if we can.

If the old lady has been particularly hard on us, we feel that our grievance is just about the worst ever; and then we want to do something desperate. If we are in the neighborhood of eight years or thereabouts, we fly to the candy shop and sink our all in peppermints and gumdrops. If we are at the romantic period, when love has everything else at a discount, we get real reckless and say to our best girl, 'Come' to the altar! Let us plunge! Ho! there, installment man! rag-time portieres and marble-top cradles for ours!" Then, when we have done the deed, we're not sorry—no, indeed; only, it entails responsibilities, and things; and consequences—the inevitable consequences, as Kipling puts it. So, let me give you a little suggestion: When the reckless fit overtakes you, start on a journey, if not 'round the world then 'round the back yard.

• • • • •

Now, that was what we thought when we started to tour the world; but, try as we would, we couldn't keep our place in the procession. We started for the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in Arizona; that was to have been our first stopping place. But we were like the Irishman who started out on a bet to shoot a certain bird; he missed the bird, but killed a frog. He picked it up, and looked at it in surprise. "Be gobs!" he said, "I knocked the feathers off it, anny-way!" The Grand Canyon was our bird; we didn't hit it, but we knocked the feathers off it in the way of divers unexpected adventures, as will be shown later.

The start was propitious, and everything progressed favorably, until Kansas City was reached. We arrived early in the morning and were requested by the conductor to get breakfast at the eating station. Yet that man had seemed to be our friend!

There was a youth at the quick-lunch counter who served coffee, and there was a maiden beside him who occasionally changed a plate.

The young man's running fire of remarks to customers, and side compliments to her, sounded something like this:

"See here! If you've finished, get a move on and give somebody else a show! Say, Mame! there's one o' them up-town girls that think so much of themselves. Why, they ain't a marker to you! I tell you, you're worth—Fifteen cents, please, and the cup don't go with the coffee for a souveneer. Say, Mame, was you to Nallie's last night? I bet you looked out of sight. I couldn't get away from this beanery. That's the very best butter, madam! We get it five miles out in the country. What's that? No; I don't reckon it walked all the way here! Ain't she fresh?"

"Had They Seen Her Abigail?"

A stout woman hovered along the line seated by the counter, like a perturbed hen trying to find a hole in the chicken yard fence. She held a small tin pail and had evidently come from the car of excursionists attached to our train. She inquired anxiously of the Ganymede of the coffee urn:

"Say, young feller, what's yer coffeo wuth a cup?" But Ganymede was too closely occupied to heed her. Finally she poked a beetle-browed old gentleman in the back with the dime she held, repeating:

"Say, mister, what's coffee wuth a cup, here?"

Turning fiercely, the man glared at her and snorted:

"Well, they charge ten cents, but it ain't wuth a d—m!"

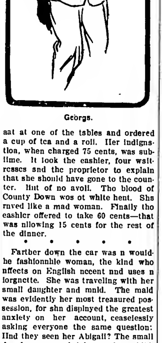
• • • • •

"Washouts on the road!" was the word when we returned to the train, and we must be switched south at Newton, Kan. We had visions of the Grand Canyon receding into the future and darker ones of spending we knew not how many days on the train. So we looked about us to see what manner of people were to be our traveling companions. They were certainly varied.

Back of us was an old Irish woman—the pathetic sort that are peculiar to County Down. She would confide her story in a plaintive little monotone to everyone.

"To me daughter," she explained. "God knows I want some few days of sunshine before I go intirely. I'm not strong, and I ate nothin' at all, ye'd wonder what I live on. I've had nothin' the past three days but eight bottles of Kumys, four bottles of wine an' a box of crackers. Think of that, now—just nothin' at all."

She went to one of the eating houses along the way and, not knowing they would charge her for a full meal, she sat at one of the tables and ordered a cup of tea and a roll. Her indignation, when charged 75 cents, was sublime. It took the cashier, four waitresses and the proprietor to explain that she should have gone to the counter. But of no avail. The blood of County Down was at white heat. She raved like a mad woman. Finally the cashier offered to take 60 cents—that was allowing 15 cents for the rest of the dinner.



Georgs.

Farther down the car was a would-be fashionable woman, the kind who affects an English accent and uses a lorgnette. She was traveling with her small daughter and maid. The maid was evidently her most treasured possession, for she displayed the greatest anxiety on her account, ceaselessly asking everyone the same question: Had they seen her Abigail? The small daughter was a bright, restless child, whose every action called forth a caution or a reprimand from the mother.

"Nita, darling!" in a mincing, elegant tone, and quite piano; "my precious sweetheart"—then sforzando—crescendo fortissimo—"You little vixen—stop that, or I'll break your neck!"

An Australian couple who were returning home by way of San Francisco, after having come to America by way of England, had the next section. She had talented Leslie Carter hair—deeply, darkly, beautifully red; but, after all, good Jesuit hair—the roots justified the ends. She was not at all pleased with America,—oh, dear, no!—and constantly aired her impressions in a strident voice, and with a strong cockney accent. She thought America a "shocking plice"—and very much overrated—ono she never cared to sea "agine." And the railroad service—"the b'idea of dragging them all over the country and cheating them out of the Grand Canyon—why, it was downright dishonest!"

• • • • •

The porter was an amusing character, and had a droll way of referring to himself in the third person. I asked him if he was married. He said:

"No, sah, but I got a gal. Nicest little gal you ever saw—she's pretty dark—but George likes 'em that-a-way, they cain't come too black fer George. I ain't got no kind o' time fer dese yer yallor ones, they simply ornery, they got all the big feelin's o' the white folks, an' the bad qualities o' the niggers!"

Just then the lady with the lorgnette came along and, peering through it at George, asked: "Oh, George, have you seen my maid?"

"No, ma'am, I ain't!" he said, adding, when she passed on: "Seems like she has an awful hard time keepin' up with that maid—she's so feared we won't know she's got one. George has seen big white folks down south so po' they didn't know whar they nex' meal was comin' fum, but, sah," impressively, "dey was quality jis' de same! Dis yer 'ooman ain' got no mo' use fo' a maid dan a hawg got fo' side pawkets!"

George's quaint remarks, and very often homely wisdom, were a great solace to us through the long days that dragged by as we meandered aimlessly over the southwestern portion of this great and glorious country of ours. Down through Oklahoma and Texas, from Fort Worth across to El Paso, and up through Arizona and Southern California, we took our devious way, dodging washouts, which seemed to multiply with alarming rapidity.

LESSONS IN PANICS

PEOPLE ASSIST IN BRINGING ABOUT FINANCIAL DEPRESSION.

LOCAL WELFARE NEGLECTED

During Prosperous Times, Provision for the Future Is Ignored, and Natural Laws Afterward Exact the Penalty.

During the past ten years the business of the United States has increased in greater ratio than the population. The wealth of the country has also expanded in a like manner. Alarm has been expressed in the public press and from the rostrums as to the danger of the mammoth accumulations of wealth by a few in control of different industries. Great stress is laid upon the contention that in these vast accumulations of individual wealth there are elements that menace our free institutions.

How came about this aggregation of great wealth is a question that suggests itself. What particular conditions allowed the aggregation of such pyramids of money? Money is merely a representative of value, a medium for the exchange of commodities necessary in civilization. The values represented by money have as their standard labor, service, benefits. That there is danger in the sequestering of the circulating medium of the land and its equivalent in property, cannot be well denied. He who gains great wealth by exceptional or superior talents and by honest effort in combining circumstances to work to his advantage, is as much entitled to this wealth as is the toiler whose ability to do is limited to the earning of a few paltry dollars daily. But it is what can be done with vast wealth that is the question! It can be used for either good or evil. It depends upon the individual who possesses it. Money is a power for good as well as being "the root of all evil."

During the past decade the United States has never been more prosperous. Within the past few months there has been financial stringency, a reaction and a swinging back of the pendulum in a compensating way. This to the logician is merely the result of the workings of natural law. The husbandman does not always expect under natural conditions equal crops. A succession of large crops covering a period of four or five years will most likely be followed by poorer crops for a season or two. Financial successes as well as panics alternate. There is a period of progress beyond the ordinary and then a decline. But it is possible for natural laws to be directed in a manner to better serve the people. Such wizards as Burbank, understanding the laws of progeneration and properly directing these laws, has brought into existence highest perfection in plant life. By a like exercise of high intelligence it is possible to control the accumulations of wealth, or rather to control the distribution of wealth and to protect against so-called panics.

The United States has 86,000,000 of people. Three-fifths of these people reside outside of large cities and towns. With prosperity coming to them they have been neglectful of a duty to the sections wherein they reside, and have allowed systems to withdraw to the large financial centers their surplus earnings. These earnings have found their way as investments in large corporations. These large corporations, which give strength and stability to the country in a commercial way, by manipulations of those in control of them, by stock gambling and other forms of speculation, have evil elements which attach the stigma of dishonesty to great combinations for control of industries.

While the per capita production of wealth within the United States has been great, it is evident that the masses of those who have created it by their labor have not received their full quota of compensation. For this the workers themselves are to blame. They have assisted along the unequal distribution of their earnings by ignoring simple principles of economy; and by so doing they have helped concentrate the wealth of the land in the hands of a comparative few. Were the money invested and spent in the large cities by the people of agricultural communities, invested in local enterprises, just so much would have been done to guard against concentration. Were the millions sent to the large cities for goods, that might as well be purchased at home, retained within the communities where the dollars were earned, the distribution of wealth would be more equitable.

Thus it can be seen that the producers, the workers, the masses in the agricultural districts have carelessly assisted in bringing about conditions bordering upon panic. Depression in financial lines works to the detriment of the poorer classes. When there is a scarcity of circulating medium, prices are forced to the lowest level. Thus those with money can buy at lowest prices. When the pendulum swings the other way and values advance, the fortunate possessor of wealth who bought in a low market finds his wealth increased.

Panics can be averted by the masses if only proper judgment be used during times of prosperity, and provision made for equalization and for few contingencies. In each local community this can be provided for best by keeping within that community the surplus earnings of the people instead of sending the surplus elsewhere. The remedy is a simple one.

D. M. CARR.

TWO SIDES TO THE QUESTION.

Patronage of Home Stores Depends Much Upon the Merchants.

How often do merchants complain about the farmers and others sending to distant places for goods, while at the same time the farmers are forced by the merchants to send their produce to some other place while the merchants ship in the same class of products that the farmers are sending out?

In the home patronage matter there is nothing so wholesome as reciprocity. Do the merchants always give preference to home-grown potatoes, to the products supplied by the local hens, to the output of the local creameries? Do the merchants always show a good example by patronizing their brother tradesmen? Or do they at times send to the city for the clothes they wear; the piano for their daughter, the wagon they use in delivering goods, etc.?

There are a lot of narrow-minded, short-sighted men in the mercantile business as well as on the farms. There is a lot of selfishness in the average of humanity, and this manifests itself now and then in censuring others for doing that which we feel justified in doing ourselves. Many merchants seem to think that there is only one side to the home patronage proposition; that it is the duty of the farmer to buy everything at home regardless of whether the merchant buys his flour from the home mill, or whether he sends away for the potatoes which he sells, instead of buying them from the local farmers.

Then, again, merchants are as blind now and then to their own interests as are the farmers. The merchant seeks to squeeze the last cent of profit from the farmer and thereby loses trade, as well as the farmer trying to save a few niggardly pennies and getting "bit" by the distant mail-order concern. There is such a thing as equity, be it understood, and there is such a thing as compensation. The merchant who gives the farmers of his community a square deal and shows the proper kind of enterprise is hardly ever heard complaining about the mail-order house or the department stores injuring his trade. But the merchant who is intent upon playing a "dead cinch" game is forever howling. The home patronage matter is mainly up to the merchants of the small towns. People residing in the country are pretty fair-minded. They want decent treatment. They like consistency. They will even pay the live, reliable, honest merchant a higher price for goods than they will the distant mail-order concern or the surething department store, or the scalliwag merchant who is always out to beat somebody out of a few cents.

Parable of the Foolish Citizen.

Once there was a good man who labored hard on the farm, and on each Sunday went religiously to church. In time he gained sufficient wealth to move into a near-by town, where all his children were afforded a chance for acquiring an education. For all his supplies he sent to a distant city. He opposed every proposition to pave the streets of the place, to improve the very schools his children attended, and when the assessor visited him he was verily a pauper for taxation purposes. This man was a highly moral man, a pillar in the church, and even worked a soap-club deal in order to secure for the Sunday school an organ. At last he died. It is recorded that he entered the pearly gates for which he long hoped and prayed. The streets were golden, and there was beauty on every side. He marveled; became enraptured with all he saw. To some angels standing by he spoke: "This place must have cost a pile of money?" "Yes," replied one of the white-winged attendants, "but it has been paid for below. Each one coming here must help bear the burden of taxes—" Just then a saintly-looking man approached with a book, and the new arrival from the farm took one look at him, and believing him to be the assessor, bolted out through the gate—and then woke up.

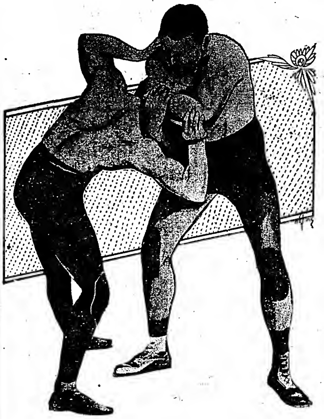
Need of Lessons in Economy.

A number of state agricultural departments have inaugurated a series of farmers' institutes. At these meetings, the science of agriculture in its various phases is ably discussed by able authorities. It appears that it would be advantageous to take up other matters relative to farm life, as well as merely the science of farming. Lessons in simple economy could be given to farmers and their wives, particularly along the lines of country development, of the essentials in building up the country and protection of local industries. This field alone offers a wide latitude for energetic work. The farmer should understand principles upon which commerce is based, as well as being versed in the growing of produce, which is the basis of commerce.

How Monopolies Are Assisted.

During the past few months, mail order houses located in the large cities have been making more than ordinary efforts to gain trade. These efforts have been stimulated by the panicky times. Residents of agricultural communities should understand that concentration of money in large financial centers was the main cause of bringing on the financial depression. They should also understand that the mail order system is one of the most potent factors in this concentration; that this system draws the life-blood, the surplus money, from communities where it is earned, taking it out of local circulation and using it to build up monopolies in the large cities.

FAMOUS GRECO-ROMAN HOLD IN WRESTLING



In this picture is seen a fine illustration of the deadly hold used by the English wrestlers. The catch-as-catch-can style is seldom heard of in England, the Greco-Roman being the prevailing sport. But this is too tame for Americans.

JOCKEY MARTIN BUYS RACE HORSE FOR FIVE CENTS

Pat Civill Parts with Matabon for Price of "Curry Comb Handle"—Says He Is Not Worth Feed.

Now and then race horses are heard of which during their careers on the turf cost their owners many a dollar in entry fees and in other ways and were finally sold or given away for a mere trifle.

Several days ago Burlew & O'Neill entered their horse Belmere, which in his time has won many a race, at New Orleans. They thought he had an excellent chance to win and wagered some money on him, but his running so disgusted them they sold him shortly afterward for one dollar.

Now comes another story of a horse which was bought by a man's last five cent piece.

Several days ago at New Orleans Willie Martin, who in his time was considered one of the best jockeys in this country, was standing with a group of horsemen talking about the prospects of the race meeting which is to be held at Tampa, Fla. During the conversations he announced his intention of attending the meeting and said that he thought he would be able to make out all right if he only had a horse.

Pat Civill, who is selling some of his horses, was in the group, and when he heard Martin announce that he wished he had a horse Civill said:

"I will sell you a winner in Matabon, the Lamplighter gelding." Martin then explained to Civill that at present he was driving to the limit without trying to buy any racers. Civill, however, was determined to get rid of Matabon, and told Martin that he could have the gelding for what money he happened to have in his clothes.

Martin considered it all a joke, but when Civill repeated his offer he accepted it, and after a careful search he found that he had one lonely nickel. "I have only five cents," said Martin, "and that is not enough to buy the handle of a curry comb."

Civill grabbed the nickel and declared:

"Matabon is yours; you can take him whenever you are ready."

He wished Martin all the luck in the world with the horse, which has cost both Goldblatt and Civill no end of worry since they purchased him from William Gerst last summer at Windsor.

Will Coach Yale Eleven.

Capt. Robert Boyd Burch of the Yale football eleven recently announced the appointment of Lucius Horatio Biglow, captain of the present championship Yale eleven, as head coach for the coming year, and the appointment of Tad Jones, the all-American quarter back, as assistant coach. The combination promises the best pair of coaches Yale has ever had.

Biglow has played on the varsity three years at tackle and was captain on the All-American this year. As a player and leader he is without a superior.

Jones is captain of the baseball team and, like Biglow, is a great leader. He is quick and clever at planning and executing a play and understands every position in the back field.

May Form Negro Ball League.

Negroes of Pittsburg have plans nearly completed for the organization of a national negro baseball league, to be known as the Colored National league. It is to be an eight-club league, with teams in the following cities: Pittsburg, Chicago, New York, Boston, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Cleveland.

MANY OLD STAR TWIRLERS CARRIED BY LEAGUE TEAMS

Managers Cannot Forget Services of Veterans and Will Give Them Another Chance.

Will Joe McGinnity, Nick Altrock, Deacon Phillippi, "Jack" Chesbro, "Bill" Dineen, Frank Owen and a few other of the star twirlers of the past show real big league class this year?

Deacon Phillippi has been of little use to the Pittsburg team since the memorable series with the Boston American league team. Whether the strain of that series impaired his usefulness or not is a question. His work has been only mediocre for the last three years, every now and then he would show flashes of his old-time brilliancy. Barney Dreyfuss can't forget his great work of the past and carries him, thinking every year that he will prove that he is still a great pitcher.

Nick Altrock wouldn't get a fat salary on his record of last year nor would Frank Owen, yet both of these pitchers have signed up for the coming season. Charley Comiskey can't forget the great work that Nick did against the Cubs or the services Frank Owen did for the White Sox when he was right.

Chesbro was a star in 1905, when he made Griffith's team a contender in the race. He had a fair year in 1906, but last season the best he could do was win nine out of 21.

Joe McGinnity won 27 games and lost 12 in 1906, but last year he had to step some to break even in 36 games. Bill Dineen had a bad year, as did Jesse Tannehill.

The fans are beginning to wonder if these pitchers have seen their best days; if the wonderful "Bill" Dineen and "Jack" Chesbro of a few years ago are no more. Practically every manager has a veteran pitcher who he is banking on to show old-time form the coming season. Unless their arms have suffered an injury that rest won't cure there ought to be several old-timers who will make them all go some in 1908.

While commenting on the veterans it is fitting and proper to state Cy Young appears to be as young and strong as ever. He won 22 and lost 15 with a second division team last season.

GOSSIP OF THE DIAMOND.

Eddie Wheeler, who formerly held down third base for Denver, will manage the Grand Rapids team in the Central league. He will also hold down the difficult corner.

Joe Doyle, who is dubbed the slowest pitcher in the business, is there on signing the baseball contract. He sent his contract back to Griffith the day after he received it, and it bore his signature.

Delos Drake, the former Mansfield outfielder, has been turned over to the Indianapolis team by Detroit. Drake ought to come pretty close to making good in the American Association.

Dan McCann and Bill Dahlen both think that Cecil Ferguson will develop into one of the greatest pitchers in the country if only given enough work.

Matty McIntyre has already signed his contract and says that he will report to Jennings in the spring in better shape than ever. He expects to have no trouble whatever from his broken ankle.

Johnny Hoey of the Boston Americans, is another big league player who is taking things easy in the south playing on one of the hotel teams. He is on the Ormond team.

Billy Smith, who managed the New Castle team, is now a free agent and unsigned. Smith may manage one of the teams in the New Ohio league.

Information and Gossip Picked Up Here and There in Washington.

Filipinos Are the New Pets of Congress

WASHINGTON.—All records of interest in "congressional kid" members are being broken by the attention the brown "kids" from the Philippines are receiving in congress. They are the distinct attractions, not only of the galleries, but of the members and senators themselves.

Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson of osculatory fame, and Nicholas Longworth are "has beens" that no longer receive the notice of up-to-date capitol guides. Every one in Washington appears as proud of these two resident commissioners, Benito Legarda and Pablo Ocampo de Leon, the Philippine Islands have sent to Washington, as young America is of his redtops or W. Bourke Cockran of his latest forensic effort. They are the real congressional oddity, for they can speak in either the senate or house.

Of course, the senate has been kind enough to grant these Filipinos the same courtesies as the house, but the commissioners feel more at home in the informality of the lower body than among the dignified members of the senate.

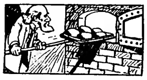
With its two new members congress has been economical. Each will receive the regular salary of $7,500, but the 20 cents a mile travel gift is not for them. Two thousand dollars apiece for each round trip is their travel allowance.

Neither the house nor the senate was particularly prepared for them. Although the authority for the selection of the commissioners was given in the Philippines' organic act several years ago it remained for the first assembly last fall to make their choice possible. Then the commissioners slipped across the Pacific and presented themselves at the capital.

Congress had not been thinking much about their coming or their going until they wanted to know what rights "resident commissioners" had in congress. When they left home one felt that the United States would let them stay in Washington only under surveillance, while the other went so far as to believe that they would have the right to vote in the house, run down the corridor and vote on the same measure in the senate.

The powers that be finally decided that they should be given seats at both ends of the capitol and the privileges of the floor, but not of voting.

Dr. Wiley Is Testing Bleached Flour



NICE white bread is not so nice, maybe, as bread that is not white. And then maybe again it is. Anyway this is a question which Uncle Sam has set about answering.

Bread baking, therefore, is the order of the day. An oven has been set up in a corner of the chemical laboratory, and when Dr. Wiley is not busy feeding "soft drinks" to his "poison squad" he is attending to the making and baking of bread.

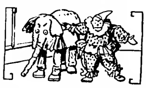
It is all to determine the effect of "bleached" flour. Is bleached flour just as good as flour which is not bleached? That is what the pure food department wants to find out. And the only way to find out is to try.

So bread is baked with the bleached flour. The bread is then put under the microscope, weighed, dissected, touched with litmus paper, subjected to acids, cut with a knife, torn with the fingers, bashed with celluloid, pressed, made into putty, burned in a retort, dissolved in a test tube, cremated, tossed in a blanket and fed to the poison squad. At least most of these things are done to it.

Then figures are put down in a tabular form on sheets of paper, members of the poison squad are diagnosed, and in the end there is a report made which Dr. Wiley will explain to the house committee on agriculture when asking for a renewal of the appropriation.

The report has not been finished yet, but when it is Dr. Wiley promises to warn the public as to what colored bread to eat.

President's Son Plays Part of Clown



PRESIDENT and Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Ethel Roosevelt attended the "circus" given the other night by the boys of Y. M. C. A. in their gymnasium to raise funds for completing their running track.

Quentin Roosevelt made his first appearance as a clown in a turn that was carried on the program as "Prof. Quentacae and his educated elephant, Bolivar."

The elephant was worked by two other boys and had on its saddlecloth the emblem, "G. O. P." Quentin drove the elephant around the ring, keeping up a running comment on the qualities of the animal. Then another clown came along and found fault with the elephant because it was too thin.

"What do you feed him on?" he asked Quentin.

"Dates," young Roosevelt replied.

"What kind of dates?"

"Candi-dates," said the president's son.

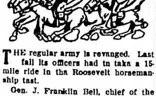
This brought great applause in which Mr. Roosevelt joined heartily.

The presidential party came in just before the elephant act and were given a rousing reception. The boys' band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and the audience arose and yelled itself hoarse.

Later on the program Quentin took part in a turn in which larger clowns beat him with bladders and slapsticks and almost made a football of him.

One of the hits of the show was the refusal of a big polar bear to answer to the repeated call of "Teddy" and his dignified response to the name "Theodore."

President Lured Into the Muldoon Test



THE regular army is revenged. Last fall its officers had to take a 15-mile ride in the Roosevelt horsemanship test.

Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of the general staff, the other day, beguiled the president to William Muldoon's 15-mile test on foot.

Both the president and Gen. Bell were guests, after their hike, at a dinner given by Postmaster General Meyer. Gen. Bell was as fit as could be. The president still was fit—for dinner. But he admitted he had lost all his appetite for Muldoon tests.

The president exhibited great curiosity as to the Muldoon system of fitting fat statesmen for the Washington dinner season, since Secretary Root and Gen. Bell have successively taken the course at White Plains. The president did not pay much heed to Mr. Root's account of his strenuous days at Muldoon's, because Mr. Root is not athletic. He even avoids golf.

But when the crack horsemen of the United States cavalry returned to confirm Mr. Root's story, President Roosevelt suggested, skeptically, that he would like to try this stiff athletic proposition of Muldoon's.

Accordingly, Gen. Bell commanded the expedition, which set out across the country. The horsemanship test set for army officers is five miles at a walk, five miles at a trot and five miles at a gallop. The Muldoon test, entirely on foot, is eight miles at a walk and seven on a trot.

The going was heavy, for the weather was bad. Gen. Bell went over the course easily. President Roosevelt went over the course, but not easily.

Fat officers who bounced about in the saddle for the 15 required miles last fall are wearing a grin that is broader still.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

SEEKS KENTUCKY TOGA

John C. W. Beckham, former governor of Kentucky, is at present engaged in the fiercest kind of a factional fight for the United States senatorship for his state. He lacks two or three votes, but while Democrats hold them they refuse to give them up to Beckham, and a deadlock is on, for there is no other candidate upon whom they can agree. William J. Bryan went to Kentucky a few weeks ago to restore harmony in the party. He made a speech to the legislature behind closed doors, urging the Democrats to close up their ranks rather than run the danger of letting the office go to a Republican, but it was in vain. The factions, far from uniting, nearly came to blows, as the result of the well meant attempts of the would-be peacemaker.

This hostility to Beckham arose from his conduct as governor. He was a young man, less than 30, and it had never been intended that he should be the chief executive of the state. As a compliment he was placed on the ticket as candidate for lieutenant-governor, with Goebel for governor. The returns showed the Democrats to have been defeated, but they appealed to the Democratic legislature and before the matter was decided Goebel had been shot. The legislature declared him governor while he lay on his death-bed. In a few hours he was dead and Beckham was governor.

The latter entered the office declaring that he would be a "straight away" governor, but some of the influential Democratic leaders laughed in their sleeves at the announcement. They soon found, however, that their power was to be curbed. In prosecuting the assassins of Goebel, Beckham took strenuous steps. He has shown himself most implacable towards all suspected of the murder of his chief.

No particular pains were taken to discredit Beckham, as the law provides for only one term of four years as governor of Kentucky. Beckham maintained, however, that filling out another man's term did not count as one for himself. This was just the opposite of the view taken by President Roosevelt as to the presidency. Beckham ran himself again and was reelected.

A GENIUS OR A RASCAL

Henri Lemoine, who is under arrest in Paris on a charge of swindling Sir Julius Wernher, one of the syndicate that controls the diamond output of South Africa, is either a finished rascal or a wonderful genius, and the scientific world is at a loss to decide which. In view of the peculiar circumstances under which the money, some $65,000, was extracted from Wernher, one would set him down as a rank fraud, but there are distinguished scientists who declare that they have seen Lemoine making diamonds, that they watched the crucible from beginning to end of the operation, and that it was utterly impossible for him to play a sharp game upon them.

One of the mysteries which lend a peculiar fascination to the case is a sealed packet in a safe, containing the formula, a packet that is to be opened only after Lemoine's death. Then it is to become the property of Sir Julius, who has already paid $65,000 for it. If it is a genuine formula and by its help Sir Julius can produce diamonds ad libitum, he will be one of the most powerful men in the world, for he will absolutely control the future of South Africa. If he chooses to turn out diamonds of the artificial kind the mines of South Africa will have to close down, the Beers shares will fall to next to nothing and Sir Julius can pick them up at his own price. He will be the diamond king of the world and will have it in his power to make them as cheap or as dear as he likes. That he had this in view when he made the deal is asserted by Lemoine.

Lemoine is 30 years old, with an aggressive black beard and sparkling eyes. He was born in Trieste when his father was French consul there.

NEW PORTUGUESE RULER

Dom Manuel II., the new king of Portugal, is the second son of the late ruler, King Carlos. He is said to be a young man of considerable force of character, and, unlike his elder brother, is popular with the masses. He is 18 years and two months old.

Prince Manuel, in his early 'teens, was sent to the naval school at Lisbon, where he showed a marked aptitude for maritime affairs. He became a skilled yachtsman and owns a fine sailing vessel which he manages himself. The young prince was a prominent figure in the most notable of the regattas along the Mediterranean, and last year he won the king's cup, offered by King Edward of Great Britain in the yachting contests off Marseilles.

Prince Manuel bears the title of duke of Beja as well as his hereditary title of duke of Saxon. He is the owner of 14 Christian names, by one of which he is known as Manuel.

The young sovereign's personality is described by those who know him as very winning. As a lad he displayed fine manly traits. He had considerable artistic talent, especially for music, and like his father was exceedingly fond of outdoor sports, such as tennis, riding and shooting.

DENOUNCES WORKINGMAN

Barrett Wendell, professor of English at Harvard university, who recently startled Chicago with his hysterical denunciation of the workingman, is chiefly known to fame as the father of Barrett Wendell Jr., the athlete. Some of the statements attributed to him are the following:

"One of the most popular caricatures in the comic papers to-day represents a big-bellied, bald-headed, thin-whiskered, brutal, grinning man trampling on his worthy fellow citizen, and he is supposed to personify wealth and fashion, the upper classes. If there is anything on earth like the big-bellied monster I have spoken of it is the laboring man with his pail, who usurps my privileges."

Again:

"This privileged individual with the tin dinner pail also combines with his kind to crowd out all competition, and to do it resorts to the most brutal and intense physical force. He destroys competition and keeps up prices by violence.

"I have said enough to show that I am not in public life. To be in public life in any nation one must show proper deference and adulation to the sovereign, whether the sovereign be a shah, a czar or the people. The deference shown to the workingman has never been equaled in abjectness before any privileged class the world has ever known."

Prof. Wendell was the first American professor to lecture at the Sorbonne under the international agreement for an exchange of professors.

Gotham Social Season Is on the Wane

MY GOODNESS! WHAT IS TO BECOME OF US NEXT SUMMER?
I FEEL I'M GOING MAD AT THE MERE THOUGHT OF IT

NEW YORK.—With the Vanderbilt-Szechenyi wedding, Mrs. Ogden Mills' annual dance and the charity ball affairs of the past, the social season is on the wane.

Society is feeling blue over the prospect of a dull summer in Newport. It is practically certain that the Breakers will not be opened, as Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt will pay a prolonged visit to her daughter, the Countess Szechenyi, in Hungary, and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish has just made known that what little time she spends next summer in this country will find her in Garrison, N. Y.

There have been signs of late that Mrs. Fish is wearying of the exciting social grind, and she no longer seems ambitious to take the place of Mrs. Astor as leader of the fashionable world. She has been only half-hearted in going about society's business this winter, and it is significant that she no longer craves for the lively companionship of the Harry Lehrs. The Fish country residence at Garrison has been redecorated and refurnished, and Mrs. Fish has been giving close attention to the remodeling of a large suite of rooms. The object has been to give an unbroken view of the Hudson from every window in the suite, and to this end many obstructive trees have been felled. There is an isolation to be found in Garrison impossible in Newport, and all these changes, taken with the sudden interest of Mrs. Fish in the place, gives color to the report that she is anxious for quiet and retirement. If this be the case society, as it runs to publicity, will lose one of its most interesting figures, for it has been truthfully said of Mrs. Fish that she never has been guilty of an entertainment bare of imagination, and, besides, always has succeeded in being picturesque.

Quick Descent of the Morse Rocket

CHARLES W. MORSE, who once was proclaimed the ice king, marine king and real estate king, isn't king of anything any more. To-day he is a fugitive from public opinion, while deputy sheriffs prowl the city, levying on every inch of his property and every cent of his deposits they can find.

The romance of Morse's winged millions is without a parallel, either in the old or the new world's history of frenzied finance. Less than a year ago Morse stood one night in a Broadway cafe and boasted that he had $40,000,000 and every dollar of it earning interest. Morse was at the top of his wonderful career in high and fast finance. He had gone up like the traditional rocket; and the rocket had reached that dazzling eminence where its sputtering, sparkling brilliance cut fiery gashes across the financial skies. At that time he was commonly credited with the control of corporations that had an aggregate capital of $125,000,000. Among these were 12 banks, three insurance companies and 17 steamboat, realty and other corporations. The total resources of the corporations controlled by him were estimated at more than $300,000,000. Big figures these are, but Morse was a big man and used to big figures.

The rocket soared pretty high. But it began to fall. To-day a federal grand jury is inquiring into his methods of transacting national bank affairs. A receiver's report openly charges him with having fled to Europe with the intention of defrauding his creditors. Three of his banks have closed their doors. He has been thrown out of control of the big steamship merger which he built up at much pains. He has been practically ousted from every large institution with which he was connected. His forty millions have shrunk to a shadowy ghost of their old proportions. He isn't king of anything any more. The rocket came down a stick.

Women Cannot Eat Without an Escort

NO WOMAN alone—and in the hotel sense of the word a woman is alone even when she is a crowd—may satisfy her hunger in a New York restaurant after 6 p. m.

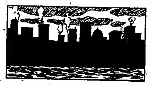
According to the findings in the Twelfth Municipal district court in the suit of Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, daughter of the late Elizabeth Cady Stanton, against the Hoffman House to recover $500 damages for exclusion from the roof garden dining-room, because unaccompanied by a man, an unattended woman is one of two classes: she is disreputable, or she is testing a question of woman's rights, and, in either case, open to suspicion.

John Caddigan, president of the Hoffman House corporation, who has been in the hotel business 40 years, said it was the unwritten law not to serve a woman without escort in any first-class hotel.

The decision was the result of a test case brought by Mrs. Blatch who determined to try to break the rule that prevails in all first-class hotels, that women alone will not be served in public dining rooms in the evening. With a woman friend she went to the roof garden of the Hoffman House between six and seven o'clock and endeavored to obtain dinner. They were courteously refused, being told, at the same time, that downstairs within the hotel they would be served. But they declined to observe the custom and insisted that they had as good a right to eat where they were as anybody else. After creating a great disturbance, they were ejected, and promptly brought suit against the hotel proprietor for damages.

The case was decided against them, and there is great sorrow in suffragist circles in consequence. But the rule adopted by hotels will undoubtedly remain in force in spite of that.

What It Costs to Run the City a Year



THE cost of running the city government of New York this year will be $143,572,266, an increase of $13,150,160 over last year, and $69,981,934 more than for the year 1898—an increase of more than 85 per cent. in ten years. This means a per capita expenditure of $36 for every man, woman and child in the city, or an average of about $150 a family, which is paid by taxing both the present and future generations.

The present generation pays the assessments imposed upon it by the tax commissioners and future generations will have to redeem the enormous amount of bonds now outstanding.

The interest charge upon the people of New York is now more than $24,000,000 annually, almost as much as the total cost of running the city of Chicago, and about $6 per capita of the population. The expenses of the national government have increased very rapidly with our prosperity, but our national debt has been decreasing all the time and the interest charge upon the people of the United States annually is only a few thousand dollars more than that paid by the people of New York city, while the annual expenses of the national government are only four times as great as those of New York city.

Before the present great era of prosperity and large government expenditure in 1890, the total expenses of our national government were only double the present expenses of the city of New York; and, omitting the appropriations for the army, navy, Indians, pensions and the interest on the public debt, the civil and miscellaneous expenses of the government for 1905 were about the same as those of New York for the current year.

Man's Contest with Nature.

The greatest of inventions is measured not by their ingenuity, nor by the fortunes they make for their originators, or others, for that is a small matter, but by the service which they render the public and by their influence on civilization. If inventions are to be measured by their effects by far the greatest in the history of the world was the invention of the steam engine. In 1769, the same year in which the duke of Wellington and Napoleon Bonaparte were born, James Watt produced his steam engine, which was destined to exert more influence in shaping the world's future than both of these great captains put together. From the beginning man has had to struggle with nature for his life, says the New York Weekly. She scorched him; she froze him; she starved him; she smote him with disease; she overawed and terrorized him; her winds buffeted him; her waters drowned him. Against the measureless forces of Nature he could oppose only his puny arm. On that arm he must rely to wrest from her food, fuel, raiment and shelter. Such was the unequal contest for thousands of years. But today Nature is man's servant; her mighty forces do his bidding and run his errands.

Ten Thousand Dollar Men Wanted.

Mr. Edison takes a deep interest in young men and offers them much encouragement, says Success Magazine. "To-day is youth's zenith in this great country," is the way he cheers them on. "The United States is starving for ten-thousand-dollar men. Corporations are actually clamoring for them; and the younger the better. But the man to-day must be technically educated. Modern industrial, financial and commercial conditions are more complicated than ever before and it takes a trained mind and a level head to get to the front. The demand for educated men, chaps that have brains, exceeds anything that I have ever known. They are doing the work, too; that's why more are wanted. So now is the time for the man who is going to make something of himself to get busy. If he is any good he won't be out of a job long; not much. There is entirely too much work and too few of the right kind of persons to do it. If you don't believe it, take a peep into the gigantic plant of a concern like the Bethlehem Steel company. Yes, sir, we are starving for brains—for ten-thousand-dollar men, if that way of putting it appeals more strongly to the young American instinct."

Here is a new "science." Its exploiter is a lady of brilliant gifts who calls it mental therapeutics, and who teaches that by following her theory men and women can make their dispositions and characters what they please—in fact, compound them, just as a skilled operator in that line compounds chemicals. And they can do more than that. Says the lady: "There is no question but that if we concentrate our minds we can spin through space at any distance. We can travel to China, or to the Himalayas." And if the theory can be carried out in practice it will surely put the airships out of business, for everyone can be his own flying machine. It is enough to make one light-headed.

The shine-your-boots industry appears to be flourishing famously. Substantial evidence of this is furnished by the fact that small spaces in the terminal buildings of the New York tunnels have been leased to a bootblacking corporation for a long term of years at an aggregate rental of $124,000. The notion entertained in some conservative quarters that the bootblack business has been ruined or seriously injured by the growing popularity of patent leathers and tans is evidently a pipe dream. It is flourishing more extensively than ever. Shine 'em up!

Christmas has a dual significance in Spain; it is a season of rejoicing in more senses than one, for the drawing of the great state organized Christmas lottery takes place in Madrid during the holidays. It is an event to which Spaniards of all classes look forward with the brightest hopes. This Christmas Barcelona had phenomenal luck, for the inhabitants of that city secured no fewer than 123 prizes, including "el gordo," or the chief prize, the third prize and 121 minor ones, totaling nearly $2,000,000. The money was spread over some 400 families.

An Ohio woman, after finding matrimony a failure and getting a divorce from her husband, has decided to try for the position of mayor of her town. Evidently, failing to rule the individual masculine, she hopes for better luck with the sex en masse.

Those Pennsylvania students who put a cow into the girls' dormitory were 'way behind the times. Girls do not act as milkmaids any longer. The patient and uncomplaining milking machine attends to that romantic job.

WHERE IS HIS PROTECTIVE ARMOR?

GENERAL STOESSEL TO DIE

"HERO OF PORT ARTHUR" GIVEN DEATH SENTENCE.

Military Court Pronounces Notice of Fate—Inferior Officers Allowed to Escape.

St. Petersburg.—Lieut. Gen. Stoessel, once known as "the Hero of Port Arthur," was condemned to death Thursday evening by a military court for the surrender of that fort to the Japanese.

Gen. Fock, who commanded the Fourth East Siberian division of Port Arthur, was ordered reprimanded for a disciplinary offense, which was not connected with the surrender, and Gen. Smirnoff, acting commander of the fortress, and Maj. Gen. Reiss, chief of staff to Gen. Stoessel, were acquitted of the charges against them for lack of proof. The court recommended that the death sentence upon Lieut. Gen. Stoessel be commuted to ten years imprisonment in a fortress and that he be excluded from the service. Gen. Vodar, president of the court, read the sentences amid a tense silence. By a great effort of self-control, Gen. Stoessel maintained a rigid soldier-like impassivity. Gen. Smirnoff also was seemingly unmoved, but there were tears in the eyes of Gen. Reiss.

Chicago Judge Dissolves Writ Forbidding Use of Proxies.

Chicago. — E. H. Harriman won complete control of the Illinois Central railroad Thursday, when Judge Farlin Q. Ball dissolved the injunction restraining the voting of 286,231 Harriman proxies. Stuyvesant Fish was knocked out and the Harriman victory was absolute. Judge Ball not only dissolved the Fish injunction but settled the more important point that foreign corporations may hold and vote stocks in Illinois corporations. Had the decision been otherwise the voting power of $400,000,000 worth of Illinois stocks would have invalidated.

POWDER BLAST KILLS 28.

Explosion at Berkeley, Cal., Fatal to Chinese and Whites.

Berkeley, Cal. — With a force that shook the entire bay region like an earthquake the packing house of the Hercules Powder works at Pinole, 14 miles north of here, blew up late Thursday afternoon and in the explosion four white men and 24 Chinamen were killed.

Ten tons of dynamite went up in the terrific blast, shattering the sheds to dust and splinters.

W. W. Stillwell, foreman of the packing house, was blown to atoms at his post of duty. Manuel Enos, Joseph Grace and W. A. Rodriguez were the other white men killed. The 28 dead included every man who was at work in the packing house. Flames burst forth in the ruins following the explosion, and threatened the gelatine house, where two score girls were at work. A panic ensued, and many were cut by flying glass and crushed and trampled in the mad rush for the doors. The loss to the company due to the accident is placed at about $100,000. No definite cause for the accident can be given.

Hughes, who directed the attorney general to take the matter out of the hands of District Attorney Jerome.

Philadelphia.—The marching of nearly 1,000 foreigners upon the city hall, where they said they intended to make demands upon Mayor Reyburn for work, precipitated a riot in Broad street late Thursday, in which 20 persons were injured before the police dispersed the marchers and arrested 14 of them. The men, most of whom were Italians and Poles, marched from the foreign settlement in the lower section of the city. The leaders and a score of others carried red flags having a black border. Several wagons attempted to pass through the line. The drivers were dragged from their seats by the marchers and beaten.

Big Auto Factory Burns.

Dayton, O. — Fire of unknown origin destroyed the mammoth plant of the Stoddard-Dayton Automobile factory Friday morning and swept through the old section of the plant, causing a loss of $300,000.

CHIEF HITS ROADS

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ASKS WAGE CUT PROBE.

SCENTS INDUSTRIAL WAR

Executive Addresses Commission Regarding Proposed Pay Reductions—Investigation Requested in Order to Avert Strife.

Washington.—Serious industrial disputes in prospect were in the mind of President Roosevelt when he wrote a letter to the interstate commerce commission which has been made public. He says that information has reached him that on account of the enactment of drastic laws by the congress and by the various state legislatures it is regarded as necessary by railroad companies to reduce the pay of employes. He points out that, under the law, either party may demand the services of the chairman of the interstate commerce commission and of the commissioner of labor as a board of conciliation. He suggests, therefore, that the interstate commerce commission make such an investigation as will enable it to furnish data concerning wage conditions on various railroads as may relate, directly or indirectly, to the possible impending controversy.

Notice Served, Says Chief.

The text of the president's letter follows:

"The White House, Washington, Feb. 18, 1908.—To the Interstate Commerce Commission: I am informed that a number of railroad companies have served notice of a proposed reduction of wages on their employes. One of them, the Louisville & Nashville, in announcing the reduction, states that 'the drastic laws inimical to the interests of the railroads that have in the past year or two been enacted by congress and the state legislatures' are largely or chiefly responsible for the conditions requiring the reduction. Under such circumstances it is possible that the public may soon be confronted by serious industrial disputes, and the law provides that in such case either party may demand the services of your chairman and of the commissioner of labor as a board of mediation and conciliation. These reductions in wages may be warranted, or they may not.

Public Is Vitally Interested.

"As to this, the public, which is a vitally interested party, can form no judgment without a more complete knowledge of the essential facts and real merits of the case than it now has or than it can possibly obtain from the special pleadings certain to be put forth by each side in case their dispute should bring about serious interruption to traffic. If the reduction in wages is due to natural causes, the loss of business being such that the burden should be, and is, equitably distributed between capitalist and wage worker, the public should know it. If it is caused by legislation, the public and congress should know it, and if it is caused by misconduct in the past financial or other operations of any railroad, then everybody should know it, especially if the excuse of unfriendly legislation is advanced as a method of covering up past business misconduct by the railroad managers, or as a justification for failure to treat fairly the employe."

KIDNAPERS FOUND GUILTY.

Man and Woman Who Stole Chicago Girl Given Long Term.

Chicago. — Thirty years in the penitentiary for William Jones and 25 years in the penitentiary for his wife, Irene Alzina Jones—such was the punishment fixed for the kidnapers of Lillian Wulff in Judge Kersten's court Wednesday night by the jury in rendering a verdict of guilty.

Imprisonment in the penitentiary for 25 years was the punishment meted out by the jurymen to Mrs. Alzina Birmingham, while the woman's husband, William Jones, alias Birmingham, was sentenced to 30 years at hard labor in the same institution. Incidents of tense dramatic interest marked the return of the verdict. The reading of the decision of the jurymen by Court Clerk Schmidt precipitated a scene seldom witnessed in the criminal court of the county. The woman kidnaper, with her back to the wall within a few feet of the jury box, heard the words that doomed her to imprisonment for the next quarter of a century. The sentencing of her companion affected her but little. "We, the jury, find the defendant, Alzina Jones, alias Birmingham, guilty and fix her punishment at 25 years imprisonment in the penitentiary."

SENATOR LATIMER IS DEAD

SOUTH CAROLINA STATESMAN IS VICTIM OF PERITONITIS.

Operated On Last Sunday for Appendicitis and Never Fully Recovered from Effects.

Washington. — Senator Asbury C. Latimer of South Carolina died at Providence hospital at 9:15 a. m. Thursday of peritonitis. He had been at the hospital since Sunday last, when he underwent an operation for appendicitis. It was then discovered that he was suffering with a far more serious ailment. The bowels had become twisted and his condition was found to be such that surgeons held out little hope for his recovery. He rallied, however, and his progress was satisfactory until seven o'clock Wednesday evening, when steadily he began to grow worse. At midnight it appeared that recovery was impossible.

The members of the senator's family were with him when he died, having been informed that there was little hope that he would survive the night. Col. Ransdell, sergeant-at-arms of the senate, at once made arrangements for the removal of the body to the Latimer home at Belton, S. C.

As a mark of respect for the memory of Senator Latimer the senate adjourned Thursday.

Mr. Latimer was 57 years of age. He was especially interested in good roads and probably did more to promote the national movement for government building of good roads than any other member of congress. He was the author of the "Latimer good-roads bill."

PRESIDENT RECEIVES BARON.

Ambassador Takahira Given Formal Reception at Capitol.

Washington.—The formal reception of Baron Takahira, as ambassador of Japan to the United States, took place at the White House Thursday afternoon. The speeches exchanged between the president and the new ambassador, while on their face purely formal, were characterized in each case by an undercurrent of strong desire for the preservation of peace. The ambassador, for instance, said: "The maintenance of lasting peace with all nations and the conservation of the rights and interests of all people are the cardinal objects of my august sovereign."

Fifty Arrested in Capital—Policeman Are Killed in Fight.

St. Petersburg. — Attempts that had been planned against the lives of exalted personages were frustrated by the police Thursday night by a succession of arrests in various parts of the city, aggregating 50 men and women. This is the greatest number of terrorists ever taken by the police in the capitol. The majority of them were heavily armed, some with bombs, and they made desperate resistance against the police. During the course of the arrests three policemen were wounded and one was killed. One woman who was arrested at the entrance to Prince Ussupoff park, killed a policeman during the struggle. Two men were arrested in the Granda Morsimaia, one of whom is a notorious Italian anarchist. While the police were arresting a terrorist on Basile island he dangerously wounded two of them.

The General Demand

of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Crushed to Death.

Winona—Caught helpless in the bottom of a coal chute where the rumble of machinery drowned his frantic shouts for aid, Anton Eichmann, sixty-five years old, met a horrible fate at the North-Western railroad shops. The heavy conveyor, released from above by a fellow workman, descended on Eichmann and struck him on the head, breaking his neck.

Eichmann had been sent into one of the chutes to clean it out, and was working at the lowest part of the structure when the engineer, supposing the chute empty, started the machinery which lowers the conveyor. Eichmann must have heard the rattle of the machinery, and a single look toward the top was enough to reveal his situation in all its hideousness. Shouting was useless, for the rumble of the machinery and the chains which supported the conveyor was enough to drown the sound of his voice before it could be heard at the top of the chute, to say nothing of its reaching the engine room.

Railroad Earnings.

St Paul—The Duluth & Iron Range Railway Company paid into the state treasury its gross earnings tax for 1907, amounting to $321,908.81.

The Minnesota & International report shows gross earnings of $621,-354.58, upon which it will pay a tax of $24,555.40. Last year the gross earnings were $695,937.31 and the tax $27,837.49.

The Big Fork & International Falls road, which is the extension of the Minnesota & International to International Falls, was in operation for the last month of the year and in that time reports that its gross earnings were $1,928.37, upon which the tax will be $77.13.

Summer Schools.

St. Paul—The state normal school board at a meeting in the office of J. W. Olsen, superintendent of public instruction, apportioned the fund of $30,000 appropriated by the legislature last winter for the maintenance of summer schools at the normals. Twelve-week sessions will be held.

The apportionment was as follows: Winona, $5,500; Moorhead, $6,800; Mankato, $6,800; St. Cloud, 7,000; Duluth, $3,900. In addition to this money the schools have small unexpended balances from last year, the largest being at the Winona normal, which has a balance of $600, which will also be available for the schools next summer.

The board approved the estimates for the various normals for the third quarter of the year ending April 30, as follows: Winona, $13,529; Mankato, $19,596.22; Moorhead, $13,479.71; St. Cloud, $14,694.09; Duluth, $11,120.94.

Creameries.

St. Cloud—Minnesota has eighty-four counties, and there are creameries in seventy-eight of them. Twenty-nine counties produce 64,361,263 pounds of the 86,217,727 pounds of creamery butter made in the state. The figures show that the other fifty-five counties produced only 21,856,464 pounds of creamery butter in 1906. If the total creamery product was distributed evenly by counties, it would give over 1,026,401 pounds of butter to each one.

WOULD BLOW UP THE MAGAZINE

BLACK HAND THREATENS TO EXPLODE NAVAL MAGAZINE ON IONA ISLAND.

Demand is Made that Married Men Discharged on Jan. 1 be Taken Back at Once. 3,000,000,000 Pounds of Powder.

New York, Feb. 24.—In a letter signed "Black Hand," addressed to Commander Braunstruster, in charge of the United States naval magazine at Iona island, the threat has been made that the enormous stores of smokeless powder on the island will be blown up unless the married men discharged from employment on the island Jan. 1, 1908 be put back to work at once. There are 3,000,000,000 pounds of smokeless powder and other explosives stored in the numerous magazines.

Secret service men are working to discover the identity of the writer of the letter. Printed by hand, the letter was mailed at the Haverstraw postoffice two weeks ago. It was as follows:

"If the married men that were discharged from Iona island are not taken back again at once all the magazines on the island will be blown up. The writer does not fear death.

—"Black Hand."

On Jan. 1 between thirty and forty men, civilians, who had been employed on the island were discharged owing to delay in forwarding funds from Washington to continue work. This delay was looked upon at the time as temporary, and it was understood the men would be taken back as soon as the money arrived.

Among the men discharged, most of whom were laborers, were many Italians and Sicilians.

Since the receipt of the letter every approach to the island has been guarded day and night by marines, it is said, and the civilians employed have been kept under the strictest surveillance.

Iona island is forty miles up the Hudson from New York and seven miles south of West Point.

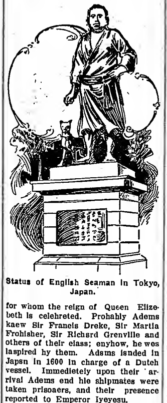
HE WAS FIRST ANGLO-JAP.

Will Adams, British Sailor, Became an Emperor's Adviser.

Kansas City.—To the strange romances of medieval times belongs the story of Will Adams, an English pilot, who went to Japan in 1600, and rose to extraordinary favor with Iyeyasu, one of the country's greatest emperors. He was the first Englishman to reside in Japan, and his services to civilization in that land were of great importance. A statue in honor of Adams has been erected in Tokio, and a fund is being collected to restore his tomb.

Six years after Columbus discovered America Adams started on his voyage. He was one of those daring seamen for whom the reign of Queen Elizabeth is celebrated. Probably Adams knew Sir Francis Drake, Sir Martin Frobisher, Sir Richard Grenville and others of their class; anyhow, he was inspired by them. Adams landed in Japan in 1600 in charge of a Dutch vessel. Immediately upon their arrival Adams and his shipmates were taken prisoners, and their presence reported to Emperor Iyeyesu.



Statue of English Seaman in Tokyo, Japan.

At the time Adams arrived in Japan the emperor was engaged in a conflict with the Jesuits. He feared the religionists were plotting to gain control of the government, and he had begun gathering information upon which an edict was based a few years later. Adams was a Protestant, and was not in sympathy with the Jesuits. The latter sought to prevent an interview between the emperor and the English adventurer, but were unsuccessful.

Iyeyasu, it appears, was anxious for some first-hand information about the doings of the outside world, especially in regard to religion and politics. Adams, having traveled much and been a close observer of men and manners, was able to give the emperor the enlightenment that he desired. Iyeyasu was a shrewd statesman; he knew that he had found a valuable man and he detained Adams at his court.

The emperor refused Adams no request, it is said, except the privilege of returning to England. The sailor was assigned to many important duties, such as the building of a fleet. He received many gifts from the emperor, and, finally, the poor English pilot became a samurai, or military retainer, and was endowed with a vast estate. Writing back to England of his adventures in Japan, Adams said:

"Being employed in the emperour's seruice, he hath given me a living, like vnto a lordship in England, with eightie or ninetie husbandmen that he as my slaues: the which, or the like president (precedent), was neuer here before geven to any stranger."

MADE A LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

O. O. Howard Retired Under Highest Army Rank.

Washington.—Maj. Gen. Oliver O. Howard, who is named as lieutenant general on the retired list of the army in the bill passed by the United States senate, has been a retired major general since November 8, 1894. He is the only officer living who commanded an army in the civil war and he has received the thanks of congress for meritorious services. Born at Leeds, Me., in 1830, Gen. Howard was graduated from Bowdoin college and West Point. He served in the Seminole campaign in Florida and was in many of the great battles of the civil war. His greatest work, perhaps, was done in command of the freedmen's bureau, 1865 to 1874.

SON OF JOHN BROWN

CELEBRATES 85TH BIRTHDAY NEAR AKRON, O.

Only Surviving Child of Famous Abolitionist Still in Vigorous Health—Fought with Father at Battle of Osawatomie.

Akron, O.—Jason Brown celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday at his home, four miles west of this city, the other day. He is the only surviving son of the famous John Brown who started the civil war in Kansas nearly a decade before Fort Sumter was fired upon, who led "free soldiers" at Osawatomie, and who was hanged for his raid on Harper's Ferry a few years later.

Jason Brown was with his father in the Kansas warfare, and he carried arms at Osawatomie. He believed in his father and had faith in the cause of freedom. The hanging of his father and the slaughter of his brothers and other relatives made him something of a recluse and a wanderer until a few years ago, when advancing age caused him to settle down. He took up his residence here on the farm conducted by his son.

The birthplace of Jason Brown was in Hudson village, this county, not more than 15 miles distant from the place on which he now makes his home. He was the eldest of 20 children. His father, John Brown, descended from Puritan stock, was a stern man, and succeeded in instilling into the members of his family faith in himself and enthusiasm in behalf of the cause to which he felt bound by divine appointment.

After a varied experience in the vicinity of Akron and later in New York, where John Brown undertook the supervision of a colony of liberated slaves, the Browns were attracted to Kansas. There a vast territory had just been opened up to settlement, and there was fierce rivalry among the settlers as to whether it should be considered as a slave-holding territory or free country. In part it was the controversy that drew them, and then, in addition, there was the hope that they might prosper in the new country. So John Brown, with his numerous sons and sons-in-laws and their families, removed to Kansas in the early '50s and settled near Osawatomie.

Jason Brown

Ardent abolitionists and making no concealment of their principles, they were soon singled out by proslavery neighbors for abuse and persecution. Their crops were destroyed. Their building were burned. A son, Frederick, was murdered on the public highway, and another member of the family was driven hopelessly insane by cruel treatment while a prisoner in the hands of their enemies.

Finally, one night in May, 1856, John Brown led a little band of free soldiers against the settlement of Osawatomie. In his band were several of his children and other relatives.

This night attack became known as the massacre of Osawatomie.

Jason Brown was not in the first fight, but he bore arms under his father at the battle of Osawatomie, which came as a sequel, in August of the same year. And he remembers that he killed his man.

After Osawatomie, John Brown and his family returned east. The father was determined to prepare for his later raid on Harper's Ferry, which he was convinced would mean an uprising that would set all the slaves free. Jason did not join him, however. He had had enough of war.

The fact that his life was saved by a Kentuckian, when he had been captured and was about to be hanged, had a softening effect on the heart of Jason Brown. He no longer hated the south.

Jason Brown is still vigorous. A short time ago he made a trip to Put-in-Bay to visit the aged widow of his brother John, Jr. In the summer time he busies himself about the farm, hoes in the garden or takes long walks down the winding country roads. His dog, Wolf, was his companion for years, but Wolf died recently and the old man now has to walk alone.

At Jason Brown's home are many relics of the early days in Kansas and at Harper's Ferry. Among them all the thing he prizes most highly is an old iron wash basin made by his father many years ago at Meadville, Pa. Not only did his father make it with his own hands, but the old basin made the trip to Kansas and was in the battle of Osawatomie, where water carried in it was used to bathe the wounds of the injured. It has been through three fires, and is badly cracked and disfigured, but that makes it only the more valuable in the eyes of its owner.

Action of Animal Charcoal.

Why animal charcoal removes the color from colored liquids while wood charcoal has no effect has not been understood. A European chemist now finds that the action of the former is due to the presence of five and seven per cent. of nitrogen.

GREATNESS.

The man who has greatness thrust upon him is always sure that he could have achieved it if that had been necessary.

Chance for Conversion.

In the ante-bellum days, when Anson P. Morrill of Maine was making his first run for congress, a henchman of his opponent met an old minister of that section slowly jogging along the road on his old horse and hailed him with: "Who are you going to vote for?" "Well," said the old man, "I thought I should give Anson a vote. Anson has good timber in him, I believe." "Oh, but I don't see how you can vote for him! Don't you know he's a Universalist? He doesn't believe in a hell." With a quiet twinkle in his eye the old man said: "We'll send him to Washington. When he has served his two years if he doesn't believe in a hell I shall be very much surprised."

HER CHOICE OF DEMISE.

Pathetic Thought of Little Girl Who Had Lost Playmate.

Mary had for neighbor a small playmate, a much-loved and attractive boy. The little lad rushed across the street one day, throwing back a glance at his mother. At that instant a trolley car swept around the corner and the resulting tragedy threw the town into mourning. Each family wept as though its own son had been lost. Mary was utterly disconsolate and, little as she had previously known of death, realized in a childish way the added horror of this one. In her convulsive grief, and while her father and mother sat with sobs in their throats and tears overflowing, Mary straightened up and sobbed:

"Mother, when I die I hope it will be of a disease and not of a damage!"

BRAIN POWER

Increased by Proper Feeding.

A lady writer who not only has done good literary work, but reared a family, found in Grape-Nuts the ideal food for brain work and to develop healthy children. She writes:—

"I am an enthusiastic proclaimer of Grape-Nuts as a regular diet. I formerly had no appetite in the morning and for 8 years while nursing my four children, had insufficient nourishment for them.

"Unable to eat breakfast I felt faint later, and would go to the pantry and eat cold chops, sausage, cookies, doughnuts or anything I happened to find. Being a writer, at times my head felt heavy and my brain asleep.

"When I read of Grape-Nuts I began eating it every morning, also gave it to the children, including, my 10 months old baby, who soon grew as fat as a little pig, good natured and contented.

"Within a week I had plenty of breast milk, and felt stronger within two weeks. I wrote evenings and feeling the need of sustained brain power, began eating a small saucer of Grape-Nuts with milk instead of my usual indigestible hot pudding, pie, or cake for dessert at night.

"Grape-Nuts did wonders for me and I learned to like it. I did not mind my housework or mother's cares, for I felt strong and full of 'go.' I grew plump, nerves strong, and when I wrote my brain was active and clear; indeed, the dull head pain never returned."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT,

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 20. 1906 at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We understand that Joseph Cannon is Bryans choice for the Republican candidate for president. Well you can not blame him for wanting something easy.

We understand that Charles Fellman of St. Hilaire will file for the Republican nomination for Sheriff of this County. We believe he would have easy picking to defeat IT. But we understand that IT is being advised by his friends to get under cover before the cyclone strikes him.

Better not tell the people of the west that you are opposed to the nomination of Taft, by the republican party, because he indorses the policies of President Roosevelt. What people of the west would like is Roosevelt, and if they can't get him they are going to take his policy.

The two city dailies, who was anxious to turn down all their country exchanges, in the northern part of the state, about one year ago have just toumbled to the fact that they made a mistake, as they will now have to go into the campaign with comparatively no circulation in the northern part of the state. If any ambitious candidat for state office waots to let people liveing north from St. Cloud see his name in print he will have to go to Big Duluth and have a talk with the publishers of that city, if he wants to reach the people up in this neck of the woods.

Wolves of the Sea.

Of all the inhabitants of the ocean few are more destructive than the sea wolf, a kind of dolphin which attains when full grown a length of fourteen feet and a weight of 3,000 pounds.

A swift swimmer, it is quick in its movements, cunning as a fox and has an insatiable appetite. It feeds on the young of seal, whale and walrus and also on the tongue of the adult whale.

When a mother walrus perceives a sea wolf, she endeavors to throw her cub on to an iceberg if one is near. Failing this, she gets it on top of her head and swims with it above water. But this is vain. Diving far below, the fish of prey comes up with tremendous force, striking the frantic mother a terrific blow and jolting the cub off her head into the water. Here it falls an easy victim to the assailant and is soon devoured.

In its work of destruction the sea wolf is frequently aided by the thrasher, a fish which can deliver a terrible blow with its tail.

Got Something For Nothing.

Mark Twain told how he got something for nothing one day in the early sixties when he needed the money. He walked into a hotel and was petting a strange dog. General Nelson A. Miles, who chanced to be present, offered him $10 for the canine.

"To be frank," said the humorist to General Miles, "I haven't really got any right to sell you this animal, but if you'll give me $3 you may take the pup away when I'm not looking, and I'll not tell who took it."

The bargain was closed, and General Miles took the dog to his room. A moment later the dog's owner inquired for his pet, and Mark Twain offered to find the animal for $3. The humorist then went to General Miles' room and explained all, had the dog returned to him, gave the army officer back his money and returned the canine to its original owner, thereby making $3.

The Kanoon.

The kanoon is the favorite instrument among ladies in Turkey. Its shape resembles that of a harp laid flat. It has seventy-two strings in sets of three and is played with a small plectrum.

How British Ships Salute.

A salute in the British navy between two ships of equal rank is made by firing an equal number of guns. If the vessels are of unequal rank, the superior fires the fewer rounds. A royal salute consists, first, in firing twenty-one great guns; second, in the officers lowering their sword points, and, third, in dipping the colors.

A Bell Ridden Town.

A well known tourist of the world has stated as his opinion that Lucerne is the most bell ridden town in Europe. He had assuredly never been to Schwyz. To begin with, the countless cattle that pass through the streets in the small hours of the morning on their way to or from the upland pastures wear bells as big as buckets. And there are church bells too. A fine peal they are, no doubt, but the noble art of bell ringing either never existed or has been lost here. The bells are rung by being smitten or banged together by two small boys, whose legs are plainly visible—an alluring mark for an air gun—through the open louvres of the church tower, the sounds produced being about as edifying as the music of a donkey engine in full play. The performance begins at 4:30 a. m. and continues until early service at 5, and if there is a funeral—which is every other day or so—there will be another ansioined burst of melody from 6 to 7. During the remainder of the day the ringing is varied and persistent, but it lacks the irritating power of the early morning exercises. Sooner or later public opinion will be aroused. Those boys will be dragged from their perch, figuratively if not literally, and peace and quiet will reign in the eponymous capital of the confederacy.—Blackwood's Magazine.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

IMMIGRATION FROM SOUTH EXPECTED

U. S. FARMERS ARE RECOGNIZING SPLENDID OPPORTUNITIES OFFERED BY WESTERN CANADA.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 9, 1908.—Present indications are that the Canadian Northwest will draw an exceptionally heavy movement of new settlers from the United States this year. It should surpass the banner record for 1907. This is not only based on the fact that the Americans have come to realize generally that the Canadian Northwest offers splendid opportunities, but also because the railroads have awakened to the fact and are offering rates to the Canadian Northwest which are exceptionally favorable.

The lines which lead to St. Paul from the east and south are offering homeseekers' rates to the Canadian Northwest this year which are on a parity with those in existence to the southwest for a couple of seasons.

These rates can be obtained from any agent of the Canadian government, who will be pleased to give all information possible regarding those districts which offer the greatest inducements to settlers. The weather throughout Western Canada has been remarkably good this year. A telegram from the winter wheat belt of Southern Alberta dated at Cardston, Alberta, January 29th, says:

"This winter up to January 25 was nothing short of a marvel, in fact, it was the finest anyone can remember for twenty-five years though there have been others nearly as good. The days were fine, sunny and warm with light frosts at night. Overcoats and gloves, etc., were discarded by most people in the day time. There was so little frost in the ground that post holes could be dug without any trouble after the first inch was broken through. Winter wheat remained fresh and green although there has been no snow since the September storm. If there is an early spring, winter wheat should gain a great start."

Amongst the reports of the yield of last year the following extracts are taken:

H. Howe, of Magrath, Alta, writing on November, 1907, says: "I have 70 acres in crop, 50 acres of wheat and seven acres of oats. My average yield of oats was 35 bushels to the acre, and of wheat 45 bushels. The value to me was $35 per acre."

J. F. Haycock, of Magrath, writes in November: "I had 65 acres in winter wheat, which went 60 bushels to the acre; oats averaged 80 bushels. I also had 12 tons of hay worth $10 per ton. I got 600 bushels of potatoes from three acres of land; I got eight tons per acre from five acres of sugar beet."

J. F. Bradshaw, of Magrath, had 1,030 acres of winter wheat last year which averaged 39½ bushels to the acre. The value of his farm products per acre was: Wheat, $31.60; oats, $11.20 and barley, $25.15.

TOO MUCH.

Eddie—I don't mind so much dat I quit smokin' 'cause you ast me ter, but ter be refused after I'd gone an' washed me handsome face fer a week straight—well, honest, I didn't think it of yer.

Tried on the Dog

By Armiger Barclay

(Copyright.)

Mac's dingy room was hazy with smoke. The three of us sat silently drawing at our pipes; the fact is, we were the most downhearted set of men to be found that night in all London.

"I give it up," sighed Mac. "This is my fourth attempt, and it's my last." His eyes dwelt gloomily on the broken model of the flying-machine that littered the table.

"Time wasted—money gone—hope vanished!" Dawes ground out between his teeth. He was thinking of the collapse of his last piece of apparatus, on which he had spent three months and all the money he could borrow.

I was on the point of adding my quota to the chorus of vain regrets when the door opened with a jerk and Bridger stumbled in. Our nerves, just then, were not in a state to support any form of shock however slight, and his sudden entrance startled us.

Bridger's face was like the face of a man who had seen a ghost. "W—what's up?" Mac exclaimed.

For answer, Bridger supported himself on the edge of the table and made a sound that we knew meant "Brandy!" There was some half-pint in the bottle that Mac hurriedly produced, and Bridger swallowed the better part of it. Then he wiped the perspiration from his forehead and collapsed into a chair.

"Feel better?" asked Dawes sympathetically.

Bridger nodded, and presently spoke in a weak voice. "I'm awfully sorry to make such an ass of myself, but I've had a bit of a shock."

"Bad news?" I inquired.

"Not so much that as a series of nerve-trying incidents. Cumulative, you know. They've knocked me out of time."

"I ought to have told you," he said, rather desperately, "that, like yourselves, I've been giving months to the problem of aerial flight, working with another man, an Italian chemist, who has made a strange discovery in motive power. Our joint efforts resulted in a model which made its first flight a week ago."

"You don't mind giving us details?" suggested Dawes. "You can rely on us to respect your confidence."

"I'll tell you everything," declared Bridger. "It will be a relief. Indeed, I can't keep the hellish thing to myself any longer." He waited a moment as if to concentrate his thoughts.

"You know the ring-dove? Its flight is noiseless and very rapid. We kept one captive in the shed where we worked, intending to base our designs on it. Somehow, we changed them. Zoffani, my partner, had manufactured a cartilaginous substance—a sort of membrane, and this was stretched over digits, and the planes ultimately took the shape of a bat's wing. The whole model was only a foot across and extremely light. For the digits, stays and braces we used only albatross quills, and the motive power—" He made an impressive pause—"was radium!"

"Radium!" echoed Mac, incredulously. "You're not serious?"

"I never was more so in my life." Bridger's tone was too impressive to leave any doubt on that score.

"But—how did you apply it?" I asked.

"In the form of the Beta-ray. I am not a chemist, and I fear I can't give you the explanation I should like of how this form of energy was adapted to our purpose. In fact, this portion of the work was undertaken by Zoffani.

By this time our interest was thoroughly aroused. Bridger had begun by exciting our curiosity; now, both his manner and his words rivetted our attention "When, at the first trial," he continued, "we found that the lifting power of the machine was nine times that of its total weight you may imagine our exultation. Our fondest hopes had been exceeded. Its flight was so strong and sustained that control was necessary from the first.

Up to this point Bridger had shown comparative calmness, but directly he referred to the dove a change came over him. His breath grew shorter; his words came in jerks.

"The bird was a wild one—we got it from Romney marsh—a female. It had got used to captivity, but directly the machine approached it, it showed fear—battled against the bars of its cage. At these times we could plainly see that the machine was exerting an increased pull as though striving to reach the bird.

He shivered slightly.

"We moved the cage to the opposite end of the building. The machine followed it! That was not all. It began to emit strange sounds—not the hum of a moving body—not a mechanical sound, but animal—full of meaning—beastly!

"I can't describe those sounds. I can't even describe my own sensations as I listened to them beyond saying that they were sickening ones. The dove, after showing agonies of fear, began to exhibit the symptoms of a subject under the spell of the hypnotist. It lost volition—just lived—just lived in an abject state under the spell of the—vampire that hovered over it.

"Believe me, I was not to blame for this horrible cruelty. I did my best to put a stop to it. Zoffani was the obstacle. From the first he had shown a demoniacal delight in the machine's enthrallment of the bird.

He reached for the brandy, and the tremor of his hand made the glass rattle against his teeth as he drank.

"Last night I left Zoffani in the building," faltered Bridger. "My nerves had quite broken down under the strain of watching that gruesome thing in its endeavors to reach its palsied victim. I was in revolt, too, against Zoffani's bestial enjoyment of the experiment. Fears of I know not what so beset me in the night that I could not sleep, and so, when, this morning, I returned to the place, I was in no condition to stand any further mental strain.

"As I paused outside the door to listen, I was relieved at the silence within. That meant that Zoffani had not yet arrived, that the machine was at rest, and that I was to be spared its haunting voice, if voice it was.

"I put the key in the lock; it would not turn. Stooping to investigate the cause, I found Zoffani's key in the aperture protruding from the inside. I called out; there was no answer. Fear seized me—fear of the unknown. Something urged me to gain entrance without delay. The sill-stone was loose. Lifting it, I hurled it at the door, battering it in, and, driven by my own impetus, stumbled across the threshold. There I stopped—horror-stricken!"

Bridger had risen, carried away by the poignancy of his emotions.

"The place was a shambles! On the floor lay Zoffani—dead—his face so distorted that it froze my blood! Fastened to his throat, and held there by his rigid fingers, was the hellish thing—the machine, wrecked beyond recognition, the line that held it broken! From beneath the body issued broad streams of blood, now dark and congealed. A little way off was the cage, wrenched apart, and close beside it the mutilated body of the dove. How long I gazed at the nauseating scene I cannot tell. At last I felt my senses reeling, and I fled—"

Beads of sweat stood out on his face. With dragging steps he moved towards the door, groped blindly for the handle and staggered out.

"There I Stopped—Horror-Stricken."

Nobody moved. No one of us tried to detain him. For myself, I felt glued to my seat, physically powerless.

The sense that makes men avoid a nauseating subject was upon the three of us. Each hesitated to put his thoughts into words. We must have sat in silence for a full ten minutes, save for an occasional interjection, when there came a noisy interruption. The door was flung open and Towers, who lodged below, strode into the room.

"Hullo, you chaps!" he shouted; and getting no immediate answer, looked at each of us narrowly. "I see," he went on. "So Bridger's been here, has he?"

Mac started up. "What do you mean?" he asked, resentfully.

"Don't get angry, Mac," was the rejoinder. "You're not the only one Bridger has taken a rise out of."

At this Dawes and I swung round in our chairs.

"A rise! Do you mean to say—?" I began.

"His yarn about an aero model and the Greek and the canary. Yes, yes, I know," admitted Towers, in response to our signs of dissent. "He varies the details. But the story's a corker, isn't it?"

"Story—yarn!" echoed Dawes blankly.

"Of course! Bridger never had a model. Knows nothing about aerostatics, except what he's picked up."

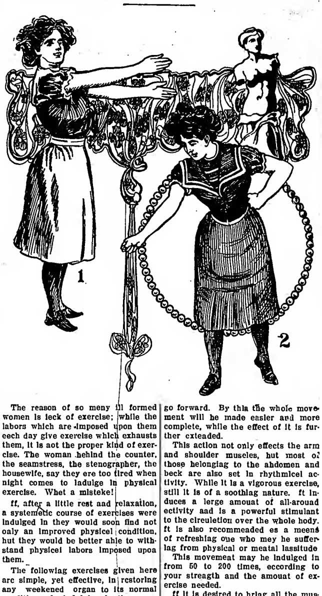
"But why—what could be his object in lying so—so disgracefully?" I asked with indignation.

"Why, he's a journalist. Didn't you know? He wanted to make sure of his facts, and satisfy himself that he'd got a blood-curdler for that paper he's on. He's been 'trying it on the dog' downstairs as well!"

There was a pause.

"And I gave the fellow—brandy!" exploded Mac.

Proper Exercise



The reason of so many ill formed women is lack of exercise; while the labors which are imposed upon them each day give exercise which exhausts them, it is not the proper kind of exercise. The woman behind the counter, the seamstress, the stenographer, the housewife, say they are too tired when night comes to indulge in physical exercise. What a mistake!

If, after a little rest and relaxation, a systematic course of exercises were indulged in they would soon find not only an improved physical condition, but they would be better able to withstand physical labors imposed upon them.

The following exercises given here are simple, yet effective, in restoring any weakened organ to its normal condition. In indulging in them you are following simply the paths of nature, which restore the invalid to health by the same method and means by which the healthy body is developed and preserved. The movements are absolutely natural, are grounded on the mechanism of the human body and suggested by the conformation of its joints and muscles.

Before beginning the exercises, remove all tight-fitting clothing and see that the room is well ventilated.

Illustration No. 1 gives the position for the first exercise. With the arms extended in front, start by moving them backward, then forward with a throwing or swinging movement, increasing in speed as you progress. Permit the body to sway loosely at the hips, so that when the arms go forward to maintain the equilibrium the body will bend backward, and when the arms go backward the body will go forward. By this the whole movement will be made easier and more complete, while the effect of it is further extended.

This action not only effects the arm and shoulder muscles, but most of those belonging to the abdomen and back are also set in rhythmical activity. While it is a vigorous exercise, still it is of a soothing nature. It induces a large amount of all-around activity and is a powerful stimulant to the circulation over the whole body. It is also recommended as a means of refreshing one who may be suffering from physical or mental lassitude

This movement may be indulged in from 50 to 200 times, according to your strength and the amount of exercise needed.

If it is desired to bring all the muscles of the body into still more vigorous action, and at the same time increase the stimulation of the system, the arms, instead of moving in the same direction, can be swung in opposite directions; as, for instance when the left is moving backward the right will be moving forward.

No. 2 gives the position for the second exercise. The body is bent forward from the hips and the arm action is the same as that which is employed in sewing a board with a handsaw, except that both arms are brought into action, as follows: With the fists clenched, one arm is pushed vigorously forward and downward, the other is drawn with bent elbow backward and upward at the same time.

By this means some very comprehensive groups of muscles are brought into play, such as those of the arms, shoulders, back, abdomen and chest, relieving any congested conditions.

VERITABLE THINGS OF BEAUTY ARE THE NEWEST HAT PINS

Very beautiful are the newest hat pins, composed of large balls of platinum, plentifully set with brilliants or tiny rhinestone. These pins are so made that they can be unscrewed from the pin and attached to a gold or enamel watch chain. With an exquisite hat of white lace and flowers this hat pin is a decided relief from the heavy ambers and tortoise shell balls, which are very smart with somber fur or velvet, but scarcely in keeping with a light-colored straw hat trimmed with delicate flowers, ribbons and laces.

To keep the lace, net and chiffon veils firmly in place on the wide-brimmed straw hats that are so fashionable for the south extremely clever and effective pins have been devised. To fasten the veil into the hair in back a long jewel hair pin, with the pin curved slightly with the shape of the head, is excellent, while for the front of the veil a small pin of the same design fastens the net or chiffon to the edge of the brim. The new caliber setting, with its stones of contrasting colors set close into the gold or platinum pockets, is used to a large extent in all manner of hair pins.

In neck ornaments the long bead chain is replaced at times by a narrow watered ribbon with a movable slide of diamonds that enables the ribbon to be worn close round the collar band, after the fashion of the single string of pearls, or in the style of the long neck chain.

Remedy for Straight Hair.

Straight hair is the bane of a girl's existence, and her lucky sister who was born with naturally wavy locks does not realize the agony the girl with the straight hair endures. A good solution is the white of an egg mixed with an equal amount of rose water and a few drops of some fragrant perfume. Then the hair should be slightly shampooed with the mixture before wrapping around the curlers. Left until thoroughly dry, then brushed gently, the hair will be wavy with a soft sheen on it besides looking light and fluffy, and the wave will remain permanent in spite of rain and fog.

NO ARBITRARY RULE AS TO COLOR, SAYS PARISIAN AUTHORITY.

I will not insult the intelligence of my audience by insisting upon the now exploded theory that there are certain colors exclusively dedicated to the brunette and others the sole possession of the blond. When crude dyes only were obtainable, it was perhaps necessary to say to the dark women, "For you there must exist only yellow and pale blue," and to the blond: "You must look upon no other color save green and light red."

But now contemplate the nuances of every dye; contemplate, too, the changes that are rung on the definition "brunette" and "blond." Besides, if there is one point upon which women are usually good judges for themselves it is color.

While, however, roughly speaking, white is for everybody, mauve for the very fair, blue for the brunette and red for the blond. I would add that age should be circumspect in a decision as to color schemes. With white, black, gray and purple at her command, why should the woman of 60 insist upon pink, which is certain to make her appear years and years older than she really is?—Worth, in Harper's Bazar.

WOMAN'S BACKACHE

The back is the mainspring of woman's organism. It quickly calls attention to trouble by aching. It tells, with other symptoms, such as nervousness, headache, pains in the loins, weight in the lower part of the body, that a woman's feminine organism needs immediate attention.

In such cases the one sure remedy which speedily removes the cause, and restores the feminine organism to a healthy, normal condition is

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Will Young, of 6 Columbia Ave., Rockland, Me., says:

Mrs. Augustus Lyon, of East Earl, Pa., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

TURNING VANITY INTO MONEY

By JOHN R. THOMPSON,

Treasurer Cook County, Illinois.

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Why is it that thousands of intelligent men working for salaries or for wages are investing their savings in the stocks of wildcat companies against the advice of friends competent to advise them and in the face of their own better judgment?

The obvious answer is: Because they expect to profit greatly by the investment—to "get rich quick," as the common saying puts it. This is only half the answer, and the other half—often the more powerful—is seldom brought out.

It can be stated in one small word—Vanity.

This is not flattering to the investors who have defied the sober counsel of experienced men of affairs and who have stifled their own natural forebodings and sense of caution, but the fact remains that vanity has, in hundreds of thousands of cases, been the one factor which has turned the tables against reason, judgment and good counsel and emptied the pockets of the wage earner and the salary worker into the coffers of the fake investment shark.

When the bait thrown out is equally attractive to the cupidity and the vanity of human nature the catch is almost certain—and the clearness with which the latter human weakness is understood by the sharpers who lie in wait for the surplus savings of those who do the world's hand work, is evidenced by the fact that the literature sent out to lure the unwary is full of phrases like this:

"Why not become an associate of men who are doing things? We want your influence in your community. The men who are in this enterprise are known in the business world and they desire cooperation of others who are capable of broad and independent judgment, of men like yourself who can see beyond the rim of a silver dollar and appreciate large opportunities, men of constructive abilities who are ready to take a hand in the development of one of the greatest enterprises of the present day. Your advice, influence and cooperation are more valuable to us than your money."

When this appeal is put to a man who has always worked under others, who has never been consulted by a business man, whose opinions on business matters have never been asked by any person outside his own family circle, the temptation to a new and delightful feeling of self-importance is almost inevitable. There is not a clerk bending over a desk or a counter, a mechanic working at his lathe or bench, or a laborer toiling in street or field who has not at times felt that he has had ideas about some feature of business worth considering, who has not harbored a secret longing to have a place and standing among the men who pull the wires which move the machinery of business. When such a man—and his kind is legion—receives one of these artful and insinuating appeals to his vanity he is rarely poised and gifted with common sense above his fellows if he does not feel that at last he has come into his own; that his abilities have finally been appreciated and that the stranger in the business world has understood him better than his associates, his neighbors, his familiar friends and those under whom he works. The flattery of this appeal outweighs its shallow rawness and its obvious and cheap insincerity. But the real cunning of this attack upon his vanity is the fact that it appeals to his "independent judgment" and classes him among the men who see things shrewdly and in a big way and who scorn timidity. If he listens to this argument—and generally he does—he feels a new sense of self-importance and of independence and a corresponding disinclination to listen to the advice of those whose familiarity with business and finance would enable him to steer clear of the rocks of disaster. His judgment is pitted against theirs and he is aroused to a determination to "show them" that his opinion is better than theirs.

This antagonism against the reception of advice from men of experience is the one thing which the investment sharper most desires to awaken in the prospective victim, for it will prevent him not only from seeking sound advice but from acting upon it when it is put in his way.

The schemers who have learned how irresistibly the argument of "manage for yourself" appeals to the man who has never had a chance to try his hand at managing a business have not stopped at this point; they have also learned that men in the humbler walks of life are clannish and inclined to think and act together. Along with this they have realized that it is easier and cheaper to hunt their game in flocks and droves than singly. When the sportsman wishes to get a big bag of game and get it quickly he goes after the birds which travel in flocks. So with these gunners who are adepts in the use of decoys and "calls." They arrange their hunts in line with this idea of clannishness, of mass movement, and use the ammunition of "act for yourself" so that every shot will be a "pot shot."

Here is an example of how this kind of financial sportsmanship is prosecuted: Some time ago an inventor brought out a machine for the making of print paper from the pith of cornstalks. So far as making an impressive, scientific demonstration was concerned, the device was admirable, but when it came to its ability to compete commercially with wood pulp mills and their products, that was a problem that did not greatly concern the promoters with whom the inventor and patentee became associated. So long as the machine did its demonstration work with convincing plausibility their immediate purpose was fully met. The paper production in which they were most concerned was that upon which the handsome stock certificates of the company were printed.

He immediately turned his guns upon wage workers of the printing and paper trades.

By personal solicitation and printed literature he plied the members of these trades with the argument: "Make this your own industry! Here is the opportunity for you to keep in your own hands the thing which is going to revolutionize the paper business just as the typesetting machine has revolutionized the printers' craft. You can, by coming in now, with a small investment per man, place yourselves in control of an industry which will hold in its grip a product of millions of dollars a year—a product upon which the whole paper and printing world depends for its existence."

This was an argument which every man in the mechanical department of a newspaper or a commercial printing establishment, and every paper mill or paper company, could understand. It met him on his own ground and he began to see visions of himself as one of the "powers" in the very industry in which he was an obscure wage worker. What a turning of the tables there would be when the world awakened to the fact that this great "revolutionizing invention" was controlled by the men at the type case and machines, the printing presses, the stereotyping tables, the pulp vats and the paper warerooms! Then the "last" would become first, the paper industry would be ruled by the men from the bottom of business; the journeyman would be the magnate and would know the feeling of power and authority!

By scores and hundreds the wage workers in these trades rallied to this cry and the leaders among them were "taken care of" in a way which made them feel that they had already come into their own. These bell-wethers of the craft marshaled their followings with a sincere confidence that they were leading the way to a financial Utopia and the promoters rubbed their hands in satisfaction at the rate at which their illuminated stock certificates were demanded by the workers who wanted to become captains of industry and "manage for themselves." Certain "subsidiary" and "allied" companies were organized for the purpose of giving more of these men official position—to distribute to a wider number the thrill that comes from putting a hand on the pilot wheel of "affairs."

The outcome of this revolution to place the trusting wage worker in the control of an industry of his own is fully covered by the suggestion that the farmer is still "plowing under" the dead cornstalks upon which the news of the world was to have been printed. Meantime hundreds of faithful workers in the printing and paper trades are finding it more difficult to "manage" their own personal finances because of the deficit created by the investment which was to "make the industry their own."

The ambition of the wage earner and the man on salary to better his condition, to "make his surplus work for him," to find a broader expression for his individuality and abilities in a business way is both natural and commendable; but he will make a poor start in the line of that ambition if he fails to realize, at the outset, that finance is as much a technical trade as that which the typesetter, the mason, the carpenter, the machinist or the plumber follows, and that it would be no more absurd for the banker or the man of finance to attempt to set a galley of type, lay a brick wall or serve at a machinist's lathe without a technical training, an apprenticeship, than for the journeyman in any of these crafts to take a financial operation, no matter how modest, into his own hands, independent of the guiding council of the man who knows the ropes of finance. And the investment in a stock or a bond is a transaction in "finance" in the strict and full sense of the term.

The man of small means, unschooled in the ways of finance, might just as safely hand his pocket money or his savings bank account over to an utter stranger who promises to meet him at a certain place, at some future time, and give him something valuable in return, as to put his money into the stocks and alleged securities which are being foisted upon the public today by the beating of publicity drums and the blare of promotion trumpets. One of these transactions does not require a whit greater stretch of credulity than the other.

Let the man who has an ambition to manage his small savings keep steadily in mind the fact that the concern whose literature or solicitors attempt to influence him against seeking the advice of men familiar with the ins and outs of finance is an enemy to his welfare and unable to stand the light of investigation. The man or the company having something to sell which is sound and worthy has no need to make an underhand appeal to prejudice and vanity in an effort to prevent you from seeking counsel from those of experience.

SORTING PENS.

Two Arrangements Which Will Be Found to Work.

I venture to send a rough sketch of a hog sorting pen I planned several years since, and which I have found to work satisfactorily, writes a correspondent of Wallaces' Farmer. I use it mostly for sorting hogs for market, and when I wish to sort out a certain kind or size of hogs I go among them with a can of paint and a paddle while they are busy eating and daub a little paint on the backs of those I want to sort out. Then the whole herd is let into the large lot (A), see Fig. 1. From one corner of this lot an opening is made about 16 or 18 inches wide and 30 inches high, and 3 feet from center of opening is set a post (d), which is the end post in division fence between two smaller lots (C and D). Hang a light but strong gate from post so that it will swing easily from side to side of opening to let the hogs in either yards C or D as wanted. The fence between lots A and C should be a tight fence of sufficient height to screen the man operating the swinging gate (from shoulders down) from sight of the hogs in lot A. A small platform, shown at E, is built at one side and above opening, upon which the operator stands. Two men drive the hogs slowly through the opening, which is alternately opened to allow the marked hogs to go into one yard and the unmarked into the other. Some oats or shelled corn may be thrown into yards B and C to keep the hogs away from the swinging gate until the job is done. The gate is swung from side to side as desired by means of a strong handle fastened securely to the gate about 8 inches from the loose end and extending about 3 feet above the gate.

Another correspondent gives his plan of sorting pens, Fig. 2. These are general plans and may easily be altered to suit individual cases. As they stand they are for hogs or sheep, and I have found them very efficient. I do not think they would be practical for cattle, as one man could not operate both gates at "f" if built on a large scale.

"a" and "b" is a fence across corner of feed lot. Gate at "a" may be opened when not in use, and the fence will not interfere with stock. Two gates at "f." Gate "e" is not essential, but greatly simplifies sorting, and makes a small pen of the alley, which is very convenient for ringing or castrating. Opening at "b" and "c" to be closed with hurdle after hogs are in corner "g."

Outlook for Sheep.

There is no danger of any person getting into trouble in predicting that from now on the sheep is to be returned to its proper place on the farms. And why not, when it makes far more money out of the grass and the weeds and the seeds, the roots, the grains, the hay and anything else fed to it than any other kind of animal we raise, and it does that without one needing to milk or grind for them? All that is required is to give the feed as it comes from the field, only that turnips had better be cut. Does that not tell, and tell materially, when the labor saved is considered, how we can farm, farm well, and cut down expensive labor bills?—John Campbell, Woodville, Ontario.

Avoid Grade Animal.

Never use a grade animal for breeding, however good its appearance may be. Whatever of merit, style or quality he may possess has come to him from some thoroughbred ancestor, but he has no power to transmit his fine qualities to his progeny to any degree worth figuring on. The improvement has ended with himself. The grade will breed the herd down instead of up, and there is no profit that way.

HOW DO THEY GET IN?

Physiological Problem That Nora Could Not Solve.

A Philadelphia physician tells of an amusing conversation between two Irish girls in domestic service who, while on the board walk at Atlantic City one day not long ago, were exchanging views as to their various physical ailments.

"It's a sthrange thing, ain't it, Norah," asked one of the girls, "how menny new koinds of diseeses people get these days. Only this mor-nin' I wore readin' an advertissment of a new midicine. It said it were wonderful for a sluggish liver."

"Gwan!" exclaimed the other girl, scornfully. "Liver trouble ain't no new disase. Me own grandfather was havin' liver trouble whin I were not more'n tin years old."

"Maybe," was the laconic response. "But," added Norah, "what I want to know is: how do thim slugs get inside the liver, anyhow?"—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

Suffered Torments from Birth—In Frightful Condition—Got No Help Until Cuticura Cured Him.

"I had an itching, tormenting eczema ever since I came into the world, and I am now a man 55 years old. I tried all kinds of medicines I heard of, but found no relief. I was truly in a frightful condition. At last I broke out all over with red and white boils, which kept growing until they were as big as walnuts, causing great pain and misery, but I kept from scratching as well as I could. I was so run down that I could hardly do my work. I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment, Resolvent, and Pills for about eight months, and I can truthfully say I am cured. "I cheerfully endorse the above testimonial. It is the truth. I know Mr. Bordwell and know the condition he was in. Nelson R. Burnett, Tipton, Ia."

A Nature Student.

The facility with which the New York child grasps the "new idea" in matters educational is charmingly illustrated in a composition recently penned by a six-year-old. Her teacher had asked for brief compositions on "Animals I Have Seen." This is the result, written in the present day vertical penmanship:

"Do you see the little robin swinging on the tree? Do you see the little goldfish a-swimming in the bowl? Who teached these two to fly so beautifully together? Who struck the feathers on their breasts? 'Twas God—'Twas God. He done it."

The Funny Things One Sees

Smiling Round the World

By

MARSHALL P. WILDER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

In Oklahoma we were stalled for a day in a town called Shawnee. The supply on our diner gave out and at this town we had our first experience with local restaurants. We went to the "New England Home Restaurant," so-called. We didn't dare sit down, for fear we'd never get loose again. The sandwiches were made of bread at least two and a half inches thick with a piece of cold fried beefsteak between.

We took a chance at the real thing in hot tamales one day. A little boy was selling them at one of the stations. Well, after the first bite, mine fell out of the window. A lean and melancholy dog made a dive for it, gave a sniff and, with a disappointed look, sneaked away, and I didn't blame him. He looked hungry, too.

• • • • •

At one of those little prairie towns that seem to actually leap out of space, they come so suddenly into view, we found our cow in a shed by the station. We made quite a stop here and everyone got out. Several of the passengers wished to follow our custom and buy some milk, and some adventurous ones even essayed the unaccustomed feat of milking her themselves. I was offered the chance to try, but refused, having sore recollections of my first and last attempt to milk.

It was on my uncle's farm up in New York state, and I, wishing to do everything that a real farmer should, desired to enroll milking among my accomplishments. Being of tender years, and with the confidence that usually accompanies that stage of life, I entered the barn for my first lesson, with the utmost nonchalance, and gaily humming a dairy tune. I don't remember how I came out, but I think it was by the elevated. When I first looked at the cow she was all peace and contentment, but when she saw me she looked dissatisfied, and I knew there was a kick coming. She stopped chewing her cud and let it run down the loop—then, after a few minutes, she rang it up again, having decided upon her line of action. Later I discovered that I was on the line, and very near the transmitter.

At the aforementioned Shawnee we began to get some entertainment from our misfortunes. A young man from California, one of those serious fellows, with a face like a deacon, but a fund of humor within, wrote out telegrams containing the most airy flights of imagination, and showed them to the anxious and perspiring passengers, who spent their time pretty equally between swearing at the management of the road and making the poor conductor's life miserable.

One of these telegrams was shown to me. It stated that the herd of elephants belonging to Ringling Bros.' circus, that was stalled 40 miles away, were to be brought over and take the passengers on their backs across the washouts, where another train would meet them.

Wrote Telegrams Containing Airy Flights of Imagination.

Looking around to discover the author of this delicious fiction I was met by a preternaturally solemn glance and a comprehensive wink.

After that we pooled our energies, and when I think of what we made that trainful of passengers believe, not to mention the several other trains we were always meeting, for we were generally stalled seven and eight deep, I am astonished at the credulity of human nature.

We devised one telegram about a number of prairie schooners that were to come over the hills and take us by old Spanish trails far from the washouts. My serious friend showed the message, very secretly, to an excitable little German, who evidently belonged to the Uneeda Child company, for he had about a baker's dozen of small children, and a gentle, childlike faith that was truly touching.

We assured him that the conductor could let only a few in on this exceptional opportunity, as it would be impossible to take all the passengers. It would be necessary to secure tickets in order to get places, and he'd better do it now—and not let the conductor put him off—just insist.

In great excitement the little man flew to the poor, distracted conductor, and asked him mysteriously for tickets for himself and family.

"Tickets—what tickets?" demanded that long-suffering man.

"Ah, you know—you kandt fool me—I know all aboud it, mine frendt," wagging a knowing finger in front of his nose.

"I know that you must be crazy. I don't know anything about any extra tickets."

"Dot's all right. You don't want to led on, bud I haf been toldt. I wish to ged tigeds for dose brairie vaggons—vat?"

"You're crazy!" bellowed the exasperated conductor, to our unholy joy. "Who'n Sam Hill told you anything about prairie wagons? You've been out in the sun too long, Dutchy; go to bed and put ice on your head."

"Covered Her Head with a Blanket When I Pointed My Camera at Her.

The monotony of our trip was further varied by the arrival at one station of a lady of the peroxide tint of blonde, who smuggled in a small monkey and a large-sized flask. The monkey was hidden beneath the berth, so she would not have to put him in the baggage car.

The greatest excitement ensued; nightgear and lingerie (I trust I use the right word) were in great evidence. Everyone asked everyone else what the trouble was, but none seemed to know.

Finally the mystery was solved.

The blonde lady pleaded on her knees in very maudlin accents that the hard-hearted conductor would not send her precious pet to the baggage car; but he was obdurate, and poor Chico was banished to the accompaniment of his mistress' sobs.

At El Paso we were stalled all one Sunday; but with the expectation of leaving every moment. A bull fight was on, over in Mexico, just across the river, but we dared not go for fear of being left by our train.

From El Paso we kept north across the arid table lands, the low hills, like crumpled, rusty tin, lying along the horizon. They are treasure houses of copper, these hills, and, every few miles, a mine opening may be seen perched high up on a hillside, a short spur of the railway leading to it.

Crossing the desert between Tucson and Fort Yuma, we ran into a sand storm. The fine sand sifted into every smallest opening and made breathing well-nigh impossible. Fortunately it did not last long. We had only run into a corner of it, and were soon out.

The desert showed us several of her capricious moods, for presently we were treated to a most perfect mirage. Apparently a lake or broad river in the desert, with little islets and rocks mirrored in the most beautiful, cool and wettest looking water imaginable.

Fort Yuma claims the distinction of being the hottest place in the union. A story is told of a soldier who lived there, and died. The night after his death his spirit appeared to some of his comrades at their camp fire. They asked him what he wanted, and he said Hades was so much colder than Yuma he had come back for his blanket.

It certainly lived up to its reputation the day we were there.

A number of Indians were seated by the platform displaying articles of beadwork for sale. They object strenuously to being photographed—thinking the camera has the evil eye, and while it takes their portrait will also steal away their soul.

However, these scruples can be overcome at the rate of 50 cents a scruple. Who says the commercial instinct lurks not in the breast of the Indian?

One old woman, who was said to be a hundred and four years old, covered her head with her blanket when I pointed my camera at her. For her entertainment I did a little sleight-of-hand work, making the pass with a quarter, pretending to swallow it, then picking it off her blanket, finally rubbed it into my trouser leg and made it disappear entirely.

I only succeeded in frightening the poor old creature almost to death. She clasped her hands in fear, made the sign of the cross, crooked her fingers to avert the evil eye, and, pointing to me, put her fingers to her head like horns, indicating that I was a gentleman extremely well-known but of unsavory reputation.

Leaving these interesting remnants of the great race that once owned the land, we continued upon our sadly interrupted journey.

PEOPLE TO BLAME

HAVE THOUGHTLESSLY AIDED IN CENTRALIZING INDUSTRIES.

EVILS NOW CLEARLY SEEN

Unequitable Distribution of the Earnings of the People Inevitably Followed—Growth of Small Towns and Communities Retarded.

During the last few months of 1907 the people had a striking example of the effects of too much centralization. While all over the United States there was prosperity, a few embarrassed concerns in Wall street, New York, brought about a financial stringency that became generally felt. For years the agricultural sections have been sending money by the millions to the great financial centers. Here it was used for the building up of great trusts and combinations, which were greatly overcapitalized. On this watered capitalization the people have been compelled to pay ponderous dividends.

One natural law is that of concentralization, segregation, and in these matters Nature carries on its work well, but unnatural concentration, like other infractions of natural laws, bring quick punishment. The centralization of industries which has been going on since the trust era started has brought about an unequitable distribution of the earnings of the people. It has retarded the growth of towns and communities. It has brought in its wake many evils that affect workers in every field. Yet for these evils the masses of people are to blame. Every man, woman and child who labors and who sends the products of that labor to other places than the home community assists just so much in centralization of business and financial power. Every resident of a rural community who sends his dollars to the large city helps along the trust builders and the centralizers. While the mail-order evil is one that is serious, it is only so as it is a means of centralization of business, and the consequent sapping from communities the wealth that should be retained in them.

The commercial enterprises are the life elements of the rural towns. When these enterprises are destroyed, the town deteriorates. With the disappearance of the town goes the home markets, the good schools and the churches and the other public conveniences that the town affords. With the going down of the town, real estate values are depreciated, and depression comes to all the community. How would the farmers fare if the towns were wiped out and only the large cities allowed to exist? What kind of markets would the farmers have for all their produce? How does the average farmer find dealing with city concerns at the present time? When a shipment of eggs is made to the city commission man, does the farmer get as good returns as he does from the home dealers? How about other produce? It is the home markets that afford the growers of produce protection. When the calm thinker who is engaged in agriculture considers all these little matters, he will find that in home patronage lies the keystone of his success. How would the agricultural districts be as living places were there no home towns? But this is what the situation would be if all the people of a community sent to some foreign place for all the goods required.

Home is a word dear to all good citizens. That man lacks patriotism whose inclination it is to oppose the progress of the place where he resides. By making better the home town, we are improving the community of which we are a part. We cannot improve without benefiting ourselves. We cannot give patronage to concerns in the large cities without giving just so much help to the trust builders and the business centralizers. All these things are worthy of the most serious consideration of every citizen.

Adulterated Foodstuffs.

The chemist in charge of the laboratory of the department of agriculture at Chicago has been paying careful attention to the purity of foods. Recently he made a statement that one great spice company annually ground up 600 tons of cocoanut shells and flavored the same with essential oils and then sold the powdered stuff for pure spices. He related about another concern which sold $100,000 worth of spices annually, only five per cent. of which were pure. The common articles used for adulteration of spices are sawdust, brick dust, burnt grains, cocoanut shells and other kinds of shells and barks. It is the aim of the United States government to put an end to this adulteration of foods. Since the government has become active in tracing down such frauds a number of unscrupulous grocery houses have been compelled to go out of business.

Reputation Worth Acquiring.

Townspeople owe it to themselves to build up a reputation for hospitality. They should ever welcome the residents of the surrounding country to their town. But hospitality alone will not win. People have their eyes on the mighty dollar, and if in addition to hospitality the town secure a wide reputation as a good market place, where eggs and butter bring a few cents a pound more than in some other town, it will work wonders in drawing patronage to the place.

Clean and well-paved streets indicate the good character of citizens living in a place.

BUILDING UP THE CHARACTER.

A Few Words to the Youth Who Would Make the Most of Life.

It is well that the majority of us value being well thought of. Few young men, anxious to make the most of life, care to have what is commonly known as a "bad reputation." Do you, young man, ever stop to think that there are immutable laws that control the universe and all therein? Do you ever consider that light is only the evidence of a luminous body? That the brilliancy of the diamond is merely the rays reflected from the perfectly crystallized carbon? Reputation is only the reflection from character as it is variously projected upon the screen of public opinion; but reputation is not character, any more than the light is the luminous body, but is merely the effulgence, the result of character.

The imitation diamond for a time may rival in splendor and brilliancy the reflections of light of the genuine gem, but this brilliancy is soon dulled. The same with reputation, which sometimes attaches to a character which will not stand the test of time, or the scrutiny of the exacting eye of justice. Week after week we read in the pages of the press of the downfall and disgrace of men high in public estimation, and who, until their duplicity was exposed, were men of most excellent reputation—reputation reflected falsely from an unclean character.

Character is the mold of moral consciousness. It is the outgrowth of the heart carefully nurtured by truth and love and directed by intelligence solely influenced by that which is moral in man. It is by reputation that we are to be judged by those with whom we are thrown in either business or social intercourse. Our own acts are the standard by which we will be either praised or condemned. Our own acts are the indications of the spirit within. Though we may be most excellent in character, sometimes we may be falsely estimated; may acquire through some misunderstood circumstance a reputation undesirable. But character ever counts. It is sure to bring to the front its worth. The diamond may be robbed of its brilliancy for a time by grime and dirt, but it is nevertheless a diamond. Your true worth may be obscured for a time, but it is sure to become known.

Character is the greatest thing the young man has to guard. It is the only sure foundation upon which hope can be rightly based. He who is true to himself cannot be untrue to others. Would you have character and reputation, you must work, constantly, unceasingly, as conscience becomes deadened and degenerate when not exercised, and conscience directs the building of character. There are qualities in man that mark his greatness and his superiority—the moral and the mental, and it is by the exercise of these that greatness and success are gained.

AUTOMOBILES FOR THE FARM.

Tillers of the Soil to Be on Equality with People of Towns.

One of the large companies engaged in the manufacturing of farm machinery proposes placing on the market at an early date an automobile especially designed for farm use. This machine will be sold at a reasonable price, and will be put out in various styles ranging from a runabout to a heavy farm truck, which the farmer can use in transporting his grain and other produce to the markets.

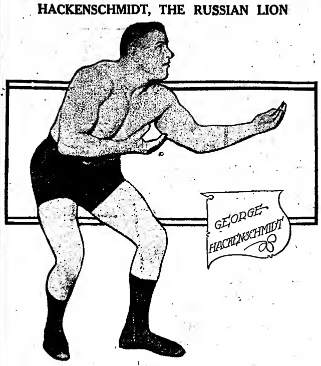
Transportation of farm produce to the railroad stations and the markets is a question of economy. It is estimated that at the present time it costs the farmer about nine cents per hundred pounds to carry his grain a distance of 12 miles to the railroad station or market place. It is expected that the installation of automobiles for hauling purposes will decrease the expense to three or four cents per hundred pounds. The coming of the farm automobile means further improvement of roads. Already the automobile and the rural delivery of mail has worked wonders in the way of stimulating interest in road improvement. Once the farmers become automobile users they will be more energetic workers, in fact, enthusiasts for high-class highways.

Another use of the automobile in agricultural districts is its employment by merchants for delivering goods to patrons in the country. In a number of eastern states enterprising merchants send out their clerks with automobiles in the morning to solicit the orders of the people residing on the nearby farms, and use the automobile for delivering goods in the afternoon. Merchants who have adopted this plan have found it profitable and their business greatly increased, not considering the advertising received by this innovation.

Where Some Citizens Fail in Duty.

Many who have succeeded upon the farms remove to the near-by town to enjoy life, perhaps to give to their children the advantages that the good schools of the place afford. It is too often the case that these people fail to become the model town citizens they should be. While they are desirous of having all the advantages that the town has to offer they are adverse to doing that which means its improvement and upbuilding. These classes are the "moss-backs," the ones who think that they have done their duty toward themselves and their fellow men when they manage to earn sufficient on the farm so that they can cease work. It may be their privilege to quit labor, but they show a poor and lowly spirit when they fail to give the town which they select as a home place the support it should have from one of its citizens.

HACKENSCHMIDT, THE RUSSIAN LION



George Hackenschmidt, the European champion wrestler, who will probably be matched with Frank Gotch, the American champion, the contest to take place in some American city this spring, is the one man in the sport who wrestles strictly on the square at all times. He has been champion of the world for six years, having defeated all of the prominent wrestlers abroad. He was born in 1877 and studied engineering, took to weight lifting and wrestling as an amateur, became a professional wrestler when he was 21 and has had a long list of victories ever since. He stands five feet nine inches and is said to have an almost perfect development.

"RUBE" WADDELL SOLD TO ST. LOUIS BROWNS

Well-Known Left-Hand Pitcher Released by Connie Mack to McAleer's Team.

"Rube" Waddell.

"Rube" Waddell, who for years has been the terror of American league batsmen, has been purchased by President Hedges of the St. Louis Browns from the Philadelphia Athletics. The deal, which has been pending for three months, was closed the other day. The price paid for the noted left-hander was not announced, but Hedges said it was "enough to sink a ship."

For the past two seasons "Rube" hasn't pitched as consistently for the Athletics as he did in former years, and the patience of Connie Mack was so sorely tried on many occasions by the escapades of the big twirler that he finally decided to let him go.

Manager McAleer and President Hedges of the Browns have no fear that he has lost his cunning. On the contrary, "Rube" showed his wonderful curves successfully too many times last summer when he was going at top speed to indicate that he is all in.

The St. Louis club officials firmly believe that "Rube" is as great as ever as a pitcher, and expect that with another team behind him he will prove that his "south paw" curves and speed are as puzzling as ever to American league hitters.

On many occasions last year Waddell shut out opposing teams and ran his total of strike-outs well into double figures. On account of his freak habits Waddell lost the friendship of many of the Philadelphia players; he lost heart in his work, and when his team mates quit regarding him as the "whole show" he ceased to make pitching his principal occupation.

Waddell has been in the south all winter and will be mailed a St. Louis contract within a day or two. He undoubtedly will sign it with alacrity, as it calls for more money than he ever got from the Athletics.

Waddell never was a high-priced pitcher while working for Connie Mack. Mack used to give him a two-dollar bill now and then and settle the bills sent him by proprietors of livery stables for rigs "Rube" had hired. At the end of the season "Rube" seldom had anything coming to him.

Buys Entire Baseball Team.

Determined to get a pennant winner, if possible, Manager Carney of the Trenton Tri-State league club, has just closed a deal whereby he becomes the owner of every player on the Steubenville P. O. M. league club of last season. The players he secured by this purchase are: Roy, McCabe, Dessau, George and Nope, pitchers; Ortleib and Murray catchers; Connor and Tamsett; infielders, and Maitland and Pleiss, outfielders. Of these players Manager Carney wants Ortleib, Murray, Dessau, McCabe, George and Pleiss, and the remainder he will have for sale or trade. The price Manager Carney paid for this lot of players has not been made public, but it is reported to be $3,500. Catchers Ortleib and Murray are regarded as particular finds.

Drill to Manage Terre Haute.

Louis Drill, the catcher, has been secured to manage the Terre Haute club of the Central league for the coming season. Drill played with Pueblo last season, through an arrangement with the Minneapolis club, to which he belonged. He has played on the Washington and Detroit American league teams.

BIG BILLIARD MATCHES WILL BE PLAYED SOON

Hoppe to Meet Both Sutton and Schaefer for Championship Now Held by Those Men.

Willie Hoppe's challenge for both the 18.1 and 18.2 world's championship balkline emblems has stirred billiard circles. Coming together with two big matches on the tapis the conditions for Hoppe will somewhat handicap him. The return of the young player will result in a busy billiard season. Under the conditions governing the trophies the challenger has 60 days in which to accept or forfeit. To play two matches at very distinct kind of billiards within a week will be a severe test of Hoppe's skill. He will be required to change his style from 18.1 to 18.2 within a few days, while his opponent will have the advantage of special preparation at the different styles of game.

Hoppe brought the 18.1 title to America two years ago by crossing the Atlantic and beating Maurice Vignaux. He was also directly responsible for the revival of big billiard matches in New York. When he decided to forfeit his title last year Sutton and Schaefer won the honors, and the former champion believes he can recover not only the 18.1 championship but also the 18.2 title.

While the professional contests will occupy the center of the stage for some time, the International Amateur tournament promises to furnish some keen sport. The return of Wilson P. Foss to the game and his probable entry in the tournament will materially improve the chances of the United States. Should Foss decide not to compete in the international events he will meet Lucien Rerolle, the French champion, in one or more games at 18.2 balkline. Foss, when defeated by Rerolle in Paris four years ago, was not in condition. He had been in France less than a week. He refused to consent to a postponement of the match and was beaten by a narrow margin by the Frenchman after leading at every 100 points up to the final century, when he fell down badly in his playing. Rerolle passed him and won out.

The French amateur champion is a sure entrant, and as the tournament is an open affair he will be compelled to play against all the American amateurs, instead of playing the best amateur in the country a series of matches for the international championship. The suggestion of holding an elimination tournament is not received with favor, but the tournament committee reserves to itself the right to reject any entry. This means that only the best players will be permitted to take part in the matches. Rerolle will enjoy one advantage, however, he will play 18.2 balkline, which is his own game. The American amateurs have always played 14.2, but they will have abundant time to become familiar with the tournament conditions.

Bezdek to Coach in Arkansas.

Hugo Bezdek, full back of the 1905 championship Maroon football team and one of the greatest gridiron players ever produced at the University of Chicago, will be director of athletics at the University of Arkansas next fall. Bezdek has signed a one-year contract to coach the football, track and baseball teams at the southern institution. He will take up his new position next September.

Daly Champion of the Cue.

John Daly of Chicago defeated Harry P. Cline of Philadelphia 50 to 42 in the third and last block of the three-cushion billiard championship tournament at St. Louis, winning from Cline the Jordan W. Lambert diamond championship emblem and a wager of $250. Daly's high run was 4, his average .684; Cline's high run was 5, his average .583.

Senator Delivers Gift to Chinaman

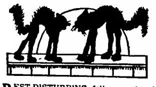
WASHINGTON. — Senator W. J. Stone the other day journeyed out to the Providence hospital, near here, where, after long search, he located the cot of a Chinaman to whom the senator presented a packet Mrs. Stone had brought from Manila. The Chinaman is L. Ah Maw, valet to Admiral Dewey, and the packet was a remembrance to Mrs. Maw from a brother. The gift was intrusted to Mrs. Stone at Manila, who promised that it should reach the proper hands in Washington.

Senator and Mrs. Stone were in Manila last fall. During their stay the Chinaman served as their particular attendant and was so zealous in his efforts to please that the Missouri senator and his wife came to like him very much. When the American party started upon their return to the United States their Chinaman confided the fact that he had a brother in Washington, and wished, as the greatest favor possible to bestow that a gift he taken to him.

Ah Mew is probably the best known Chinaman in Washington. He is permitted to reside in this country by special act of congress. He entered the service of Admiral Dewey when, as commodore, Dewey commanded the American fleet in the Orient. Ah Maw was on board when the United States squadron captured Manila. As a mark of respect to Admiral Dewey congress passed a law excepting Ah Maw from the exclusion laws.

Senator Stone first undertook, last New Year's day, to fulfill his mission of presenting the remembrance from the brother in Manila. Upon that day the Missourian thought to pay a call of respect upon the admiral and transmit the packet, also. Upon reaching the Dewey residence he found all in confusion. The heavy lace curtains in the parlor had caught fire, threatening the destruction of the house and menacing the safety of women guests who were present. Ah Maw rushed into the parlor, tore down the curtains, extinguished the fire, saved the house and possibly saved lives. But he was badly, dangerously burned. He was taken to the hospital, and the commission intrusted to Senator Stone could not be carried out until a few days ago.

Tom and Tabby Hit by Cruel Cat Law



REST-DISTURBING feline music of the midnight back fence variety will be unknown in Washington, says District Commissioner MacFarland, when congress enacts into law a bill he has had prepared.

Mr. MacFarland is president of the board of commissioners of the district and is preparing to submit to his two colleagues his bill for their approval. It exercises the taxing power to exterminate the cats of the national capital. The midnight Thomas cats are to be taxed $5 per year and the anti-race-suicide tabby cats are to be taxed $10. Cats to escape the clutches of the poundmaster must wear tags, and it is distinctly provided in the bill that the payment of tax does not permit any cat to go upon private property other than that occupied by its owner. If the author and friends of the bill have devised a means of collecting non-taxpaying cats it is kept secret. It is rumored that a fence-scaling brigade, armed with ladders and butterfly nets, will be turned loose to gather in the taxdodgers.

The crusade against cats is being led by Mr. MacFarland because of the disturbed state of mind caused him while en route home at nights by thoughtless, indiscriminating cats.

It is not thought that serious protest will be entered against the proposed law on constitutional grounds that it is class legislation and is aimed at the poor cats of the backyard variety, while the cats of the well-to-do families will be safe from prosecution, because of the protection of a home.

Congressman Has Plan to Help Farmers

REPRESENTATIVE SCOTT of Kansas, chairman of the house committee on agriculture, has conceived a novel plan which, he believes, would enable the farmers of the country to produce better and far larger crops than heretofore.

Mr. Scott's proposition involves the establishment of 100 experimental farms, of one acre each, in every county in a group of four western agricultural states for the purpose of giving the farmers a practical demonstration of the best methods of growing different crops. It is proposed that the lands for this purpose shall be provided by the farmers themselves and that they shall do the work of cultivation under the direction of the experts of the department of agriculture. No additional appropriation from congress will be required to test Mr. Scott's plan, it is explained, as the agricultural department has the requisite number of experts to carry it out.

Mr. Scott asserts that enough money is being wasted by the department in sending out farm bulletins and other government documents to carry out his idea. He says that much valuable information has been given by the experts in these publications, but their contents are so little understood by the farmers that they do not derive the knowledge from them which they should obtain as to the best methods of growing corn, wheat, hay and other crops.

God to Be Restored to Nation's Coins

THE motto "In God We Trust" will be restored to the gold coins from which it was removed by President Roosevelt's orders. The house committee on coinage, weights and measures has reported a bill providing for restoration of the motto and its permanent retention. Indications are that it will pass both houses. President Roosevelt will not veto any measure of this kind, and has so told several of his callers.

Representative James, who introduced one of the bills to restore the motto, said hundreds of letters were still coming in protesting against the abolishment of the motto.

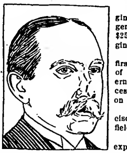
Immediately after the new gold pieces of the Saint Gaudens design were received from the Philadelphia mint early in November last year, the discovery was made that the motto "In God We Trust" had been omitted. The responsibility for the omission was placed at the door of President Roosevelt, for only through an executive order can a change be made in designs for coins. This responsibility the president readily assumed, but, when adverse criticism began to come from all quarters of the country and religious and patriotic societies took up the matter, he decided to issue a statement setting forth his reasons for the action.

In this statement the president said there was no warrant of law for the inscription. Also he said that his own feeling in the matter was due to his "very firm conviction that to put such a motto on coins, or to use it in any kindred manner, not only does no good, but does positive harm, and is in effect irreverence which comes dangerously close to sacrilege."

The president was firm that he would not order the motto to be replaced unless directed to do so by congress.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

MINING EXPERT RETIRES



John Hayes Hammand, the noted mining engineer, has severed his connection with the Guggenheim Exploration company and the salary of $250,000 attached to his position as consulting engineer.

Hammond has been in poor health and his first assistant, A. Chester Beatty, has done most of the work since Mr. Hammond went west several months ago. Mr. Beatty is the likely successor to Mr. Hammand. The latter was operated on for appendicitis a few days ago.

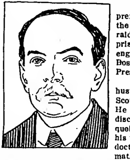
John Hayes Hammond was born in San Francisco 53 years ago. He is a graduate of the Sheffield Scientific school of Yale.

Mr. Hammond is one of the greatest mining experts in the world. Often he has taken as fees for reporting on claims shares in new companies, and always they have turned out valuable.

Hammond became an international figure when he went with Cecil Rhodes to the Transvaal and Rhodesia. When first engaged his salary was $5,000 a month and in less than a year he was getting $100,000 a year. He became consulting engineer to the Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa, including most of the richest properties in South Africa.

Hammond was one of the leaders in the proposed rush on Johannesburg, but Jameson, impatient at delay, made his raid with Hammand and others still on the evening's camp. They were sentenced to death. England interfered and on payment of $125,000 fines were freed. Hammand came to America and in less than a year was making $20,000 a month.

LED TRANSVAAL RAID



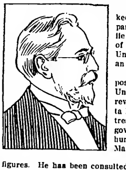
Dr. Leander Starr Jameson, in resigning the premiership of Cape Colony, revives memories of the days of old King Lobengula, the Transvaal raid, the reform movement, which led to the imprisonment of John Hays Hammand, the American engineer, and other reformers, and, finally, the Boer war, the cost of which to Great Britain, as President Kruger foretold, did "stagger humanity."

Dr. "Jim," as he was popularly known in his hustling days, is about 55 years old, was born in Scotland and educated for the medical profession. He went to South Africa in the early days of the discovery of the Kimberley mines, made the acquaintance of the late Cecil Rhodes and became his warm friend and confidant. The young Scotch doctor soon developed into a South African diplomat, went alone on a mission to King Lobengula of Matabeleland, in behalf of Mr. Rhodes' British South Africa company and persuaded the warrior chief, in exchange for a few firearms and other truck to permit the company to settle his country, exploit his gold mines, and so on. Fort Salisbury was soon established in Matabeleland, and then came the Matabele war, in which the native warriors were mowed down in thousands by rapid-fire guns.

Cecil Rhodes, who was premier of Cape Colony when Jameson started on his raid into the Transvaal, exclaimed that "Jim" had "upset the cart," and resigned the premiership, but never blamed his friend.

Dr. Jameson, on the resignation of Sir John Gordon Sprigg, the premier of Cape Colony, in February, 1904, was called upon to form a new cabinet. He has held the premiership ever since, and, in addition, has served as a director of the De Beers Diamond Mining company and of the British South Africa company.

FIGURES NATION'S DEBT



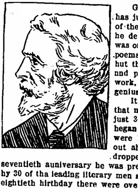
William F. MacLennan, chief of the bookkeeping and warrants division of the treasury department, is the man who keeps track of the public debt. This debt amounts to the enormous sum of $2,457,869,991, including gold certificates and United States treasury notes, which are offset by an equal amount of cash in the treasury.

While Mr. MacLennan does not actually have possession of this vast sum, every cent that the United States treasury receives from internal revenue customs and other sources is turned over to him, and the cash is sent to the United States treasurer, who is under heavy bond to secure the government against loss. Every dollar that is disbursed by the government is disposed of by Mr. MacLennan, by means of warrants.

Mr. MacLennan has a marvelous mind for figures. He has been consulted, during his 30 years of service, by Presidents Garfield, Arthur, Harrison, Cleveland and Roosevelt, and every secretary of the treasury has depended on him to a large extent. He is a native of New York and went to Washington first to take a position in the Freedmen's bureau. He began his service in the treasury as a clerk. His work soon attracted the attention of his superiors and his promotion was rapid. He practically organized his division, which is one of the best equipped bureaus of the government. His books are exhibited to-day as models of artistic penmanship, beauty and accuracy.

Mr. MacLennan is the most modest man in the employ of the government. He positively refuses to talk about his duties, his accomplishments or his home life. He lives in the fashionable northwestern district of the city, but is in no sense a society man. He is 60 years of age.

FAVORS LIMITED MARRIAGE



George Meredith, the English novelist, who has just celebrated his eightieth birthday, is one of the best examples of pertinacity. Early in life he determined to become a literary man, and he was only 23 when he published his first volume of poems. They attracted practically no attention, but the author kept on, turning out both poetry and prose until, after more than 30 years hard work, the public was forced to recognize his genius.

It was his novel "Diana of the Crossways," that made him famous. It was published in 1885, just 34 years after his first book. Then people began to read his earlier works, of which there were 14. Since then Meredith has been turning out about one book a year until 1897, when he dropped his work almost entirely. On his seventieth anniversary he was presented with a letter of appreciation signed by 30 of the leading literary men and women of the United Kingdom. On his eightieth birthday there were over 100 signatures to the letter sent him. It was in book form, handsomely bound, and the novelists, poets and scholars whose names were not attached to it did not belong to the first class. It was a tribute from his fellow workers such as is seldom paid to an author.

Meredith scandalized the world a little over three years ago by declaring in favor of limited marriage. In a sensational interview he predicted a state of society permitting marriages for certain limited periods, the state enforcing a provision of money during that period to provide for and educate children, the government possibly taking charge of this fund.

TALK OF NEW YORK

Gossip of People and Events Told in Interesting Manner.

Newport Belle Is Free to Wed Again

NEW YORK.—The divorce litigation brought by Mrs. Nathalie Schenck Collins against Charles Glen Collins, formerly of the English army, ended the other day in an order signed by Supreme Court Justice Leventritt, which makes Mrs. Collins free to resume her maiden name and to remarry.

Miss Nathalie Schenck, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Spotswood Schenck, was a Newport belle when she married Glen Collins in 1904. She met him for the first time at Georgian court, George Gould's Lakewood home, where she was attracted by his dashing play at polo. Mrs. George Gould introduced him to Miss Schenck after the game.

There was a rapid courtship. He was by repute a captain in the Cameron Highlanders. In reality he had once been a senior lieutenant in the regiment and was called captain by courtesy. By repute again he had an income of $50,000 a year and was of noble family. In reality he had an income of a few pounds a month and came from a good, but inconspicuous Scotch family.

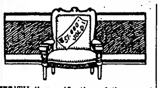
Miss Schenck was supposed by Collins to be wealthy in her own right. As a matter of fact she had no private fortune and her parents were in moderate circumstances for people in their social position.

She and Collins were married at Monterey, Cal., in the spring of 1904. They started on a honeymoon trip around the world. They sailed from San Francisco with a retinue of servants, a string of polo ponies and a formidable load of baggage.

Honolulu, the first port of call, was the terminal point of the honeymoon. Their funds ran out, they discharged the servants, sold the polo ponies and returned to America, it was said at the time, by pawning some of the bride's jewels.

After a short stay here they went to France together, but soon separated, Mrs. Collins returned to her parents. Collins was declared a bankrupt and left the English army. It was reported last fall that he had gone to work as a potter in the works of the Grusby Faience Pottery company of South Boston.

Gateses Withdraw from Wall Street



WITH the verification of the report that Charles G. Gates had sold his seat on the stock exchange there is chronicled the last element in the withdrawal of the Gateses from active personal participation in the affairs of Wall street.

Mr. Gates sold his seat for $51,000, which marks another new level drop in the price of seats, the last previous sale having been at $59,000. Mr. Gates sold his seat for the same amount at which, in 1901, he had purchased it. Since then seats on the exchange have sold as high as $95,000. When the firm of C. G. Gates & Co. was dissolved last year the quoted price was $79,000.

This sale by Mr. Gates drops the final curtain on the stock exchange career of himself and father, John W. Gates. The firm, in which the latter was a special partner, was, previous to its dissolution, one of the largest speculative firms in Wall street, and was a powerful factor in market affairs. Its 'change transactions were very large and its personnel of customers formidable.

When father and son left for Europe after the dissolution of their firm Wall street believed their losses had run up into the millions because of the decided turn of the market against the position which they were believed to have maintained. The Gateses stated then, however, that they had not incurred the losses that were attributed to them.

Although John W. Gates was not a member of the stock exchange, he was one of the largest operators of his day. Besides the firm of C. G. Gates & Co., he was connected with several other commission houses. As for the Gates firm at the time of its dissolution, John W. Gates said that during its career it had done about eight per cent. of all the business done on the stock exchange. In addition it had done a huge volume of business on the other exchanges and in the outside market.

Bargains Offered Along Bride Line

MARTY KEESE, keeper of the city hall, is incensed at the flossy gentleman with the sandy wistaria trailing over a couple of Queen Anne shoulders and the lump of business acumen on the frontal, who is handing out to timid marriage-license applicants, in Marty's city hall, bunches of cards announcing a closing-out sale in Third avenue of baby carriages, rolling pins, potato mashers, skillets, flatirons and other woman weapons that are handy to have about the house in case of variance of viewpoint.

If he doesn't stop it he is going to get an entirely new set of artificial lumps installed forthwith that will make his business bump look like the surface of the bride's first cake.

The man with the baby carriages for sale defended his position when Marty Keese said angrily to him, "Cease, my good man, cease!" on the ground that he is really a philanthropist.

These goods, he says, are guaranteed to last for many, many years, and, what is of even more importance, so he says, baby carriages will be much higher the minute all the tunnels to Brooklyn, not to mention the new bridges, are in working order. Furthermore, the president is likely to dip into the cause of baby carriage panic at any moment. You can see yourself what will happen as soon as he issues a message on the subject.

New Yorkers Careless Regarding Wealth

HOW CARELESS
WILL YOU KINDLY SEE IF I HAVE TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS I FORGOT ABOUT

THE recent panic served to bring to light in a striking manner the carelessness of the average New Yorker in regard to his money. The largest institution in the city which was forced to close its doors after a run, and is now attempting to reorganize, is seriously hampered in its efforts to get the sanction of its depositors for the plans mapped out because there are more than 500 such depositors, with deposits of more than half a million dollars, who are lost, strayed or stolen.

When the depositors' committee began its work of securing consent for the scheme of reorganization it discovered that half a thousand depositors seemed to have forgotten all about their money. Two whose deposits were over $20,000 each were found after weeks of search and much expense, and both were surprised to discover that they had this money on deposit, since all record of it had escaped their minds. That anyone should forget a matter of $20,000 cash seems unbelievable, yet the records show that more than 500 persons have done this. In one case a now wealthy man had deposited $12,000 in 1884 and had forgotten all about it. He was therefore surprised when informed that he had nearly $25,000 standing to his credit.

Still further evidence of the New Yorker's carelessness in regard to money is given by the fact that in the care of this one institution are more than 100 accounts standing in the names of persons deceased whose families or executors have never even obtained letters of administration. In view of these figures it seems probable that many million dollars are in New York banks whose owners have forgotten about them.

Untidy Women.

If a man is asked what kind of a woman it is that he most dislikes, he will probably answer that it is the slovenly woman. Unfortunately, many women who would be horrified if their husbands came down to breakfast in an unshaved, unwashed and collarless condition, think nothing of appearing at that meal with their hair in curl-papers and clad in an unsightly tea-gown. More often than not, laziness is at the root of a woman's neglect to arrange her hair and put on a short and tidy skirt and a clean shirt-waist. Five minutes less of sleep is surely all that is necessary to enable her to make herself neat for the morning meal. Her husband would then carry away with him a pleasant and inspiriting picture of a dainty woman, instead of a slovenly, tousled creature, who, by her own carelessness and laziness, must inevitably weaken, even if she does not altogether destroy, the affection and respect of her husband. Many women think they must be dirty and untidy when doing housework—a very foolish mistake. A woman, if she has any innate refinement, says the New York Weekly, will do her work and look as neat as a new pin throughout. She will coil her hair neatly and cover it from dust with a mop-cap made of any cheap washing-material. Her short skirt and neat shirt-waist will be businesslike and allow freedom and quickness of movement. Then for doing dirty work, a garment of dark print should be slipped on, to be changed for a light one when cooking. In such a dress she will look as neat and dainty as anyone could wish, and her work will be better done, too, than if she wore soiled clothes.

From Rome comes the odd romance of a convict in the penal settlement on the island of Lampudusa, near Sicily, who has just been set free, nearly three years before his term for larceny expired, to enter into the enjoyment of the great fortune which he had inherited last spring from his aunt, besides a villa on the lake of Como and a city flat filled with costly and beautiful works of art. It was no doubt felt that it would be easy for him to be good with all the money he needed, and that he woul be better off than in jail. He promptly married a widow whom he had engaged as housekeeper and they spent their honeymoon at the convict settlement at Lampadusa. While a prisoner he had found the lack of any way of telling time a great trial, and he presented to his inte companions a handsome clock to be placed in a tower where it can be heard striking the long hours.

There is a very strict law against any British officer accepting any gift from a native prince in India. Even when a doctor may have performed some serious operation upon a rajah, who, being grateful, wishes to give—exclusive of a money fee varying from £200 to £1,000, according to the operation performed—a present of a shawl, golden cup or other similar valuable, the doctor must obtain special permission from the viceroy before he dare accept the present. If any officer accepts a gift of any value without such permission he may have to resign. This rule was made because, in the old days, when the East India company governed India, an officer's pickings and the presents, often extorted from the rajah, were worth much more to him than his salary.

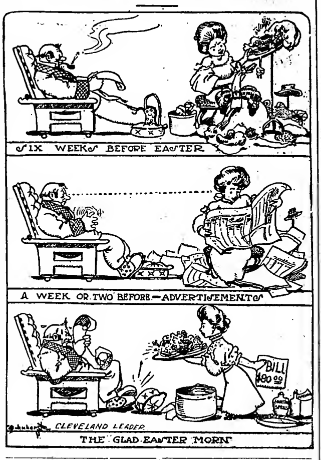
In various Mexican states the sombrero, that picturesque adjunct of the Mexican, is to be placed under a heavy tax, in hope, it is said, to abolish it entirely. It is said that this hat, often six feet wide from brim to brim, often costs so much that the average workingman spends a year's wages for it. The tax takes the form of a license, with a number affixed, and there will be thus induced an aristocracy of the peon who wears the sombrero as compared with the peon who gives it up.

The island of Celebes, nearly half of which is still almost unknown, has now been connected by cable with the neighboring island of Borneo, and also with the American island of Guam, far to the north. It has thus been brought into close touch with the rest of the world, for it is joined to all parts of the eastern hemisphere through Borneo and to the western hemisphere through Guam and San Francisco.

A farmer living within the limits of Greater New York was almost asphyxiated recently because he blew out the gas when he found it necessary to stay all night in the city. It appears that New York continues to be rather provincial.

Steel rails are going down in price, but they will have to be put up in more convenient sizes and packages before the average man will feel constrained to take some home to the loved ones.

IT WON'T BE LONG NOW UNTIL—



TWO THOMASES INDICTED

GOTHAM FINANCIERS ACCUSED OF LAW VIOLATIONS.

Special Grand Jury Returns True Bills Against Them—Plead "Not Guilty."

New York.—Edward R. Thomas and Orlando F. Thomas, who are financiers of extensive interests, were indicted Thursday on charges growing out of their management of the funds of the Provident Savings Life Assurance society, which they controlled. The indictments, which were returned by the special grand jury for New York county, that has been investigating the Provident Life and other financial institutions, are three in number, two being against Edward R. and one against Orland F. The offenses charged are violations of the state insurance laws and constitute a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of $500 or a year's imprisonment, or both, on each count. Late Thursday afternoon the Thomases were arraigned, pleaded not guilty, and were given two weeks in which to change the pleas or demur, meantime being admitted to bail. Justice Dowling fixed bail at $5,000 on each indictment. In the first indictment against E. R. Thomas he is accused of "unlawfully being pecuniarily interested as a beneficiary in a loan from an insurance company doing business in this state of which corporation he was then and there a director." This indictment deals with a loan made by Thomas from the firm of Thomas, Maclay & Co., stock brokers. SHAH AND PRESIDENT ALCORTA DODGE BOMBS.

PERSIAN EFFORT FATAL

Three of Monarch's Outriders Are Slain While Explosive Tossed at South American Fails to Accomplish End.

Teheran, Persia.—An attempt was made in this city Friday afternoon to assassinate the shah of Persia by a bomb. His majesty was not hurt. Three of the outriders who were accompanying him at the time were killed. The shah owes his escape to the precautions taken to protect him from just such an attempt as was made Friday afternoon. He was on his way to a near-by town where he intended to pass a few days. The procession had left the palace and was traversing a narrow street when two bombs were hurled down at it from the roof of a house. One exploded in the air, but the other struck the ground near the shah's automobile. This missile in exploding killed the three outriders, wounded the chauffeur and a score of bystanders and shattered the vehicle.

The shah, however, was not in his automobile. He had taken the precaution to send the motor car on ahead and ride himself in a carriage further in the rear of the procession. The motor car was a closed one, and it was thought that the sovereign was inside.

INDIAN SENATORS IN TILT.

Controversy Between Curtis and Owen Soothed by Carter.

Owen of Oklahoma insisted in tragic tones and with face showing much emotion that the five civilized tribes of Indians were dead and that he as a member of the tribe of Cherokee Indians was not under the control of the secretary of the interior. The event was rendered all the more interesting by the fact that Senator Owen was sharply engaged in controversy by Senator Charles Curtis, (Kan.) himself a Kaw Indian. It was the first time that two men with Indian blood in their veins had ever locked horns as senators in the senate chamber. Senator Carter came to the rescue and attempted to show that both senators were right.

OUR WARSHIPS GOOD AS ANY

REAR ADMIRAL CAPPS REPLIES TO MAGAZINE ARTICLE.

Chief Constructor of Navy Answers Criticisms Before Senate Naval Committee.

Washington. — Rear Admiral Washington Lee Capps, chief constructor of the navy, Wednesday before the senate committee on naval affairs replied to the magazine article written by Henry Reuterdahl in criticism of the construction of American battleships. The admiral asserted that the American ships are the equal of ships of any navy of the world. The most serious charges made, he said, were of insufficient free board, meaning height from water line to deck; insufficient gun height, and improper location of main line armor belts, and all these he explained have been the subject of the closest study and experiment for many years by naval designers of every country. Admiral Capps characterized as "exploded" the theory that if a shell penetrated the armor plate at a slight incline it would be deflected upward by the armor of the protected deck. "All efforts," he added, "should be directed toward keeping the shell out; all the armor should be put on the ship in vertical form."

"Put it all on the outside?" remarked Senator Tillman.

"Exactly, for if a shell goes through 11 inches of armor it will explode any way. The protected deck would not be a protection at all."

The admiral said the fact that in the Dreadnaught class in Great Britain, and the Delaware class in the United States, the forward free board has been made one deck higher than the previous class does not indicate that the latter was too low.

"They are just right for their type," he said. "The Delaware is made high forward because she is designed on finer lines, much longer, and for greater speed, which, of course, casts the spray higher. No increase has been made in the free board except at the bow."

He stated that during the five hours firing in the fight of the sea of Japan, the rapidity of firing from big guns of Japanese vessels was only one fourth of that maintained by the American navy during recent target practice.

Joe-Dad's Bee Tree

AN EPISODE IN WOODS AND WATER EXPLOITS

By
Ernest McGaffey
Author of Poems of Gun and Rod, Etc.

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

THE ROPE! HOLLERS I.

"Sen that," said old Joe-Dad, as he rose from the skiff and peered into the surrounding timber. "Mmm," went on the oeclect "pusher," "I reckon they's a bee-tree round here somewhere's. How'd some honey taste on them flap-jacks we're havin' at camp?"

"We've got plenty o' rope," said the "pusher," knocking the ashes out of his short-stemmed pipe, "and two good axes. We may have to build a 'smudge,' and agin mebby we won't have to."

"You must have been an interested party in some bee scrape, Joe," was my answer.

"Fur awhile, fur awhile," was the "pusher's" response. "Yes, I reckon I was about the most pizenously interested feller in a chunk o' rope that ever happened into the timber."

"Why, that sounds like a story, Joe," said I, "tell me about it."

"Well," begun Joe-Dad, it was this-a-way. I was young, an' I wuz green as to bees. I wuz the best climber next to a squirrel that ever shinned up a saplin'. I'd lived in the woods, an' yit I wuz so busy huntin' an fishin' that I'd never been huntin' fer bee trees more'n four or five times."

"So one night over comes Bob Early to the cabin, an' he's got a bee tree sighted that's plumb full o' honey to hear him tell it, an' nothin'll do but fer him an' pap to git out after it next mornin.' But the old man's got a line o' traps he's got to 'run,' an' he says fer me to go 'long 'ith Bob. So bright an' soon the next mornin' Bob an' me's pinted fur this here bee tree. Bob's got an ax, I've got an ax, an' Bob's carryin' a long rope."

"What's the rope fer, Bob," sez I.

"Jist to hang ourselves ef we miss findin' that bee tree," says Bob.

"I didn't say nothin' to that, fer I knew Bob Early was raised on bees, an' that he wasn't packin' that quoil o' rope fer fun."

"An' so perty soon we got to a clearin' down in the timber, an' Bob took a squint through the bresh, an' at last he sez, 'straight out from this here log to'rds the river.' So we starts to plough through the awfulest tangle you ever seen. Buck-bresh, blackberry briers, pieces o' swamp, old logs an' the devil's own mix-up o' wood an' water. Finally old Bob halts clost to the river, an' lookin' up at the edge uv an openin' in the woods he sez 'We've hit fer, here she is.'"

"Then I squinted up, an' there was the biggest and slickest sycamore I 'bout ever seen, no branches low down, but up about forty feet or so there wuz a turrible big dead limb stickin' out from the main trunk. An' from that dead limb you could see the bees goin' in an' comin' out, an' says Bob, 'Thar's our honey.'"

"There wuz another good-sized limb stickin' out from the tree clost to the dead one, an' finerly I ses, How're we goin' to git all this here honey? That sycamore would tough a grey squirrel to climb it. Es fer a man, he couldn't climb it no more'n he could climb a rain-bow."

"Bob never said nothin' but jist kep' figgerin' 'roun, an' then he sez, 'We'll fell that thar saplin' so'st it'll fall acrost the dead limb,' sez he, 'an' ef it don't bust her down, one o' us 'll have to climb the saplin' an' cut away the limb."

"So Bob an' me lays our axes into the saplin' an' when the saplin' is about ready to go, Bob throws the rope over one of it's limbs an' hitches to a tree close up so'st the saplin's bound to come down on the dead limb. Well, sir, down comes Mr. Saplin square across the dead limb a few feet from the big sycamore itself. But it didn't bust the limb. Some o' the bees they come out but went back agin', an' Bob an' me we jist stood an' looked."

"'It's a case o' climb,' sez he.'"

"Now bein' that I wuz nacherly the best climber in the world, I allows I'll go up. Bob sez 'Cut her off as near the butt as you kin, an' I'll sling you the rope up after the limb busts off, an' you kin tie her to the green limb you'll be standin' on, throw down your ax an' slide down the rope. I'll cut loose from the green limb with a couple o' bullets an' there you are.'"

"So I ties the ax tight to me an' up I goes. It wuzn't very hard, an' I gets up to the spot in a few minutes. Then I unties the ax an' begins choppin' on the dead limb. I hadn't got her half off when the weight o' the saplin weakens the limb an' it tears off an' falls, takin' with it the heft o' the honey, but leavin' about seven bushels o' bees at the butt o' the limb an' along on one side o' the limb where it had fetched loose from. Well, that looked all right, but in about three seconds the bees appinted a committee to investigate. Something like twelve or fifteen thousand bees wuz on this committee, an' the first thing they did to me wuz to jist sting me once for good luck. 'The rope,' hollers I, an' then I shet my mouth an' eyes fer fear the bees'd start in on me there. They cert'ny did sting me awful. I thought I'd fell off'n the limb. I wuz skeered to try to slide down the sycamore, cuz I'd a dropped forty feet an' broke my neck certain. The saplin' o' course had gone with the dead limb, an' thar I wuz forty feet up in the crotch, an' gittin' stung at the rate o' six hundred stingers a second."

"Well, Bob, he jist nacherly gits the rope untied from the saplin' as soon as he kin, an' quoils her up an' sends it across the limb so's I ketch it the first sling. But by that time I'm one big hunch o' pizen from them stings, an' partickler my head and neck. Pears like they mostly settled on my back, an' the back o' my neck, an' when I got the rope, they sort o' shifted an' commenced to sting my hands."

"Well, sir, I didn't lose any time gittin' a hitch to the limb with that rope an' when I slid down her I cert'ny perty near set fire to it I went down so tarnation quick."

"Talk about PAIN! Why I was jist the painfuliest feller in the woods. Bob grabbed me the minute I lit, an' he had a big gob o' honey in his hands. He rubbed that honey into the stings, an' I want to say right here that in two hours I wuz all right, though I wuz some sore. But the honey took the pizen out, an' after a couple o' days I wouldn't a knowed I'd a-been stung at all. But lawz-a-me, I'll never furgit settin' up thar a hundred feet from the ground, er say forty feet, an' gettin' peppered by them bees."

"An' so you see ef it hadn't a-been fer the rope we had along, I'd a had to jump an' break my neck er stuck thar till them bees had jist nacherly stung me plumb off'n the limb."

"After I'd got shet a little o' the pain, by Bob rubbin' in the honey, he sez to me, 'What do you think of a rope in raidin' a bee tree?'"

"And what did you say to that, Joe-Dad?" was my inquiry.

"I ses the next time I goes after a bee tree, I 'lowed I'd pack a ladder if they wuzn't no objections."

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

A Bold Holdup.

St. Paul.—Dick Turpin was a dashing, venturesome sort of desperado, but he was not in it with the lone highwayman who held up Batroot Bros.' saloon at Jackson and Eleventh streets.

The clock had just struck nine when Christian Batroot and eight friends were rudely interrupted by a tall gentleman whose features were concealed by a black handkerchief. He wore a heavy automobile ulster and a leather automobile cap. The most distinguishing feature of the intruder, however, was a full-grown revolver with which he emphasized his command: "Hands up!"

Mr. Batroot's friends obeyed the order promptly, but Mr. Batroot essayed to contradict, the masked one's authority to run things in his place of business. Mr. Batroot didn't get very far with his part of the sketch, however, because the robber shot at him. The bullet flew uncomfortably close to Mr. Batroot's ear, and figuring that a whole skin was worth more than an empty cash register, Mr. Batroot followed the example of the eight and elevated his hands into the smokewreathed atmosphere of the room.

Will Lecture.

Minneapolis. — Gov. Johnson has made an agreement to deliver a series of Chautauqua lectures this summer and has also made a provisional agreement with the Slayton Lyceum bureau of Chicago to deliver a series of lectures next year. The governor will prepare two lectures, the subject being "The Majesty of Law" and "Landmarks of Liberty."

Gov. Johnson said that he had received a great number of invitations to deliver lectures at different places this summer and that while he could not, on account of his official duties, accept any great number of them, he had decided to speak at a few places, making a series of not to exceed ten or a dozen lectures. In order to save the trouble of having the details of the arrangements on his hands, he had placed the matter in the hands of a lecture bureau.

He has also made a provisional agreement for the next year, although he says this is not a contract. He does not say what the provisions are, but it is presumed that the political developments next summer may be one of the deciding factors.

Insurance Profits.

St. Paul.—According to compilations made from the returns of fire insurance companies to the state insurance commissioner, the year 1907 was profitable so far as Minnesota business was concerned.

In the entire state the premiums for all kinds of fire insurance companies amounted to $7,113,690; the losses only $3,105,666. For 1906, the premiums for the state were $6,579,451, and the losses $3,638,838. In other words, during 1907, the fire insurance premiums were nearly $600,000 greater and the losses less than the year before.

In Minneapolis the premiums were $1,669,213, and the losses but $696,224. The city of Minneapolis alone paid fire insurance companies during the one year $1,000,000 more than the companies returned in the adjustment of losses. This tremendous profit in Minneapolis was also true the year before, when the premiums were but little less, $1,627,385, to losses of $472,416.

The above figures do not include the cost of doing business in the state.

Body Found.

Hamline.—The body of an unknown man, with both cheeks eaten by animals, was found in some brush at Snelling and Minneapolis avenues, one mile north of the state fair grounds. Lillie Schucht, nineteen years of age, living in the neighborhood, made the discovery. Coroner A. Miller and Dr. J. M. Finnell found it impossible to make a thorough examination of the body, which was in a frozen condition, and were unable to tell how the man came to his death. A further examination will be made of the body at the morgue, for there are some indications which might mean that the man met with foul play.

Nothing was found on the body which gave a clue as to his identity.

Later it was learned the dead man was Chris Seamons, a German laborer of St. Paul.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Cause for Alarm.

A young man had been courting a girl for nine years. "Jennie," he said, one evening, "I read the other day that in 50,000 years Niagara falls would dry up."

Jennie clutched his arm excitedly.

"Why, what's the matter?" he asked.

"Why, you promised to take me there on our bridal trip. Don't you think you had better be a little careful that it does not dry up before we get there?"

Hog Cholera.

The greatest drawback to the hog industry which breeders in this country have to contend with is what is known as "hog cholera" and "swine plague."

Hog cholera is a highly contagious disease and unless checked is liable to carry off a great number of hogs in a very short time.

Mr. A. P. Williams, of Burnetts Creek, Ind., tells of an experience which he had with some hogs that had the cholera. "Five years ago," says Mr. Williams, "I was in the employ of Mr. J. D. Richardson, Lafayette, Ind., as his barn foreman. Some fine hogs that I was feeding took the cholera. I gave them Sloan's Liniment and did not lose a hog. Some were so bad they would not drink sweet milk and I was compelled to drench them. I have tried it at every opportunity since and always find it O. K."

Sunday School Lessons for the World.

A power greater than that of kings seems to have been wielded by the little group of thoughtful men who gathered at the Fenway residence of W. N. Hartshorn to select the lessons for the Sunday schools of the world, says the Boston Herald. Every year they gather to make this choice, and when a decision has been reached the lessons are handed out to the printers and by them literally scattered over the planet. The word thus goes forth not in one but in scores of languages. Europe and Africa, east and west, north and south, get these helps to religious study in the vernacular. There is a supply for Hawaii, Japan and the islands of the sea. For India alone 40 dialects have to be provided for. Some 500,000,000 Sunday school leaflets are thus distributed every year.

OLD SURGEON

Found Coffee Caused Hands to Tremble.

The surgeon's duties require clear judgment and a steady hand. A slip or an unnecessary incision may do irreparable damage to the patient.

When he found that coffee drinking caused his hands to tremble, an Ills. surgeon conscientiously gave it up and this is his story.

"For years I was a coffee drinker until my nervous system was nearly broken down, my hands trembled so I could hardly write, and insomnia tortured me at night.

"Besides, how could I safely perform operations with unsteady hands, using knives and instruments of precision? When I saw plainly the bad effects of coffee, I decided to stop it, and three years ago I prepared some Postum, of which I had received a sample.

"The first cupful surprised me. It was mild, soothing, delicious. At this time I gave some Postum to a friend who was in a similar condition to mine, from the use of coffee.

"A few days after, I met him and he was full of praise for Postum, declaring he would never return to coffee but stick to Postum. We then ordered a full supply and within a short time my nervousness and consequent trembling, as well as insomnia, disappeared, blood circulation became normal, no dizziness nor heat flashes.

"My friend became a Postum enthusiast, his whole family using it exclusively.

"It would be the fault of the one who brewed the Postum, if it did not taste good when served.

"The best food may be spoiled if not properly made. Postum should be boiled according to directions on the pkg. Then it is all right, anyone can rely on it. It ought to become the national drink." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT,

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The Greenbush Journal has suspended publication, which will be regreted by the newspaper boys of northern Minnesota, who will miss the Journal from the X table. Editor Sanders will change location and Greenbush will be without a paper. Another case, of "not missing the water til the well goes dry."

It looks funny to us to see an editor howl harmony in the Republican party, and then spring some old petrified stiff for their candidate for governor, that has been running around with a knife in his boot leg for the past four years. Great harmony that! But it is the kind that will land a democrat in the governor chair every time.

The Ninth Congressional District Republican convention, for the election of two delegates and two alternates to represent the Ninth Congressional district at the National Convention, has been called to meet at Crookston on April 15., Red Lake county is entitled to 11 delegates in that convention, and it is the duty of the Republicans of Red Lake county to see to it that they are elected and sent to that convention, instructed for Taft.

While several of the counties south of us have started the campaign for county office, the Red Lake county boys seem to be inclined to wait until the six weeks retirement of the Ground Hog is out, before they venture out in the sunlight. Some of them may be afraid there is a cat watching them, ready to take them by the back of the neck, as soon as they stick their head above ground, and give them such a shaking up, that they will crawl back into the hole, and pull the hole in after them.

It Didn't Come Natural.

"I have heard that man tell the truth once or twice," said one Wall street man talking of another. "He can tell the truth, I admit, but it does not come natural to him. He reminds me of the Russian moujik.

"A Russian moujik sat one day in the anteroom of the military commissioner of his town. There was an anxious frown on his face. A friend approached and said:

"'What is the matter, Piotr?'

"'I am worried,' Piotr answered, 'about my son. I don't know what to say when the commissioner asks me about his age. You see, if I make him younger than he is he will be sent back to school, and if I make him out older they'll stick him in the army. What the deuce am I to do?'

"'How would it do,' said the friend thoughtfully, 'if you told the commissioner his exact age?'

"Piotr slapped his leg and laughed delightedly.

"'The very thing!' he cried. 'I never thought of that!'"

Pay of Army Officers.

When a young man becomes a cadet at West Point, he enters upon a government allowance of $600.50 a year.

On graduation the West Pointer is commissioned a second lieutenant and receives a salary of $1,400 if unmounted or $1,500 if mounted. Increases at each five year period bring the pay at the end of twenty years up to $1,960 in the one case and $2,100 in the other.

The pay of first lieutenants begins at $1,500 and $1,600; captains, $1,800 and $2,000; majors, $2,500; lieutenant colonels, $3,000; colonels, $3,500. Each officer attains a 40 per cent maximum increase in twenty years.

On the average the salary of the army officer is higher than that of the college professor, the minister or the graded civil service employee. The officer has allowances for residence and personal attendance. He may buy household supplies from a government commissary at cost.—Detroit News-Tribune.

Mr. E K Gjernes met with a searious accident on last Friday which will lay him up for some time. He was hanging up a beef which he had butchered when the rope broke and the beef fell on him searlously injuring him in the back and side. It is to be hoped he will not be laid up long as he is the president of the Highlanding Creamery Association and director of building operations.

There will be a telephone meeting at Erie tomorrow afternoon. Another chewing the rag match we suppose. As soon as the creamery and boats are running the telephone will be taken up, and the line will be built. We let others do the talking, but when Highlanding goes after a public improvement, they "get there." If you don't believe it, just take a look at our steam boat and new Creamery.

Men To Run The Boats.

The Engagements of Jean

By Zelia M. Walters

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Jean was listening to her first proposal. Was there some magic in a first proposal that impelled you to say yes when you didn't want the man at all? She closed her lips firmly to keep the yes from escaping, but that only increased a hysteric desire to hasten its utterance. Why did he say such eloquent and convincing things about life-long devotion and service and awakening a slumbering heart? She knew he was the sort of man that would let his wife pick up her own handkerchief except when there was company. Besides, she thought indignantly, her heart didn't need awakening.

"Please do not say any more, Mr. Woodward," she interrupted him. "It is quite impossible. There—there is some one else."

"But if you are not bound to him—" entreated the suitor.

"I am," said Jean instantly. She felt that it was the only loophole of escape. If it were closed that wretched hovering yes might be uttered against her will.

Mr. Woodward arose and bowed. "Of course, then there is nothing more to say. I knew Innis had been with you a great deal, but I didn't know you were engaged. I am sorry I have troubled you. Forget me," he said in melo-dramatic tones.

Jean felt as though she was congealing, but she could not collect herself sufficiently to speak, and the rejected one stalked grandly away.

But the elation of a girl with her first proposal was not for Jean. She walked up and down the deserted piazza looking at the world with tragic eyes.

"Oh! how terrible! I've let him think I'm engaged to Mr. Innes, and there isn't the remotest chance that I ever will be. Suppose he should hear of it. Oh! I dare say he will. I know some punishment will come upon me for such an enormous lie as that."

The one consolation lay in the fact that Ted Woodward was going home the next day. And perhaps no complications would arise in that time.

The next day when Jean was sitting in the window-seat reading Mr. Innes and the beautiful Miss Mariner came through the hall.

"No," she was saying as she came within Jean's hearing, "I'll not go sailing with you. Indeed, Mr. Innes, if I may speak frankly, I do not think an engaged man ought to pay so much attention to others."

Jean had a horrible moment as she looked at his astonished face.

"But my fiancee is such a reasonable girl, you know," Mr. Innes was saying with an amused air as they passed down the steps.

"I know," said Jean to herself, "that he was going to ask her to marry him. Perhaps he was going to ask her this very morning, and now she has heard that wretched story, and his life's happiness is gone forever. What a miserable end that Ted Woodward is to have told."

He's Going to Speak of It Himself.

That afternoon Jean went for a drive with Gertrude Allen thinking to drown her haunting misery in a delightful girlish confab.

"Do you know," said Gertrude as they turned into the shady elm road, "I heard the most interesting thing about that handsome Mr. Innes. His aunt, the rich one that he brought here, you know, has disinherited him. And it's just because he isn't to marry Miss Mariner. They say he is engaged to somebody, but the person that told me did not know to whom. Some quite insignificant girl though. Isn't it romantic?"

Jean leaned back while Gertrude chattered on.

"Why Jean!" she exclaimed when at length she looked at her friend, "Are you ill?"

"Yes," said Jean, "dreadfully. I think I'll have to go back. I'm sorry to spoil your drive, Gertrude."

For three days she steadily refused all Mr. Innes' invitations. They came now with sinister frequency.

In the middle of the week Mrs. Ellser whispered another important bit of news.

"I am so sorry for young Mr. Innes. It seems that he has made some foolish entanglement that is ruining his prospects. His aunt is furious because the match with Miss Mariner is off. And now Mr. Ames, who had offered him a splendid place in his office withdraws his offer because he thinks that a young man starting out in a business career ought not marry. It seems that the wretched fellow is going to marry the girl at once. I don't know who she is. His aunt thinks it is some nobody that they will have to be ashamed of."

Jean was becoming hardened to misery, and this story did not cause an attack of faintness as Gertrude's had done. "But I must tell him," said Jean to herself, despairingly. "I can't let him go on losing everything. There isn't much left but life. He's lost love and happiness and fortune and career."

When Mr Innes asked her to walk along the shore in the moonlight she assented, and started out with the cheerful feelings of one marching to execution.

"Miss Jean," said the man at length, "I've been wanting to speak to you for a week, but you have persistently avoided me."

He's going to speak of it himself, thought Jean in an agony of shame.

He walked on for a moment in silence. No doubt it was hard to begin. At length, he said abruptly, "I wanted to ask you to marry me."

"Oh! how dare you! How dare you!" cried Jean furiously. "How dare you ask me after what has happened?"

"Oh! you mean those stories about my engagement. That needn't trouble you, it isn't true."

"Don't you think I know it isn't true when it is you and I that they spoke of."

"I hoped that you hadn't heard the name of my supposed fiancee. Not many people seemed to know, though I had not heard it myself. I can't imagine how the story started. I think it must have been a case of thought transference. You see, I'd been thinking of that particular thing a great deal, and some of those amiable old ladies who sit on the hotel veranda have no thoughts of their own, so they gathered up mine which were floating about loose."

"It was I that started the story," said Jean in a hollow voice. "No, don't speak. Let me tell you about it. A man asked me to marry him, and he said such persuasive things, and wouldn't go away, and I was afraid I'd say yes though I didn't want to. So I told him there was some one else, and he thought I meant you, and I let him go away without telling him the truth. Oh! it was a disgraceful lie! I don't expect you to forgive me ever. I ought to have told you at once, but I couldn't. I was going to tell you to-night, though, and that's why I came. I'm so sorry. I only hope mother will take me home to-morrow, and you never need hear of me again."

"I don't see anything in all this that should distress you," he said. He was smiling a tender amused smile at the childish confession, though she did not look up to see it. "I wish I dared hope that your suggestion to Ted—I mean to the man you spoke of—had a willing spirit behind it. Since we've both thought of it can't you make it true, dear Jean?"

"Don't speak of it again," she said in her coldest manner. "It's just your exaggerated idea of honor that makes you think you ought to protect me. Don't deny it. You can't possibly care for me when I've ruined your life. Yes, it is ruined. You've lost the girl you love, and your fortune and your career just because of me."

I hope I'm not going to lose the girl I love," he said gravely.

"I mean the one your aunt was angry about," she said falteringly.

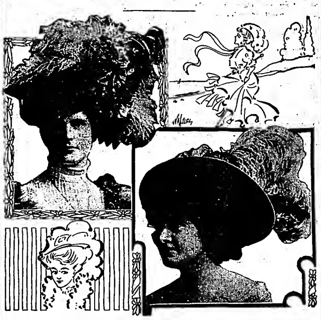
"Oh!" he said, "my aunt and I never agreed about that. You see I met you the first day we came here. And if you're troubled about Aunt Caroline's disinheriting me, pray do not give it another thought. She does that every three months. When I introduce you as that mysterious girl I shall be restored to favor. It's the truth because she has already expressed her admiration of you. But of course, I couldn't seize that golden moment to tell her that you were the girl, for I wasn't sure of it. And that fussy old Ames did say he didn't want me, but I was rather fishing for a dismissal there. I had had a much better offer a few days before. I threw the news of the engagement credited to me in his way. Now is there anything else, Jean? Don't you think you have been over conscientious? A man wouldn't spend a moment considering those things when it was a question of winning you."

"Oh!" breathed Jean, afraid to accept such unlooked for bliss as a solution from her haunting horror of the past week, "are you quite sure that you really cared for me all the time?"

"Cared for you!" he said in scorn for such an inadequate expression. And then he proceeded to explain how much he cared.

"Well," said Jean after a while, and she dimpled charmingly, "I believe I will be engaged again."

FOR GIRLISH FACES



In the two illustrations we have examples of the picturesque in millinery. These are emphatically the hats for girlhood. They are made of felt and velvet, with sweeping plumes and fluffy ostrich sprays, with flowers and foliage adding their beauty to the ensemble.

DRESS TRIMMINGS OF BRAIDS.

By Fashion's Decree, These Will Ornament Spring Costumes.

It is comforting to learn that braids, so universally practical as well as ornamental as trimmings, are to continue smart, and that binding braids, comparatively new, will be much used this coming spring for tailored costumes.

These binding braids now come in novelty patterns, and where last season they were plain or in the diamond weaves, this coming season's offerings come in colored, in striped and other effects. The cords or stripes are so arranged as to come in the center of the braids. This insures the edge applied to the cloth being as flat and smooth as possible, while the center is rendered more ornamental by the raised cords or the smooth satin strappings.

Another desirable feature of the new braids is the fact that they have the double pull edges, making it possible to adjust them to every curve and point at a garment's edge.

The soutache and radium braids will be features of the coming spring and the following autumn as well. Radiums are being manufactured extensively in Berlin, and as for soutache, it will retain if not exceed its present fashionable vogue.

A strong point in favor of soutache is that it is no more expensive and difficult to apply, as compared with other braids, being generally braided or embroidered directly on the gown or wrap, and that it can never become common, as do too many other attractive decorations.

Filet lace and embroideries will continue to be as much worn during the next few months as ever, and many new and handsome patterns are being imported for the spring season.

In many of them the net is black, with the embroidery or fine braiding done in colors.

In the silk embroideries on filet grounds there are many bands, some with serrated and many with straight edges, and fine silk braid, as well as silk floss, is used in the embroidery.

The Chinese and Japanese and other Oriental bands, in hand and also in machine made stripes and bands, are being imported, and so are the bands woven to imitate the Oriental embroideries.

New Flannel Waist.

The winter has developed a taste for simple flannel blouses. Two-thirds of the morning and school garments shown in the shops are in thin, striped flannel or sparsely patterned delaines, which fabrics have a smooth, firm, almost hard surface that takes the tailor finish exceptionally well. Also, though light in weight, these fabrics are warm and durable. They are printed or woven in all the prevailing shades, mauve, leaf green, violet and blues. The figure or stripe appears in color upon a cream, tan, ecru or mole ground and, in fancy waists, the color is further accentuated by the addition of buttons, pipings, stitched bands and braids.

For Finger Bowls.

A woman with a mild mania for things Japanese had little wicker baskets placed before each guest when finger bowls might have been expected. In each basket was a folded napkin of unmistakably Japanese material made moist, but not dripping, with perfumed water. Following the example of the host each guest seized his napkin and used it, still folded, on lips and fingers.

Chenille Trimming.

Chenille is beautiful, whether in fringes or embroideries, and is especially suited to trimming velvets and brocades. Soutache is used in embroidering nets and laces and other thinner materials, and makes a striking contrast.

The New Shades.

Blue promises to be the leading color this spring. Amsterdam blue and tapestry blue are two of the new shades. They are soft and lovely, with no suggestion of harshness in their tone.

KEEP THE HAIR ALWAYS DRY.

Moisture Frequently Found to Be Cause of Early Baldness.

"If you don't want to be baldheaded before your time," said one hair dresser, "keep your hair dry. If it gets wet accidentally be sure to dry it. Take your hair down at least once in the middle of the day and let it get dry. It is moist from perspiration, moist from the atmosphere, moist from being confined under a heavy hat. It should be dried. It will rest the roots besides.

"Many women ruin their hair with the curling iron. Yet the curling iron is all right if it is not too hot and if you keep it moving. The professional hairdresser perpetually turns the iron so that it does not rust the hair. Rust is the term applied to that peculiar reddish condition of the hair when it has been curled too often with the hot iron.

"In advising my patrons how to wash the hair I say this: Take some moderately hot water and spray the hair once a week. Use no soap. Then dry it thoroughly. Hair takes three hours to dry.

"To wash the hair with soap take a warm, pleasant morning when the sun is shining. Have the room very hot and treat the hair to its soapy bath, using water at a moderate temperature. Don't dash cold water on after a shampoo, as the sudden change breaks the hairs."

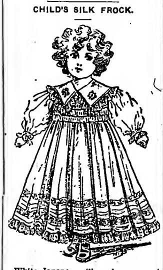
Pendants Here Again.

Numbers of pendants have come into use for dress ornament, and especially for neckwear. Those for the evening, that is, the most accessible forms—are little basket forms, jeweled and set in silver or gold. Many heavy pendants are seen in Roman designs, on which the head of some goddess is worked out in repousse, or in cameo, or the center is set with a big, heavy stone, the amethyst being much favored this year. Old and oxidized silver settings are especially fashionable in such pendants. The chains on which the latter are hung are all very light. The nearer they are to a thread the more fashionable.

The Muff Purse.

Lizard, alligator, pigskin and all the other varieties of real and imitation skins are used for the muff purse. They are usually from six to eight inches long and 3½ inches wide. They hold all that could be contained in a good-sized wrist bag, and are really much safer to carry about, both because they are less easily opened and not likely to be lost.

CHILD'S SILK FROCK.



White Japanese silk makes a smart frock for quite a little girl, and looks pretty if worn over a colored slip. The upper part is gauged to form an ampire bodice, the foot is finely tucked and trimmed with insertion and lace, the silk being cut away from the back of the insertion. The neck is finished with a wide turned-down collar made in two sections, each edged with a frill of lace, and a lace applique is sewn in each point. Materials required: Five yards silk 27 inches wide, four yards insertion, and six yards lace.

A TEMPERANCE WORKER,

Says Pe-ru-na is a Valuable Nerve and Blood Remedy.

MISS BESSIE FARRELL.

MISS BESSIE FARRELL, 1011 Third Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., is President of the Young People's Christian Temperance Association. She writes:

"Peruna is certainly a valuable nerve and blood remedy, calculated to build up the broken-down health of worn-out women. I have found by personal experience that it acts as a wonderful restorer of lost strength, assisting the stomach to assimilate and digest the food, and building up worn-out tissues. In my work I have had occasion to recommend it freely, especially to women.

"I know of nothing which is better to build up the strength of a young mother, in fact, all the ailments peculiar to women, so I am pleased to give it my hearty endorsement."

Dr. Hartman has prescribed Peruna for many thousand women, and he never fails to receive a multitude of letters like the above, thanking him for the wonderful benefits received.

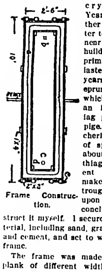
CEMENT WATERING TROUGH.

Permanent Improvement Which One Farmer Put In Himself.

Locust Grove farm, which belongs to my wife, possesses a good spring of crystal water. Years ago her father piped the water to a log trough, near the farm buildings. This primitive trough lasted for many years, but finally sprung a leak, which soon made an ideal wallowing place for the pigs. I did not cherish this sort of spot and cast about for something of a permanent character to make a water trough. I decided upon cement and concluded to construct it myself. I secured all the material, including sand, gravel, boulders and cement, and set to work upon the frame.



Frame Construction.

The frame was made of one-inch plank of different widths. The accompanying line cut gives a good idea of the method used in constructing this frame. The outside frame was ten feet long and 2½ feet wide, with the ends bolted together, as indicated in E. The ends measured four feet ten inches by 2½ feet. The length of the inside frame at the top was eight feet 7¼ inches, at the bottom eight feet 1¾ inches; the ends at the top three feet ten inches and the bottom three feet four inches. This frame was 2½ feet deep. The figure shows how the cleats are put on to hold the ends in place. I used eight one-half-inch bolts for the outside and set two by twos, so the bolts would reach.

By making the top of the crate larger than the bottom the wall at the bottom is thicker, thus making the inside wall slope out. This gives the thawing ice a chance to rise. Wedges should be used on end boards of inside crate and small nails for nailing on the cleats for the ends of the inside crate. These should be nailed just so they hold the boards in place. I used rough lumber for building the crates, but would advise the use of planed lumber instead.

After getting the material in shape be sure the tank is properly located, as it cannot be moved about when once in place as a wooden or steel tank. Place the pipes where they cannot freeze. This is very important. Level off and stake the foundation about six inches larger than outside measurements of inside crate and dig six or eight inch trench about this, deep enough to be below frost. This will leave a block of dirt. Take enough off this to leave the foundation five or six inches deep, when concrete is put on, and see that there are no soft places in it. In this trench put a layer of clean boulders and concrete, using unscreened gravel in parts of one to ten; then another layer of boulders and concrete, and so on, almost to the top of the trench, making the concrete richer of cement as the top is neared. The top should be made of concrete in the proportion of one to six or seven. After the trench has been filled concrete alone should be used, one to six, and filled to the proper height for the bottom of the tank. This should be leveled off and the crate set on this foundation.

After the space between the inside and outside crates has been divided, it is ready to fill. Mix enough concrete, one to six, to make a six-inch layer around the space. Do not use coarse gravel for this. After the concrete has been tramped down place a No. 9 galvanized wire around the space, so it will be about the center of the wall when completed, as shown at A. Secure the ends and see that the wire does not come close to the edge of the wall any place. Put in the next layer of concrete and the wire in the same way, and so on to the top. Tamp each layer well, so there will be no holes in it. Let this stand about 24 hours, then remove the inside crate, being careful not to break the wall in any place.

The outside wall should not be disturbed until the inside is finished, says the writer in Orange Judd Farmer. Plaster the inside one-fourth inch thick with sand and cement, one to three, beginning at a corner and going around the tank. Plaster the bottom next. Care must be taken in plastering the corners where the sides meet not to leave any place where it is liable to leak afterward. The bolts can then be removed from the outside and the crate taken off. The outside should be plastered, including the top of the walls. With a brush and a little pure cement and water the entire surface should be washed; this to stop any small pores in the wall. Let this stand for about 12 hours before letting in the water. If the work has been carefully done there will be no leakages and the tank will be one that will last a century and still be in good condition.

THE DAIRY BUSINESS.

Four Important Factors in Development of Industry.

It is well for the land fertility that there is much increased interest in the dairy business. There is more inquiry for good cows now than ever before. C. L. Beech mentions four important factors in this development:

First. The co-operation in the manufacture of butter and cheese. Then there is education, including the investigation of the experiment stations and the instruction contributed by the dairy press, dairy schools and dairy instructors. Third, are the results of inventive genius—the separator, the Babcock test, refrigerating cars, silo and the milking machine. Fourth, the importation and spread of pure-bred dairy cattle.

These four factors are in full swing to-day and will result in still greater development. But special advance in the near future will be along the line of more economy in production.

The man who can produce a pound of butter fat at the least cost will be the public benefactor. The dairy farm may hope to produce the dairy products at less cost by study and application of the four following problems:

First. Intelligent feeding.

Second. Kindness and regularity in the care, feeding and milking of his dairy animals.

Third. Selection of the cow.

Fourth. More intelligent breeding.

IMPROVE THE FARM DAIRIES.

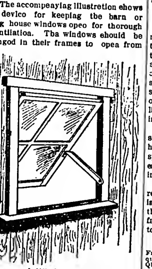
Aim of Farmer Should Always Be for Better Cows and Methods.

The farm dairies should be improved, and that, too, as rapidly as possible. There are many reasons why the farm dairy under proper management can be made more serviceable than any other means of taking care of the milk produced on the farm. When the milk can be made up into products on the farm, and when the products will bring the highest market price, the farmer that keeps cows will be in a position to take life easy. Taking all things together, says the Farmers' Review, the making of butter on the farm has less complications than in any other place. The farmer does not then have to arrange for his milk or cream to be hauled to market or go himself, to the detriment of the other work on the farm. But we have to face the fact at this time that the difference in price between farm butter and creamery butter is so great that the farmer cannot afford to make his own butter. That is the reason why the farm dairies must be improved if the farmer is going to make butter.

TO HOLD BARN WINDOWS OPEN.

Simple Device Which Makes Ventilation Easy.

The accompanying illustration shows a device for keeping the barn or hog house windows open for thorough ventilation. The windows should be hinged in their frames to open from the top. A piece of wood of the desired length may be beveled at one end and fastened to the frame on the other. This will be found an easy and effective method.



A Window Catch.

DAIRY NOTES.

Low wages and frequent changes of butter makers will ruin any creamery.

Plan on attending the state dairy convention in your state. It will do you a whole lot of good.

Do your cows like to see you come around? If so, then they like the treatment they are getting.

Cool cream immediately after separating, no matter what disposition you intend to make of it.

Make preparations to attend the Northfield convention in January if you are a Minnesota dairyman.

Don't neglect to keep the cows clean and to strain the milk, just because it is going to the creamery.

If our cows were as poor cows as their owners are dairymen the annual production per cow would be a great deal lower than it is.

It's a great deal easier to keep the cow up to her flow of milk by proper feeding than to bring her back again if the flow is allowed to drop off.

Don't feed a lot of high-priced corn to cows and expect them to return a profit. Corn is not a milk making food, and should only be used in balancing a ration.

If you have ten cows and you know five of them are scrubs, sell them and devote your attention to the five good ones. There's more money in running the business that way.

WINTER WHEAT CROP

HE REALIZED $38 PER ACRE. HIS OATS $37 PER ACRE IN SOUTHERN ALBERTA, WESTERN CANADA.

Coaldale, Alta, Can., Nov. 19, 1907.

Sir: I beg to say that this year we had 349 acres of grain, consisting of 197 acres of spring wheat and 152 acres of oats. The average yield of wheat was 38 bushels per acre and oats 74 bushels. We were offered $1.00 per bushel for wheat and 50 cents for oats, making the acre values for the two crops $38.00 and $37.00 respectively.

We also had 50 tons of hay worth $13.00 per ton, and 500 bushels of potatoes, worth 60 cents per bushel, the latter off 2½ acres of ground.

Our best yields this year were 107 acres of wheat, making 41 bushels per acre at $1. 00 per bushel, would be $41.00 per acre; 47 acres of oats, yielding 95 bushels per acre were sold for 50 cents per bushel. Proceeds, $47.00 per acre.

I might add that 50 acres of our oats were "stubbled in."

During the spring of 1906, we hired about 300 acres broken by steam. We put in and harvested 55 acres of grain last year, did the remainder of our breaking, worked up the ground and seeded this year's entire crop, put in seven acres of alfalfa and five acres of garden potatoes, trees, etc., all with one four-horse team. During harvest we hired other teams, but, aside from this, and part of the breaking, the one team did the work of raising practically 19,000 bushels of grain, worth $12,000.

Yours truly,

W. H. PAWSON, JR.

WINTER WHEAT 25 TO 30 BUSHELS TO THE ACRE IN SOUTHERN ALBERTA.

Warner, Alta, Canada, Jan. 9, 1908.

Dear Sir: This is the first year of farming in this settlement. Mr. A. L. Werner raised twenty-five hundred and fifteen bushels of fine winter wheat on one hundred acres of breaking and Tenny brothers had sixty acres that went thirty bushels per acre. The winter wheat that is in this year looks fine.

Spring wheat here went thirty bushels per acre, oats fifty to eighty, barley fifty, and flax ten to fifteen on sod.

The settlers here are all well pleased with the country. The stock have not required any feed except the grass up to this date and are all fat.

Yours truly,

F. S. LEFFINGWELL.

RESOLVED TO SNUB EVE.

Mrs. Intheswim Intended to Draw Social Line in Heaven.

The minister had dropped in to tea, and the conversation had drifted through various channels to the question of whether or not we should know each other in heaven. Presuming that our physical beings would be perpetuated, and that recognition would be assured, the minister had asked various ones at the table among whom the Biblical characters they would be most interested in recognizing.

Some mentioned one prophet and some another, but one lady, noted for her social exclusiveness, had not spoken. Turning to her the minister said: "And who would you like to meet in heaven, Mrs. Intheswim?"

Mrs. Intheswim pursed her lips. "I really don't know," she said, "but there is one thing I do know, and that is that I shouldn't care to meet Eve. In fact, I don't know that I would speak to her if I did!"

LOST TEMPER WAS COSTLY.

Poet Banker Threw Away and Bought Back His Own Property.

Edmund Clarence Stedman, the poet banker, had a high temper and was exceedingly sensitive. One day, exasperated by the crass stupidity of a servant, he threw a book at his head. The boy ducked and the book sailed out of the window. After it hurried the menial, but he was too late; a passerby had picked it up and walked off with it. Stedman began to wonder what book he had thrown away, and to his horror discovered that it was a quaint and rare little volume for which he had paid $50. His chagrin was intense, as the work was almost unique and the prospects of replacing it were remote.

Some time afterward, when browsing in a second-hand book shop, our splenetic poet banker perceived to his great delight a copy of the very book he had lost. He asked the price. "It's very rare," replied the dealer, "but as you are an old customer I'll let you have it for $40; nobody else could have it for less than $60." Stedman gladly paid the $40, got home with his treasure as soon as possible, and sat down to gloat over it. A card dropped out of the leaves. It was his own. Further examination showed that he had bought back his property. It cured him of casting books at servants' heads.—New York Press.

EXPERIENCES AFLOAT

The Funny Things One Sees in Smiling Round the World

By
MARSHALL P. WILDER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

To one accustomed only to Atlantic travel the element of novelty begins at once on a Pacific steamer. Instead of smug English stewards, neat Chinamen in spotless linen gowns of blue, long cues, immaculate white stockings, and the broadest of smiles, fly nimbly about carrying baggage or waiting on passengers with most cheerful disparity.

The Chinese stewards interested us exceedingly, and when, directly after sailing from San Francisco, we descended to luncheon, we saw them in a new way. The long tables in the saloon were laid out invitingly with massive silver and piles of fruit, around which the neat boys whisked, making an attractive picture. Here we received our first introduction to the far-famed "pidgin English," which we had previously conceived to be very largely a figment of the story-teller's brain. It was to be later impressed upon us how universal the use of it is, from San Francisco right through to Ceylon, wherever the Chinese coolie lives and moves and has his being.

In the dining saloon the boys wore long gowns of blue linen, shiny with starch, high cuffs over their sleeves, and each smooth and jetty cue finished at the end with a silk tassel, neatly tucked through a little strap at the side of the gown. This is to keep it from slipping over the shoulder when stooping over the tables.

When at hard or outdoor work, a Chinaman will twist his cue up like a woman, but never in the house, as it is a disrespectful act to appear before a superior with the cue bound up. Foreigners in many cases do not know this, and the Chinaman, who instinctively hates all foreigners, will often resort to this method of insulting them, taking a deal of comfort out of it, even though the foreigner may be in blissful ignorance of the intended disrespect.

Some of the dining saloon boys had been in the service long enough to speak and understand English very well, with others it was necessary to resort to the "pidgin" dialect which is a ridiculous hybrid of baby talk, broken, or rather mangled, English, and a few stray Chinese words.

It was my luck to draw a waiter who was particularly shy on straight English, and when I asked for a nice piece of rare roast beef, and vegetables such as my wife had, his face remained as blank as a newly whitewashed barn door. Seeing my perplexity, a kind neighbor taught me what to say, and, though feeling rather silly, I repeated: "Boy, you ketchee me number one piece roast beef, no too well done, and vegetables allee same lady have got." His face beamed with intelligence, and my order was executed with neatness and dispatch.

I subsequently discovered that if a chair was desired from the upper deck an order in plain English would not be understood. But say to him, "Boy, you go topside, ketchee my one piece chair, bring to me." He will depart cheerfully, knowing just what you mean.

My Order Was Executed with Neatness and Dispatch.

"Pidgin" is the Chinese word for "business," and a great many years ago this motley means of communication was evolved, piece by piece, as a medium through which the English-speaking traders carried on business with the Chinese. Despite the fact that numbers of Chinese, especially the merchants, speak excellent English, this absurd polyglot has held its own, and it is a benighted Chinaman, indeed, who cannot conjure up a few lame phrases. It is a means of communication, even among Chinamen, so it is said; for the different provinces of that country differ in dialect as so many countries, but with a little of the universal "pidgin" they make themselves understood.

During our entire trip across the Pacific we were never off an almost even keel. It was so different from my first ocean trip, which was across the Atlantic. I'll never forget that. I hadn't been feeling well, and was told that the sea voyage would make another man of me. Imagine making another man of me, when there was hardly enough material for one!

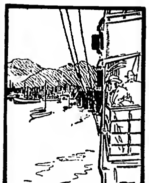
Well, the minute the ship left the dock I felt better. I threw out my chest—and a lot of other things I didn't need—and prepared to enjoy life.

By the time we got to Sandy Hook the ship was having St. Vitus dance, and most of the passengers decided to go below to unpack. I started to find my stateroom, and I think I butted into every one there was. I was finally hurled into one just as the occupant, a lady, was climbing into the upper berth. She said, "Sir!" Then the ship went the other way, and I was never so completely sat on by a lady in my life!

At last I found my own stateroom, which was a locker with a couple of shelves in it.

The ship now seemed to stand on her nose and wag her tail in the air; I deliberated whether I should close the port hole and go to my berth, or close my berth and go to the port hole. On the fourth day I began to take notice of things, and crawled out on deck just as the ship was doing a buck and wing. I was shot from one end of the ship to the other, finishing with a head-on collision with a fat man's stomach. He was mad because I butted in on his breakfast. I apologized for the intrusion, and crawled into a steamer chair.

It was so rough they had a fence built 'round the table to keep the dishes on. I was pursuing a piece of bread when the ship did a "figure eight" and the lady opposite got my bread and I got her fish. For the rest of the meal we fed each other.



Arrival at Honolulu.

The day it was roughest the passengers asked me to get up a concert. There was a prima donna on board who was having her voice cultivated in Paris. I supposed she was going over to get it, for she certainly didn't have it with her. She consented to take part in the concert, and chose a fitting selection for a rough night—"Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." Just as she started in to sing the ship side-stepped and threw her under the table. A friend of mine was accompanying her on the piano, so, of course, he had to follow her. I said: "For heaven's sake, is this a concert or a knockabout act?" The prima donna thought she was down for a solo—but she was down for an hour.

* * * * *

On the Pacific there were no such experiences for us. And it is such a great, big, lonesome ocean—only once in all the 18 days did we see a ship, a big, full-rigged ship with all sails set—but seeming to stand perfectly still, utterly becalmed, "a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

Captain Porter was a delightful raconteur and entertained us on several occasions with stories of his sojourn in the frigid zone. His tales of Esquimaux dainties, especially a duck soup, where the bird is put in for cooking not only undressed but unplucked, made us glad there were no Esquimaux cooks on board.

The evening before our expected arrival at Honolulu the chief topics of conversation were the principal sights of the town, and the best methods of seeing them.

Every one retired with the keenest anticipations, for even six days on the water create a longing to see land, proving that man, though he go down to the sea in ships, is beyond question a land animal.

Most of us were up betimes and were rewarded by the sight of a dark, low-lying island on our port bow. This is Molokai, the leper island and the scene of Father Damien's heroic life and death. This Belgian missionary priest, who started life a simple unlettered peasant, so lived and worked and died that his name will ever be one of those who need no ball of fame to make their memory immortal. His will go ringing down the halls of time as one that loved his fellow men.

Ahead, another island, with high, rocky promontory, stood out now quite plainly. As we came nearer we could distinguish fleets of little fishing boats, their white sails dotting the blue water like flocks of birds. A snowy sickle of sand outlined the black and beetling cliff, and around it came the little "Alameda," rolling and plunging in a swell that did not even disturb the stately calm of our giantess.

It was noon before we really warped to the wharf, alongside of which was a United States naval training ship, whose band welcomed us, accompanied by the shouts of the white-clad boys.

OUR COUNTRY BOYS

CHANCES THAT THEY SOMETIMES OVERLOOK.

BRAINS FOR THE BIG CITIES

Opportunities for the Rural-Born Youth to Gain Success by Making His Start in His Home Town.

There is no use in complaining because you perhaps were born on a farm and fortune destined that you must get your initial business experience in the four-corners' grocery store, or some other business establishment in the home town. The average country boy has a kind of hankering for city life, and for a chance to climb to the front. Some, however, never stop to think that if they are built of the proper material they will drift there without realizing the change. Yes, the country town is the kindergarten of success, and if you don't make a winning there you might as well make up your mind to go back to the plow.

Business men, much like poets, are born, not made, and if one has not the talents requisite for success in mercantile life, he will have a hard road to success. Business principles are the same the world over, and the little country store affords the gaining of knowledge that is necessary to the winner. The most successful merchants in the world gained their start in the country store. The greatest statesmen found their ambitions while following the plow. Then the country boy should not be sorry that he is not in the big city. The one with brains and ability in these days will win out. The country is the fertile field for the growing of brains for city use. Therein is held in reserve the energy that goes to move the world of business. Study into the lives of the great men of to-day, and you will find three-fourths of the most successful ones the product of the farm and the country town. Then, if you are a country-store clerk, be thankful, and if you use honest endeavor in time you will find that instead of you seeking the city, the city will be seeking you. Merit always finds its reward.

What you learn, learn well. Be thorough in everything you do. Better be a good grocery clerk than a poor lawyer. Better be a good plow boy than a poor clerk. Brains backed up by industry and honesty of purpose are essential to success. Hours spent in study of whatever business you may enter are hours well spent. You can never learn too much, if you only learn rightly. Ambition is one of the things that assists in working wonders. Have an aim in life, and let that aim be your loftiest ideal. Once you decide upon a worthy accomplishment never rest until you succeed. The small country store or business place gives splendid opportunity to study. It has advantages that the city store never affords. There are spare moments that can be profitably utilized. Make the best of them, and remember that a well-stored mind is great capital in business, and the talent that enables you to make the best of what you know is an important factor. Study, improve every minute; don't grumble; keep at work, and your chance will come.

D. M. CARR.

KEEP TO THE FRONT.

Energy and Progressiveness Demanded by Present Strenuous Times.

Do you hear the rumble? The noise of the wheels of the car of progress? If you are deaf to it just make up your mind to join the ranks of the nonprogressive and the failures. This is a strenuous age, and a time when to succeed in business requires work, intelligent work, and a lot of it. System is the watchword, and work, work steady and directed by brain, is what brings success. There are so many who are engaged in trade that are little equipped for it. These days, to succeed, it is necessary that every phase of the business you are in be understood. What rules to-day may undergo a change to-morrow. The man in business must be up-to-date or very likely he will soon be the loser. Keep posted on the markets, the conditions of trade in general, on the latest methods of doing business. If you do not—well, just put your name on the back-number list and drop out. The sooner the better for your own pocketbook and the welfare of your family.

Don't keep in the rear of the procession. There is plenty of room up front. Once in the rear, you may be inclined still to further lag behind and let the procession get clear out of sight. Lots of room in the front, and if you can carry the banner, all the better. Good old Step-Lively is always there, and he can bear every command, and right from the front, too. He can watch the maneuvers of the enemy and has by far the best chance of doing his duty well. The boy in the rear can only see the movements of those before him, and is pretty likely to get a stray shot from a point outside his view. If you want to succeed in life, don't get in the rear.

PLEASURES OF FARM LIFE.

Science and Invention Revolutionize Methods in Agricultural Districts.

Old-fashioned life on the farm is fast disappearing. Things have quickened some and science has wrought changes for the better. Drudgery has been obliterated through improved machinery and there is no reason why the farmer of to-day should not lead a life of comparative gentle ease. Instead of following the plow he rides the plow. The sowing of the crops and all this cultivation is done by machinery. It is no uncommon thing to find the farm house equipped with all modern conveniences known to the city folks, gas or electric lights, hot and cold water and every sanitary innovation. The telephone and the rural delivery bring the farm close to the town, and no longer need the average farmer be behind the times as to passing events. He has sufficient leisure at his home fireside to acquire a greater fund of information from the daily papers and other good literature which he receives than has the busy merchant or professional man who resides in the city.

This closer communion with the world at large has revolutionized farm life and has robbed it of many undesirable phases. No longer does the farmer feel abashed when among townspeople on account of his lack of information; rather he is proud of the fact that he is quite as up-to-date and well informed as any intelligent citizen, it matters not where he may reside. This feeling on the part of the farmer has changed his attitude towards the home town. He has come to a realization that the distance between the farm and the town has been annihilated and that his work on the farm is an important thing in the maintenance of the near-by town. He is interested in good roads, he is interested in all local improvements. These are matters of importance to him just as well as things directly relating to his farm. The farmer is beginning to realize, even more than the merchant, the relationship of the agricultural district to the home town.

It is now up to the residents of the villages and the small cities to study into conditions and to place the proper estimate upon the importance of the farmers' work in town maintenance.

HOME NEWSPAPERS.

They Bring Many Benefits to the Town and to Their Patrons.

If the average merchant would calmly study over the matter of benefits that can be brought around by the home paper, the editor would receive a more liberal advertising patronage. The country-town paper fills a peculiar field. There is no substitute for it. It is the purveyor of local news, the criterion of the degree of prosperity of the town. Week after week the editor talks to a thousand or more people of the community. He is the molder of public opinion, and his paper is not alone his own mouthpiece, but the megaphone of the whole surrounding country. People read daily papers that are published in the large cities for the large amount of current general news; the local paper is read for the little doings in the local field. Rarely does the subscription list represent dollars enough to pay running expenses. The paper must have advertising to be a success. Let it be announced a single time that there will be an auction sale of John Jones' live stock, agricultural implements and other wares, and see how many will be at the auction. This proves its value as an advertising medium. Note the most successful storekeeper in any town, and you will find he is the most liberal patron of the home paper.

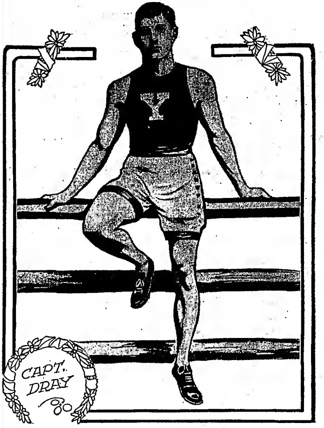
Power of Advertising.

In the progress of the mail-order system is given a wonderful illustration of the power of advertising. It is the means that all who have succeeded have employed. It is an old saying "that the hair of the dog is good for the bite." One of the surest ways for the merchants to combat the competition of these concerns which catch trade by advertising is to advertise rightly. People who buy from mail order houses would hardly pay the same prices for the goods if exposed on the counters of the home store. If the big houses sold goods at the low prices which they claim, their profits would not run up into the millions yearly. The rural delivery can be made to serve the local dealer as well as the far-off catalogue house. The merchant should not be afraid to do a little advertising; yes, a good lot of advertising, for if it is done rightly it will bring a greater percentage of profit than money invested in any other way in business. Perhaps there are 400 or 500 farmers in the territory of a certain town. For a few dollars the home printer will print sufficient circulars to reach them all. It will cost one cent each to mail them. Place an advertisement in your home paper. Merchants in different lines in the same town can get up a joint circular, and thus save some on printing and postage. This plan can be nicely carried out if merchants all pull together.

Stand by Your Home Place.

Stick up for home industry. If there is a good food product, a household necessity, boots or shoes, clothing of any kind, anything along the line of manufacture made in your city or town, sell it, use it; it means keeping money at home, and helping along the employment of home labor. Make a resolution to stand by home trade, home industry and home protection, and thus build up your town and enable its manufacturers to get out a better product.

A FIRST-CLASS ATHLETE



Capt. Dray of the Yale Relay Team.

HOLDER OF SKATING TITLE FOR 15 YEARS IS BEATEN

Tebbit, British Amateur Champion at Mile and Half, Loses to Dix in Remarkable Race.

The mile and a half amateur skating championship of England was decided recently at Lingay Fen, near Cambridge, and the race this year was remarkable, for it saw the downfall of Albert E. Tebbit, who had held the title for 15 years. The race was skated with three turns, an arrangement which was decidedly unfavorable to fast time, so the figures accomplished, both in the trial heats and final, were such as would be considered miserably slow in this country.

Tebbit's most dangerous opponent was F. W. Dix of Raunds, Northampton, who had won the King's cup for the mile earlier this season. As Tebbit had not started in the mile there was great curiosity to see how Dix would rate with the title holder. Only two men started in each heat, and Dix won his by 120 yards from C. F. Morley of Cambridge in 4:37, and Tebbit accounted for his heat by 200 yards from H. Searle, the time being 4:52. Hudson of Northampton won his heat in 4:49, and the four who qualified for the final were Dix, Tebbit, Hudson and Morley.

Tebbit was paired with Morley, and the old champion won in 4:40. Dix was paired with Hudson, and the former won by six yards in 4:37 2-5, and these figures secured him the championship, beating Tebbit, who was third, by two and two-fifths seconds. It was remarkable that Dix was second to Tebbit in 1905, when exactly the same margin separated them. Hudson's time was 4:38, and second place was awarded to him.

The mile and a half professional championship was skated a day later on the same course, when it was said the ice was not so good. Three old champions were included in the starters—Fred Ward of Walpole, holder of the title in 1900 and 1905; Joseph Bates of Lehigh, Lancashire, the winner of 1902, and Walter Housden, the amateur champion of 1891. The trio made a bold bid for success, but had to give way to a young man; S. Greenhall of Landbeach, near Cambridge, who was making his first attempt for the belt. He showed the best form by long odds, and finally won, his best time being 4:18 1-5. Housden was second, Bates third and Ward fourth.

Under the auspices of the National Skating association a series of speed tests took place at Lingay Fen which the ice was keen. F. W. Dix, the new champion, made an attack on the mile record with three turns. His time was 3:12, which wipes away all previous marks under the conditions, and for which feat a gold medal was presented to him. C. F. Morley of Cambridge also tried the time test, and he did the mile in 3:19 3-5, for which he received a gold badge.

After a lapse of several years the Baker cup was skated for about a couple of weeks ago. It is 220 yards, and was won by G. Page of Tottenham in 0:22 2-5. R. A. Bell of Putney was second in 0:25.

Men Chosen for Cable Chess Play.

Five members of the American chess sextet to play in the cable match with Oxford and Cambridge on March 21 were picked at a meeting of the cable match committee representing Harvard, Yale, Columbia and Princeton. The players selected are: W. H. Hughes, formerly of the University of Pennsylvania; L. J. Wolff, Columbia; H. T. Black, Cornell; H. Blumberg, Columbia; K. S. Johnson, Harvard. To determine the sixth member of the team a match will be played between C. E. Jefferson, Yale, and L. Williams, Princeton.

WONDERFUL RECORD MADE BY A YOUNG PITCHER

For Two Weeks Moore of Peoria Team Twirled Three Games Requiring Fifty-Five Innings.

Paul Moore, a member of the pitching staff of the Peoria team of the Three-Eye league, holds the world's record for pitching extra-inning games. Inside of two weeks Moore pitched three extra-inning games that required 55 innings of play.

The first game of Moore's wonderful pitching feat was a 22-inning victory over Clinton on July 25. He followed this up with another 15-inning victory over Clinton and then lost an 18-inning affair to Cedar Rapids.

The queer thing that happened to Moore was in the 22-inning game with Clinton. In the seventh inning of that game one of the Clinton batters drove a fierce liner straight at him. He was half turned around, and not having time to throw up his hands to stop the ball he dodged, and the ball struck him on the muscle of his right arm at the back just below the shoulder. He picked up the ball and threw out the runner, but the arm was numb from the force of the blow. Between innings he rubbed the arm and went back into the box.

As he pitched the ball first in the next inning he saw something was wrong. He had attempted to pitch a fast curve and the ball broke down and in with great speed. He tried a straight ball, and to his surprise it jumped and then broke in. His speed was unimpaired, but he almost drove the catcher insane during the inning, "crossing" him on every pitch, almost. He was puzzled because the ball acted in such a freakish way, but he could not understand it. The next inning he began to make the ball obey him, and in the following one he had perfect control of it.

The only way in which he could explain the queer actions of the ball was that the muscle at the back of his arm contracted and he lost any power to direct its action.

In the 22-inning game Moore was touched up for 16 hits, but kept them widely scattered. His team got only ten hits off Stnuffer. In the 18-inning affair Moore lost, although he allowed only eight hits, errors giving Cedar Rapids the winning run.

NEARLY LOSES STAR CATCHER.

Jennings Has Sorry Time Experimenting with Jimmy Archer.

The story of how Detroit nearly lost a star catcher has never been told. Little Jimmy Archer, now looked upon as the best man in the business when it comes to a snap throw, didn't look any too good when he was down south last spring. He threw in such a peculiar way that Jennings was worried and tried to break him of the habit.

"You don't take any step," he told Archer.

Jimmy had just started training, and of course wasn't in shape to throw at his best. Jennings thought it was in the way he crouched. He would be right under the bat and take the ball in that manner. Then he would throw without steadying his body in any way, with his knees still doubled under him.

Jimmy tried taking the step; then he lost his stride. Finally he went to Hughie, completely discouraged.

"I can't throw that way," he said. "I always throw without moving my feet. It's the only way to throw. If you get set you lose time. As soon as the soreness leaves my arm you'll see it shoot down there."

Jennings told him to keep his own stride, to go back to it and keep at it. "Jeems" happily went back to his peculiar crouch, and in a few days he had the bag gauged perfectly. Next year it is expected he will be a star.

THE SUNBEAM.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

VOL. VII. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 13, 1908. NO. 50.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Railroad Earnings.

St. Paul—The gross earnings taxes of all of the railroads operating in Minnesota during 1907 aggregate $3,575,557.84, an increase of $165,676.71 over the gross earnings taxes paid for 1906. The combined gross earnings of all the roads in 1907 was $88,888,946, an increase of $4,137,098.14 over 1906, when the gross earnings were $81,751,847.86.

That the increase in the gross earnings taxes in 1907 over 1906 was not so great as the increase in 1906 over 1905 is accounted for by the fact that during the last half of 1907 the 2-cent passenger fare and a reduced schedule of merchandise freight rates were in effect. The financial flurry of last fall also had the effect of reducing somewhat the volume of business. The gain of $165,676.71, under all of the circumstances, is considered a strong indication of the prosperous condition of the state generally.

In the amount of taxes paid, the Great Northern heads the list with $918,115.88, followed by the Northern Pacific with $577,462.53, the Duluth, Missabe & Northern with $477,210.49, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul with $395,768.20 and the Duluth & Iron Range with $321,908.81.

Republican Conventions.

St. Paul—William H. Taft, secretary of war, was endorsed for the Republican nomination for the presidency, by the Minnesota Republican State Central committee which met here.

The committee named the dates of the two conventions to select delegates to the national convention and to nominate candidates for state offices. It also fixed the apportionment of delegates. April 16 was fixed as the date of the convention to select delegates to the national convention and Minneapolis was chosen as the place of holding. April 9 was set as the date for holding the county convention to name delegates to this state convention.

After considerable debate, July 1 was decided upon as the date of the convention to nominate candidates for state offices and the county conventions to select delegates to this convention will be held Thursday, June 25. St. Paul was selected as the convention city.

School Apportionment.

St. Paul—The public schools of the state will soon receive their shares of $712,667.20, the amount of the March state school apportionment. This is at the rate of $1.90 a pupil, the largest apportionment ever made in March. In making up the enrollment list only those pupils who attended school for at least forty days during the last school year are considered.

The apportionment is made on the basis of an enrollment of 375,088 pupils, the total in March, 1907, being 378,251, the smaller number this year being responsible for the higher rate per pupil. Last March $605,057.73 was distributed at the rate of $1.60. The rate in March, 1906, was $1.70, which was the highest ever made until this year for the March apportionment. The October apportionments run considerably higher, that of October, 1907, having been $2.50.

Nine New Companies.

St. Paul—Adjt. Gen. F. B. Wood has selected the towns in which the nine new companies of the Minnesota national guard will be organized, this number of additional companies being required to bring the militia up to the standard of the Dick law and to secure the largest possible federal aid for its maintenance.

The new companies will be located at St. Peter, Madison, Bemidji, Thief River Falls, Redwood Falls, Duluth, Eveleth, St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The St. Peter company, which will be known as Company K of the Second regiment, was mustered into the service Feb. 28th.

Assessments Must Stand.

Minneapolis—The fact that property is generally assessed at one-half of its true value in this state is not a sufficient ground for disturbing an assessment which does not exceed the fair value of the property, even though the assessor's valuation has been increased both by the city and the state board of equalization. A decision to this effect was handed down in the supreme court yesterday in the case of the state against the Cudahy Packing company. The opinion was written by Justice Jaggard.

Turner, in a new play of mystery and romance entitled "His Terrible Secret," or "The Man Monkey," the story of which is said to be as startling as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and as appealing as "Ingomar."

St. Paul—Governor Johnson recently appointed ex-Governor John Lind and President Cyrus Northrop of the state university as delegates to the conference which will meet in Washington on May 14, 15 and 16 at the invitation of President Roosevelt to consider questions pertaining to the conservation of the natural resources of the country.

The revenue fund shows a balance of $1,490,319.06, whereas on Jan. 31 it showed an overdraft of $487,024.32. The improved condition of the state's finances is due to the fact that the railroads paid their gross earnings tax during February.

St. Paul—The conversion of the following banks from private to state banks was authorized by Public Examiner Anton Schaefer: First State Bank of Gary with a capital of $10,000, William H. Matthews president and D. C. Jones cashier; the Ellason State Bank of Montevideo with a capital of $10,000, G. Ellason president, and A. O. Ellason, cashier.

Crookston—Drainage operations in northern Minnesota will be started considerably earlier this year than ever before, according to big contractors who have many projects under way in this section of the state. The reason for this is that the winter has been so mild that the frost is not nearly so deep this year as it generally is, and that it will have opened up by May 15.

Duluth—Charles Johnson, a water tender at the plant of the Zenith Furnace company, was shot by some unknown person late at night with murderous intent and probably fatal results. He walked to the rear of the engine room about 11:30 to shut a door which was standing wide open, and while there peered into the darkness. A man leaped toward him and fired a revolver at him, the bullet lodging in the groin.

AFTER THE ROOF COLLAPSED.

Drawing Made from Photograph of Collinwood, O., School, Where Over 160 Pupils Lost Their Lives.

AWFUL SCHOOL HOLOCAUST NEAR CLEVELAND KILLS 167

Building Housing Elementary Pupils in the Suburb of Collinwood, O., Burns, Bringing Death to Children.

Cleveland, O.—Penned and held in narrow hallways, jammed up against doors that only opened inward, 167 children in the suburb of North Collinwood Wednesday were killed by fire, by smoke, and beneath the grinding heels of their panic-stricken playmates.

The awful tragedy occurred in the public school of North Collinwood, ten miles east of this city. One hundred and sixty-five corpses were in the morgue at Collinwood Thursday, six children were unaccounted for, and all the hospitals and houses for two miles around contained numbers of children, some fatally, and many less seriously injured. All of the victims were between the ages of six and fifteen years. The school contained between 310 and 325 pupils, and of this entire number only about 80 are known to have left the building unhurt.

Fire Drill is Forgotten.

The school building was supposed to be practically modern, although erected three or four years ago. The school children had been given fire drills, and were supposed to be in training for just such an emergency. When the crucial moment arrived the drill was forgotten and not the slightest effort to effect an orderly or prompt escape availed.

Victims Practically Incinerated.

As soon as firemen and volunteers could get close enough, attempts were made to pluck bodies from the death heaps at the doors. It was found that the flames had practically incinerated the bodies. Firemen with rakes, forks and shovels turned up blackened bones, little blackened skulls and masses of charred flesh, but bodies recognizable as such were no longer to be found. A fearful stench added to the horror of the scene.

Miss Anna Moran, the principal of the school, who escaped, says that the children made a mad rush for the door as soon as the alarm of fire was sounded, but were driven back by the choking smoke. Later the flames prevented the escape of many of them from the burning building.

County Coroner Burke immediately after the fire said:

"The construction of the schoolhouse was an outrage. The hallways were narrow and there was practically but one mode of exit. The children were caught like rats in a trap."

Terrible Scenes Enacted.

Fearful scenes were enacted around the burning schoolhouse. Fathers and mothers raved, cursed or prayed. Many tried to break through the crowd and some got so far as to dash toward the flaming doorways. One big man in overalls and jumper was restrained by force. Explaining in broken English that his "kinder" were in the building he struggled desperately with the three men who held him. Finally they threw him to the ground and sat on him, forcing his great form down in the ankle-deep mud.

The building was completely destroyed, only the outside brick walls remaining standing. The floors and roof fell into the interior early in the fire, making the rescue of intact bodies absolutely hopeless.

Dead Laid to Rest.

Cleveland, O.—Collinwood Friday came to a full realization of her woe.

Slowly and solemnly the processions of death began to wend their way towards the cemeteries, bearing the battered and charred remains of some of the 167 children whose lives were snuffed out in Wednesday morning's catastrophe in the Lakeview school. All day there was no cessation in the funeral corteges. Those who had no dead to mourn as a personal loss stood in the streets with bared heads as the grim processions passed. There was scarcely a dry eye in Collinwood. One of the sad funerals was that of the three children of Janitor Hirter, held jointly with the services for three other little ones.

Janitor is Made Target.

Mutterings against the janitor could be heard about the village as half-crazed parents sought an object upon which to wreak vengeance, forgetting as they did that Hirter himself was walking with bowed head and broken heart behind the biers of three of his beloved. A detail of police was placed about the Hirter home when the hour for the funeral came. Fully 500 persons had gathered, but when the coffins were carried to the doorway the crowd spread and opened the way for them without protest or expression of hostility.

Altogether there were 50 burials Friday, and Saturday the gruesome task was repeated. Sunday will witness the last of the individual burials, and on Monday the remains of all those who are unidentified will be laid to rest with one funeral. Friday night there were 28 of these bundles of flesh that awaited claimants.

Fire Testimony Heard.

Testimony describing the mad rush to death of the school children was given Friday at the continued session of the coroner's inquest. Stories of heroism on the part of the women teachers were recited. F. P. Whitney, superintendent of the Collinwood schools, stated his belief to be that no fire department could have done any effective work after the fire had started. Two of the teachers told of their unavailing attempts to open one of the double doors at the rear, which they said was locked. The inquest also developed the fact that, after the first crush at the door, it was beyond human possibility to aid or save those whom the tongues of fire were devouring in the charnel house. The inquest will be resumed Monday.

Partitions Cause Great Loss.

In a statement Friday, Chief Wallace of the Cleveland fire department, after an examination of the ruins of the Collinwood school, said it was his opinion that the loss of life would not have been so great had there been no partitions at the sides of the storm doors at the rear entrance.

Scores American Milk.

Washington.—Surgeon General Walter Wyman of the public health service submitted to Secretary Cortelyou Wednesday a "report on milk in its relation to public health." The report is the result of an investigation ordered by President Roosevelt and conducted by federal experts. It declares much of the country's milk is impure.

U. S. Soldier Gets Raise.

Washington.—The army pay bill was passed by the senate Friday. The bill provides for army officers a graded increase of pay ranging from five per cent. for lieutenant generals to 25 per cent. for junior officers. It also provides that "the average pay of enlisted men of the army as now established is 40 per cent."

DEMOCRATS NAME JOHN A. JOHNSON

MINNESOTA STATE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE NAMES HIM FOR PRESIDENCY.

He is Endorsed by a Vote of 68 to 23 After a Very Interesting Contest—The Bryan Adherents Show Considerable Strength.

St. Paul, March 7.—Resolutions endorsing Gov. Johnson for the Democratic nomination for president were adopted by the Democratic state central committee yesterday afternoon by a vote of 23 to 68, just a two-thirds vote of the entire membership of the committee which is 102.

The governor took no action and did not appear himself. The matter was managed and arranged by Secretary Frank A. Day and other close political friends, and necessarily carries the governor's acquiescence.

It was an interesting battle, for both sides contested every point, both sides being determined to make as good a showing as possible. It began with a fight on the proxies presented by men on both sides and continued, when the resolutions were presented, with an eloquent and earnest debate, which lasted two hours, and ended with a roll call, in which the Bryan men lost out, 68 to 23. All in all, is was one of the most interesting and best attended meetings a state central committee has ever held in this state.

GOV. JOHN A. JOHNSON.

That the Bryan men were able to muster twenty-three votes was really more than the Johnson men expected. They did not look for more than ten or a dozen. Several of them were votes of men who had proxies of members, though most of the proxies voted as the men they represented would have voted.

Neither side at any time had any doubt as to the result. It was only a fight to show the outside world whether Johnson or Bryan had most friends in Minnesota. Both sides had worked hard to get as many of their men present as possible, and there were few of the members who were not represented. Every question presented, almost, was decided by the same vote.

St. Paul won out over Minneapolis in the fight for the state convention, the Bryan men favoring Minneapolis. The date, May 14, was fixed by a unanimous vote, but the apportionment was fixed by the divided vote.

The resolution is as follows:

Gov. John A. Johnson has twice brought victory to the democracy of Minnesota. During his incumbency of the office of governor more reform has been instituted and more remedial legislation adopted than before in the history of our state.

Confidently believing that his nomination as candidate of the party for the presidency, will bring to our support the electoral votes of the states in the Mississippi valley and thus secure a national triumph, we respectfully present to the democracy of the nation the name of John A. Johnson as candidate for presidency of the United States, and recommend to the Democrats of Minnesota that they cause his name to be presented to national convention at Denver for nomination.

The committee ruled out James Manahan who held the proxy of A. B. Clair of Grand Rapids. Mr. Manahan is recognized as Bryan's personal representative.

WHAT WINTER WHEAT IS DOING FOR SOUTHERN ALBERTA.

Splendid Crops on the Former Ranching Plains of Canadian West.

That portion of the country in Western Canada formerly recognized as ranching country has developed into one of the best winter wheat districts in the continent. Yields are quoted running from 30 to 60 bushels to the acre, and giving a return to the farmer of from $25 to $50 per acre. These lands are now selling at from $12 to $20 per acre, and pay well at that figure. H. Howes of Magrath, Alberta, Western Canada, had 50 acres of land in wheat, which averaged 45 bushels to the acre; his yield of oats was 35 bushels. The value to him per acre of wheat was $35.00. J. F. Haycock of the same piece, says: "I had 65 acres of wheat, 35 acres of oats and four acres of barley. My average yield of oats to the acre was 80 bushels; wheat—winter—60 bushels and red fyfe, 33 bushels, and barley, 50 bushels. The value to me per acre was, wheat, $28.00; oats, $32.00, and barley, $24.00." J. F. Bradshaw of Magrath, had 1,030 acres of wheat in crop that averaged 39½ bushels to the acre, his oats, 32 bushels; barley 53 bushels. He threshed 31,000 bushels of wheat from 540 acres. He also had 250 tons of sugar beets from 25 acres worth $5.62½ per ton. W. S. Sherod, of Lethbridge, says: "I came to Lethbridge from Souris, North Dakota, in April, 1907, having purchased 900 acres of land in this district last fall. I had 128 acres of Alberta Red winter wheat which was put in on breaking in the fall of 1906, which yielded 41½ bushels to the acre, for which I received 87½ cents per bushel, which paid me $36.30 per acre. I had 190 acres "stubbled in" that is disced in on the stubble, which yielded 22 bushels to the acre at 87½ cents per bushel, which paid me $19.25 to the acre. I also had 350 acres of strictly volunteer crop, which it was intended to prepare in the summer; but when it was seen that it was a good looking crop, it was allowed to go. From this we threshed 15 bushels to the acre, which paid us at the rate of 87½ cents per bushel or $13.12 per acre. Our total crop yielded us 14,742 bushels of first-class wheat. Taking it as a whole, I consider that I had a first-class crop all through; and, taking into consideration the fact of part of the crop having been "stubbled in," and part strictly volunteer (which was never touched at all until the binder was put into it), I consider I had a heavy crop. I might say that I was in North Dakota five years, and I never grew as heavy a crop during that time. This is the 25th day of November, and my teams are still ploughing, and, from the appearance of the weather, will be for some time yet." R. W. Bradshaw of Magrath says: "I had this year 400 acres in crop, viz.: 200 acres of wheat and 200 acres in oats. My average yield of oats to the acre was 50 bushels, and wheat, 22½ bushels. The value to me per acre for wheat was $19.00, and oats, $17.00. The highest price obtained by me this year or offered me for my grain was for wheat 82 cents per bushel, and $1.05 per hundred for oats. I also had 100 tons of hay worth $12.00 per ton, and will say my wheat was all volunteer this year. Lots of wheat is averaging from 50 to 60 bushels per acre on summer fallow, and on new breaking, when the breaking was done early in the spring." Writing from Spring Coulee, Alberta, W. L. Thompson says: "I had this year 3,000 acres in crop, viz.: 2,000 acres of wheat and 1,000 acres of oats. My average yield of oats to the acre was 30 bushels and of wheat 35 bushels. The value to me per acre for wheat was $27.00 and for oats $15.00."

It looks as if there was not much prospect for Fosston and McIntosh to agree on county division this year, as they are in a fight about their high school basket ball teams. Up this way we let off the surplus county seat removal steam by "scraping" about automobiles, dogs, and sometimes county officials.

Ever hear how the catalogue houses do business, even if you call at their place of business? For all the satisfaction you can get there you might just as well order by mail. They do not allow you to look at the goods but give you a catalogue and tell you to select what you wish. Even they do not allow you to take the goods with you, but send them after you by freight, or express as the case may be. Nice way of doing business is it not? Your local merchant allows you to inspect what you buy thoroughly, so why not give him the benefit of your money and keep it where it belongs. You get just as much for your money and the only difference there is you get better value by patronizing home trade.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Legends of St. Patrick

A good deal of scholarly research has recently been given to St. Patrick by both British and German authorities, and it is now admitted that the chief documents concerning him are genuine, and that he really lived and carried on in Ireland a work such as has been attributed to him by tradition. Lately a new biography giving St. Patrick an unquestioned place in history has been published by Prof. Bury of King's college, Cambridge.

Three men of Patrick's own time bore the same name and have survived in records. This has confused scholars who paid no attention to the myths. One was an earlier bishop of Ireland named Patraic. Another person named Sen Patraic, and also called "Old Patrick," is now treated as a myth by investigators. Saint Patrick's own name was a Latin pseudonym, and as he wrote it, "Patricius," means "patrician," or "gentleman," strengthening the former belief that he was traditional, or the personification of a class in ancient Irish affairs.

That Patrick really lived is now beyond dispute. The important facts about him, indeed, are in his own writing, or at least exist as later manuscript copies of documents he penned himself. There are two of these. The more informative is his "Confession," written when he was an old man, and the other his "Letter to Coroticus," written against a British chieftain who had carried off some Irish converts as slaves. Scholars who formerly doubted the genuineness of the confession have since admitted its authenticity, and Prof. Bury demonstrates that it could hardly be a forgery because the text, on critical examination by the most searching modern methods, is consistent in every detail, while the strong personal feeling displayed is the highest proof of all that it is a genuine document. And the letter is identical in style. There are also many other documents of Patrick's time or later, from which a compact body of genuine information has been sifted.

The legends that have grown up around him are much more beautiful than ascertained fact surviving in the old manuscripts. Under a heathen religion, Ireland's priests were the powerful Druids, priests and magicians who had supernatural lore and innocent secular learning, together with skill in poetry and knowledge of the laws and history of the island. They were naturally opposed to a new creed that would abolish their power. Yet it is conjectured that their opposition to Patrick was not great, because they had little organization. And Patrick very wisely engrafted Christianity onto old pagan beliefs. The Irish believed in demons. So did the Christian church of that day, and Patrick carried with him exorcists whose special function was to deal with demons. Patrick believed as firmly in the evil powers the Druids fought as they themselves. So both met on common grounds. His aim was to show, not that they were wrong, but that his belief and his God were more potent than theirs.

This is the fact of the matter. But the legends tell a more interesting story, and myths though they are, their beauty is compelling.

Two maidens, daughters of the high king, lived at Crochan to be educated by the Druids. They went one day to a fountain to draw water and found Patrick and his companions sitting there. They questioned him, thinking him supernatural, and he converted and baptized them in the fountain. They immediately fell asleep in death and were buried near the fountain.

In these poetic old stories, woven around the saint by an imaginative people, and polished by centuries of telling, there are grains of historical fact, such as names of persons and places, records of ancient customs and other hints, that throw light on Patrick's real work. He lived 31 years in Ireland, and founded many churches, made the nation Christian as a whole and brought Ireland into connection with the Roman empire, making it a part of Christendom and civilization.

There were Christian communities before he came, but without him these might have died out. He brought material benefits as well as spiritual, for he diffused a knowledge of Latin and thus put Ireland in touch with the world's letters and arts.

JUDGING BY THE RESULTS.

Villager's Conversion Had Not Been of Great Avail.

"In our business we get many doubtful compliments," said Col. John F. Bishop, deputy surveyor of the port, the other day, "but I do not think I ever received a compliment such as my grandfather got down in my native state of Tennessee. My grandfather was a minister and I was a very small boy when we both strolled down the road one day. One of our fellow villagers came along toward us.

"'Good morning,' said the villager, who apparently had looked upon the cup. 'I-sh conver—hic—ted, person,' he stammered with difficulty. 'An' twashyou—hic—that con—hic—converted—hic—me.'

"'That must be so,' replied my grandfather, 'for it's certain the Almighty had nothing to do with your conversion.'"—New York Evening Telegram.

THREE CURES OF ECZEMA.

Woman Tells of Her Brother's Terrible Suffering—Two Babies Also Cured—Cuticura Invaluable.

"My brother had eczema three different summers. Each summer it came out between his shoulders and down his back, and he said his suffering was terrible. When it came on the third summer, he bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and gave it a faithful trial. Soon he began to feel better and he cured himself entirely of eczema with Cuticura. A lady in Indiana heard of how my daughter, Mrs. Miller, had cured her little son of terrible eczema by the Cuticura Remedies. This lady's little one had the eczema so badly that they thought they would lose it. She used Cuticura Remedies and they cured her child entirely, and the disease never came back. Mrs. Sarah E. Such a Clever Waiter.

Two gentlemen dining in a New York restaurant were surprised to find on the bill-of-fare the item, "green bluefish."

"Waiter," one asked, "what sort of fish are green bluefish?"

"Fresh—right out of the water," said the waiter, offhand.

"Nonsense," said the man. "You know well enough that they do not take bluefish at this season."

The waiter came up and looked at the disputed item.

"Oh, that, sir," he said, with an air of enlightenment, "that's a hothouse bluefish, sir."—Youth's Companion.

Not Born There.

A Washington man, whose business had brought him to New York, took a run not long ago into Connecticut, where he had lived in his childhood.

In the place where he was born he accosted a venerable old chap, of some 80 years, who proved to be the very person the Washingtonian sought to answer certain inquiries concerning the place. As the conversation proceeded the Washington man said:

"I suppose you have always lived around here?"

"Oh, no," said the native. "I was born two good miles from here."

THE DOCTOR'S GIFT.

Food Worth Its Weight in Gold.

We usually expect the doctor to put us on some kind of penance and give us bitter medicines.

A Penn. doctor brought a patient something entirely different and the results are truly interesting.

"Two years ago," writes this patient, "I was a frequent victim of acute indigestion and biliousness, being allowed to eat very few things. One day our family doctor brought me a small package, saying he had found something for me to eat, at last.

"He said it was a food called Grape-Nuts, and even as its golden color might suggest, it was worth its weight in gold. I was sick and tired, trying one thing after another to no avail, but at last consented to try this new food.

"Well! it surpassed my doctor's fondest anticipation and every day since then I have blessed the good doctor and the inventor of Grape-Nuts.

"I noticed improvement at once and in a month's time my former spells of indigestion had disappeared. In two months I felt like a new man. My brain was much clearer and keener, my body took on the vitality of youth, and this condition has continued."

A WELL MAN, AT 81.

The Interesting Experience of an Old Settler of Virginia.

Daniel S. Queen, Burrell Street, Salem, Va., says: "Years ago while lifting a heavy weight a sudden pain shot through my back and after that I was in constant misery from kidney trouble. One spell kept me in bed six weeks. My arms and legs were stiff and I was helpless as a child. The urine was discolored and though I used one remedy after another, I was not helped until I used Doan's Kidney Pills, and I was so bad then that the first box made only a slight change. To-day, however, I am a well man, at 81, and I owe my life and health to the use of Doan's Kidney Pills."

ECONOMY CARRIED TOO FAR.

Old Man's Thrift That Led Him Into Ridiculous Action.

President J. G. Schurman of Cornell was discussing elective college courses, of which in the freshman and sophomore years, he disapproves.

"A freshman of 16 or 17," said President Schurman, "is too young to choose for himself the courses best for him. His mind is not mature enough. It will make mistakes.

"In its immaturity, its proneness to error, it is like the mind of an old man in my native Freetown. He, though old, was mentally undeveloped, and saw nothing wrong or ridiculous in a piece of economy that he put in practice in the cemetery.

"The old man had lost four wives, and desired to erect for each a headstone, with an inscription commemorative of her wifely virtues.

"But inscriptions, he found, were very expensive. He economized in this way:

"He had the Christian name of each wife cut on a small stone above her grave—"Emma," "Mary," "Hester," "Edith." Under each name a hand pointed to a large stone in the center of the lot, and under each hand were the words:

"'For epitaph see large stone.'"

OLD GENTLEMAN NOT PLEASED.

Latter's Inscription Certainly the Reverse of Flattering.

In the English club at Hongkong a white-haired old gentleman, who had come down from some northern port, was seated at dinner when he suddenly became very excited. He had been brought a letter by a solemn-faced Chinese butler, and he saw something on the outside of this letter which sent him downstairs two steps at a time to interview the hall porter. When he came back he told us what was the matter. The hall porter had inscribed in the envelope, in Chinese, for the information of the butler:

"This is for the old baboon with white fur."

Unfortunately for the hall porter, the old gentleman was a first-class scholar in the Chinese language.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Diplomacy.

"Why do you make a practice of predicting bad weather?"

WHISKEY FOR RHEUMATISM.

The increased use of whiskey for rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is very effective: "To one half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Root compound and one ounce of Syrup of Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring." Toris Root Compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Dayton, O.

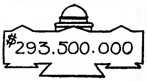
Other Professions of Our Congressmen



WASHINOTON.—What else are congressmen besides congressmon? If they are not in congress, drawing salsry from a grateful people, what would they ho doing for a living?

When the official questioncr went around nnd asked tho Sixtieth congress what its business was when it wesn't congressing 56 members of the senate nnd lower house—15 of one and 41 of the other, replied point blank thnt they were "public officials." That is to say, they admitted thnt if thoy were not servlog their couotry as congressmen, they would nevertheless insist upon serving their country presumably at a salnry, in some other capacity. Notable in the "public official" list nre Senator Jeff Davis of Arkansas, Du Pont of Delaware, Cullom of Illinois, Allison of Iowa, Cranc of Massachusetts, Bourne of Orcgoa ond Keox of Pennsylvania, hcsidea Speaker Cannon of the house.

Of course, in both houses the lawyears far outnumber everybody else put together. There are 54 professed lawyers in the senato alonc, and no less than 235 moro in the house—just 11 less than an evea 300 all together.

Io this category reads the names one hos heard hefore—Seeators Teller and Bacon, Heyhurn, Borah, Hopkins, Hemenwoy aod Beveridgo, Frye, Nelson, Depew, La Follettc, Fornker and Dick, Pearose, Culberson and Bailsy. In the house the lawyers are legion, with Nicholas Longworth, Burtoo, Tawney, De Armood, Littlefield, Crumpecker, Overstreet nnd the New York triumvirats of Bourke Cockran, Herbert Parsons and Sereoo Payne. Elbert Hubbard, member of congress, is also a lawycr, hut this one comes from Sioux City, Iowa.

Bankers rank nezt in number, although there aro hut fiva in the entire senete, which aeems like news—Tallaferro of Florida, Nizoo of Nevada, Kesn of New Jersey, Ankeny of Washlogton, and Rced Smoot of Utah. The houso boasts 22 hankers, mnking 27 lo all.

The two ssnators from South Carolioa confess that they are farmers, though thnt la mora than anybody else in the senate will admit. Thess are Senators Latimer and Tillmnn. Thus the latter remaios loyal to his pitchfork. Two are merchants, Aldrich and Perkins. Buckley of Connecticut says insuranca is hia husiness. Lodge claims literatura as a profession, and Platt is laheled, boldly enough, "President of Express Company." Werren of Wyoming is a stock reiser, Stephenson of Wisconsin a lumherman, Elkins of West Virginia a miner, and Hanshrough of North Dakota edmits to an editorship.

There are 13 fnrmers in the honse, including J. Adam Bede; nine mnnufncturers, four merchants, four insurance men, seven real estete dealers and as mnny lumhermen. There are also soven editors. There are five journalists, four miners and threo puhlishers. There were two plenters, hecause John Sharpe Willinms was ooe hefore he gradueted to the upper house. There is one mining engineer, ooc railroed constructor, one fruit grower, a "trustee" (prohahly the only professionol ooe in existence), a huilder, an everyday contractor, one lone capitalist, a miller, a stock raiser, a surveyor and a taaner. One sayn his occupation is "railrond," and nnother says his is "stone." There are two nurserymen and four physicians, hesides Hohson, who is put down as a "naval constructor," and Champ Clerk, who keeps on trying to prove that he is a lecturer.

How much are they worth in money, these lowyers and puhlic officials and merchants and insurance men and farmers, who serve their country at Washington?

Every third maa in the senate ia worth a million or more. There are 32 millionelres in the senete and 14 in the house. Thirty-two senntors nre worth, together, $210,500,000. The 14 house millionaires are worth $83,000,000. "Retired" Senator Guggenheim is worth ahout $60,000,000. "Lumherman" Stephenson is worth $30,000,000. Express President Platt receives $30,000 a year in salnry alone. "Merchant" Aldrich is worth $12,000,000.

Do thsy all draw salary and every ecot of perquisites they can get, these 46 millionaires who are worth the stnpendous sum of $293,500,000?

Tho aoswer is, they do.

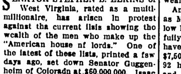
Monstrosities Shown in Capitol Paintings

EVER sinco a magazine article roasting tho art of the great paintiogs in the rotunda of the cnpitol has heen giveo circulation, the pictures have heen receiving more attention than ever heforo from the capitol guides. Even the oldtimers in Washingtoo who regarded it as "greco" to listen to the eopitol echoes or to look at the pictures aod statuary, aro goiog over the paintings to verify the accuracy of the magazine's criticism. And the criticism seems justified in two iostances. The great paintieg hy John Trumhull, depicting Washington's resignation of the command of the army, is found to cootain ths picture of a youog girl of a freak variety.

Two little children gazing intently nt the heroic figure of the father of his country are seen to he well equipped with hands and arms. Between the two of them the little girls have five arms. It is esserted in the magazine article that one girl has three hends, hut a careful examination nf the picture shows that the two little girls hnve five hands and to neither of them can any two of the five hands he properly chnrged.

Another oddity of the rotunde pictures is that fouod at the great illustration of tho haptism of Pocahontas. Among the Indians of Pocehontas' immediate family who participated in the religious ceremony was one hig Indian with six toes. Whether he really had six toes or was given an extra toe hy the artist is not discovered in the history availehie, hut it is sufficient to say thnt there are six as well rounded Indinn toen on one foot as cnn he found in a day's walk.

Senators Are Not as Rich as Reported



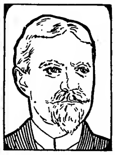
SENATOR STEPHEN B. ELKINS of West Virginia, rated as a multimillionaire, has arisen in protest against tha current lists showing tho wealth of the men who make up the "American house nf lords." One of the latest of these lists, printed a fsw days ago, set down Senator Guggenheim of Coloradn at $60,000,000. Isaac Stephenson of Wisconsin came second with $30,000,000 and Senator Elkins was put third with a modest $25,000,000.

"Discouat those figures hy 90 per coot.," said Senatnr Elkias in all seriousness, as he snrveyed the names of his very rich colleagues, "and they will he more nearly correct. It is the honest truth that many nf the men listed in the senate hy thesn writers as worth nll the way from $1,000,000 to $60,000,000 each would he willing to take ten per cent. of these astimates in cash to-day.

"Run over the names of the wealthy men of the senate," continued Mr. Elkios. "There are admittedly some wealthy men among its memhers. Another senator, prohahly as rich as Mr. Elkins, hut who would not allow his name tn be used, declarea that fully one-fourth of the 92 senators have little else than their salaries ol $7,500 a year. Annther fourth nf the 92 have somswhsre between $20,000 and $50,000. The personal fortunes of another quarter of the senate range hetween $50,000 or $60,000 and $500,000. Most of this class nf twenty-odd, the senator thought, were worth hetween $100,000 and $200,000. The other quarter comprised senators all worth $500,000, and probahly 10 or 12 only entitled tn he called millionaires, not multi-millionaires, hnt simply worth from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

MAY RECEIVE NOBEL PRIZE



Congressman Richard Bertholdt, from the Tenth district of Missouri, is spoken of as the prohahle winner of the Nnhsl peace medal for this ycer, a distinction which was won hy President Roosevelt for his work in hringing to an end the hloodiest struggie in modern times, the Russo-Japanese war. The congressman is the leading figure in the Interparliementery union, a congress of memhers of national parliaments in all parta of the world, nrganized to further the cause of peace, and it wan duo to his efforts that 200 memhers of the American congress were brought in. Both King Edwerd and Emperor William beve received him and Andrew Carnegie made him the custodian of $1,000,000, the procceda of which ara to he devoted to furthering the interests of peece. He took a prominent part in the last peace conference at The Hegue, where he made this very practical recommendation:

"To each nation joining the community of nations in snch a legislative body will he guaranteed (1) territorial and political integrity and local sovereignty or home rule; (2) en equal opportunity to trade ehroad, and (3) due voice in determining tha law to he recognized hy nations in their intercourse with each other. These are the rights, you will ohserve, which to secure and enjoy has alwaya heen assigned as the only reason for the maintenance of military systems."

Although to-day nn enthusiastic American, Congressmen Bartholdt was horn in Germany, hut came to thin country when e boy. He leerned the printing trade and has hecn a newspeperman ever since. Augustus Heinz, who was forced out during the flurry thet followed the collepse of the corner in United Copper in Octoher, is a little past 30 yearn of age. He began life as a hank clerk in Ohio, and hy the time he reached voting age he hed heen elected essistent secretary of the Bankers' essociation of Ohio. Congressman Weaver of Springfield, O., offered him the position of privnte secretary some ten years ago, and Edwardn accepted it and went to Washington with him. That position he held until 1901, when the congressman was retired. His work had attracted the attention of Postmester General Payne, whn offered him a similar position. Edwards accepted. His duties hrought him frequently into contact with Secretary of the Treasury Shaw, aod when tha latter wes looking for a private secretary he "borrowed" Edwards from Peyne and never paid him hack. When Horace A. Taylor tendered his resignetion of the position of assistant secretary of the treesury he recommended Edwards. He suggested thnt the announcement he made on Washington's hirthdsy, then hut a few deyn off.

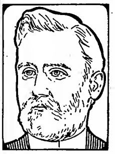
"It is the birthday nf Edwards' good old mother," he said, "and the hirthdey of his young son. I would like to tell him of his promotion on thet dey."

"Capital!" shouted the president, enthusiastically. "I will go you one hetter and send his nominetion to the senate on that dey."

He was as good as his word and Edwnrds got the appointmcot. Becausa tha president of the United States and tho secretary of the treasury in these commonpleca, practical nnd materialistic deys, were sentimentalists, he was confirmed in a position which he did not assume for several weeks later.

ALTERED PROHIBITION WORK



Dr. Purley A. Baker, head and hrains of the Natioaal Anti-Saloon leegue, speaking of the tempernnce weve thet is sweeping over tha United Stetes, says: "We are fighting a demoralized and divided enemy and smile at concessions shouted hack hy a whipped army in full retreat."

Dr. Bsker looks like a country preacher. He was hut he isn't. Once ha rode the hills of northern Ohio in a huckhoard end ministered to ten isolated congregations. He himself led the singing. Now he rides over the United States in parlor cars, an edmirel on wheels in a rigorous and scientific warfare ngeinst the liquor traffic.

Officially he is described es the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league of America. Unofficially he is described as a corporation lawyer, a political hoss and e doctor of divinity. His headquerters ara in Columhus, O., end Weshington. He is quick and nervous, hut his heed is all the time clear and his hrain khown little if any rest. He dresses like a husiness men.

Dr. Baker was horn in the country. At 13 he had e step-father with the usual resnlis. He hecame a ferm laborcr. One night he drifted into e revival meeting. Then the desire for an education seized him. He hecame a minister and while lahoring in Ohio he saw the effecta of intemperance,

IRISH PEER COMING

The duke of Leinster, Ireland'n premier peer, and a handsome, stalwart young man, is coming to Americe, and tha gossips are hinting thnt there is a heautiful young American girl who mey weer the strawherry leaven an a result of his visit. Tha duke is said to he the hest perti of the day, for he lost his parentn while he wan yet a child, and tha revenues of tha estates have accumulated during his minority until today he is a wealthy man, even for his position. Both his father and hin mother, the latter the most heautifnl woman in England at the time, died of coasumption, and it was feared at one time that the young dnke wonld meet the same fate. Ha was sent off for a long sea voyaga and he returned atrong and healthy, with his constitutina apparently thoroughly huilt np.

The yonng duke of Leinster is a great-grand-nephew nf the famous Lord Edward Fitzgerald, the Irish patriot, who, after a hard atruggla with the English troops and police, died in Newgate prison, Dublin, of the injuries inflicted hy them. Lady Edward Fitzgerald, who long survived him, was generally helieved to have been a natural daughter of the regicide, duka of Orleans, father of King Louia Philippe, and of Mme. de Genlis. The latter was the famous French authoress, who, as governess, was intrusted with the education of Louis Philippe. The romantic circumstances nf the marriage nf Lord and Lady Edward Fitzgerald, have found themes for the works of many novelists and poets, inclnding Thomas Moore.

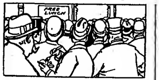
Gotham Getting the Free Lunch Habit

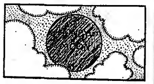


NEW YORK.—Tha free lunch hehit is hreaking into New York society, according to proprietors of well-known hotels, and as a result men worth millions, who, fiva yeers ago, would heve hesitated to he seen tnking a hita at tha lunch counter in the cafe, now think nothing of getting their middey luncheon et theso "priceless" restaurants. The panic hes nothing whatevar to do with this prectice, nor is it e pinn to seve money. The hotel people regerd it as another development in the split second method of American husiaess—another chence which the financier is seizing to save a minnta or two for stocks or deals in the middle of the day. Frequently the tips given hy these men to the waiters in the free lunch department would serve, with the additionel sum spent for heverages, to purchese a very good luncheon in a near-hy dining-room.

Thera is another factor, howaver, tha hotel men helieve. This is the fact that the meats end other dishee served at these countera are commonly cooked in plain American feshion, and many men whose palates are wearied hy the foreign dishes served to them hy the hotel chefs or by their own cordon hleu et home are gled to get ham American styla without champagne ssuce or roest beef without mushroom fixinge or rich gravies.

The evolutioa of the free lunch, which, it is figured, now costs cafe proprietors over $1,500,000 a year in New York city alone, has hrought ehout a reversal in ceste for all free lunchers. Not many years ago the free lunch was to be found oaly in little drinking pleces, where beef stew or potatn salad, served in huge platters, was eaten with a commercial fork teken from a gless of water. And the man who patrooized it was looked upon as "hroke," and a sort of grafter. To-dny the free lunch is a regular institution in meny of the leading botels. Its menu is prepared hy

Latest Romance of W. Gould Brokaw



SOCIETY is eegerly discussing reports that the honeymoon of Mr. nnd Mrs. W. Gould Brokew has gona into eclipse. Brokaw, who was divorced from his first wife, Corallia Edmunda Coudert, in 1898, was sued five years ngo for $250,000 for hreech of promisa hy Katherine Pollion, end was mentioned hy George Lederer, now of Chicago, in his divorce suit, denies that there is a separation.

Mrs. Brokew wes Mery Morris Blair, a deughter of Joseph A. Bleir, e hroker of this city. Sho was married to Mr. Brokew September 17 last at the Bleir country home in Chitteaango, N. Y.

Tha couple perted a few days ago et Mr. Brokaw's country estate, Fairview, Highpoint, N. C. They came north separately. Mr. Brokew is supposed to ha in this city and his wife is sold to bc at the home of her fether in Chittenango.

It is announced in Highpoint that Mr. Brokaw has sold his mountain preserva to his uncle, William Gould, of New York, for $250,000. Ha told persons to whom he talked before leeving Highpoint that he would never return to thnt pert of the country.

Following the deperture of Mr. end Mrs. Brokaw most of the servants at Fairview sterted for New York. From their gossip it was gathered thet the honeymoon of the millionaire aad his wifa wes n stormy period.

During the Christmas holidays Mr. Brokaw gave e house party to e crowd from New York. The servants told of n scene ona night at dinner, hefore the guests, between Mr. Brokaw end his wife, hecause Mr. Brokaw insisted that she should drink ginger alo insteed of champegne.

After every one in the house bad retired, the servants said, Mrs. Broknw got up, dressed, nnd mnde her way to Highpoiot, where she eogeged accommodetions et n little hotel. The next dny guests at Fairview persunded her to return to her husbend's house.

Women Adopt Waltz to Improve Figures

BECAUSE it is reputed to be the greetest discovery of twentieth century days for the developmeat of the humen figure, New York's "400" have espoused the "Merry Widow" waltz.

Mrs. W. K. Vaoderhilt, Jr., and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney are most cothusiostic exponents of the waltz. It hns become the "rege" among other socicty people end is the letest drawing-room amusement.

Youag Doneld Brien, who tekes the part of a prince in the opere, was invited to the Vanderhilt home to tea recently. After the tca the socicty leeders present tried the famous wnltz. Brian complimented them, and showed them some of the intricacies of the dance which they had not acquired.

There was another tea a few days efter, at Mrs. Whitney's, and anotber waltz rehearsel.

Brian bas had so many requests from people who wish to he taught the dnnee that he is half inclincd to consider leaving the stage and opening a dancing school. It would be a kind of gymnasium, too, because the Merry Widow dance is a strenuous affair. If one is at all in neod of figure development he should try the dauce. It is more effective thnn dieting or treatment and much pleasenter.

It reduced Brian nioe pounds, he seys, aod keeps him so "fine" thet he hed to have an attack of tho grip some time ago to rest and gain e little weight.

Ethel Jackson finds thet she docsn't need any massege to improve her figure while she is doing the "Merry Widow" dances.

Well Groomed Sports Wearing Vertical

IT is said hy some leading tailors that striped suitings for men will prevail this spring and summer, as they are now all the rage in Paris and London, and New York is not much hehind those capitals in styles. There is a class of wellgroomed men who have in most seasons affacted perpendiculer stripes; I mean tha gamhlers.

Who sets the fashions in New York to-day for tha young awalls? There is no king of tha dudea. Evander Berry Wall is in total eclipse and Freddie Gehhard ia altogether de trop. Louis Oaatlvia never amounted to much. Lee Taller might have walked in Wnll'a shoes, hut he wears a No. 6 hat. Al Claggett's stomach killed his chances. It is evident that there is an effort amoog the gay young blades just oow to fiod a leader. Young Fish, who was killed la Cuba, was the very youth for the kingship—a youngster of fine hreeding, fine tastes, fine fentures, fine front, fine deviltry, fine courage, fine stature and fine indifference. There wes not his like in all Manhattan. Severel of his admirers met in solemn confeh in a chophouse ncer Forty-second etreet and Brondway the other night and discussed the spring fshions. Some wagera wero made on stripes.

These gilded youth determined to make a test of courage. Anyhody could wear the horizontal stripes in jail; and all could wear the vartical out of jail; hut was any one hrava onough to wear the horizontal out of jail? Ona in the party het $500 against $1,000 that he would within two montha appear in Broedway in a suit of horizontal stripes, strolling from Forty-saventh street down to Fourteenth on the east side of the thoroughfare end hack agaln to Forty-seventh on the west side.

Cuba Progressing.

Cuba is making slow progress toward self-government. The first time the United States intervened in the behalf of order it had to remain in control of affairs more than three years. Then a Cuban congress and a Cuban president assumed power. Everything went smoothly until the election of a new president, when the opponents of the administration were kept from the polls in so many districts that an insurrection soon started. The United States had to intervene the second time, in September, 1906. It has been busy since then straightening out the tangle into which President Palma involved the island. President Roosevelt announced to congress the other day that our work would be completed on February 1, 1909. This will be in less than two years and a half from the appointment of the American provisional governor. As the election of a new president and congress is to be under the supervision of the American officers in Cuba, it is likely that there will be fair play. The next test of Cuban ability will come in four years more, when the Cubans try again to choose a new president. If it should happen that the United States has to be called in a third time there are many persons who believe that it should not retire so quickly, but should remain long enough to assure the country against insurrection every four years.

The most northerly point of land known is Cape Morris Jesup on an island north of Greenland. It was discovered by Commander Peary in 1900, and named after the president of the Peary Arctic club, Morris K. Jesup, who has lately died. Mr. Jesup was one of the most liberal patrons of science, art and exploration of his time. He not only gave generously to the cause of arctic exploration, but provided the money for many scientific expeditions organized to study antiquities in various parts of the world. He will be known for these things to a limited number for a few years, but every schoolboy will pronounce his name for no one knows how long when asked to name the most northern cape in the world. Only the latest geographies show it on their maps now, but they will all have it in a few years.

New York city, which hysterical imaginations are fain to compare with Nineveh, Tyre, Babylon, Sodom and what Mr. Dooley calls other ancient "metroluppuses," is not an unhealthy place, as great cities go. Last year the births exceeded the deaths by 40,000. This is a greater gain than appears for the same time in London, Berlin or St. Petersburg, and in Paris the death-rate is much greater than the birth-rate. New York is a healthy young child and the nation will succeed in bringing it up yet.

Mr. Edison has sent Count Leo Tolstoy a phonograph of the latest and most improved pattern, and in return will receive a cylinder registering Tolstoy's voice as he gives his interpretation of certain Bible texts. The time will come probably when the voices of all prominent personages will be thus preserved for the edification of later generations. For that matter, the voices of private individuals will doubtless be kept in the same way for the benefit of their families, just as universally as photographs are now.

Over 25 years ago London Truth established a doll competition. This year it was held in Albert hall, December 18 and 19. There were 26,000 toys and 1,000 dolls and 11,000 sixpences, all to be given to children in London hospitals, workhouses and infirmaries. For years a great friend of the poor children, Sir Francis Barry, gave the 11,000 sixpences; he died a year ago, but friends and relatives arranged that the pile of sixpences should be given just the same to the expectant children.

The American style of benevolence seems to be contagious. Other countries are feeling the effect. The will of Mrs. Rylands, widow of a wealthy cotton manufacturer of Manchester, England, leaves $2,365,000 to various charities, including $1,000,000 to a library on which she spent $7,500,000 during her life. This is suggestive of some of the princely gifts to philanthropy made in the United States, although the American record is as yet ahead of all others.

Dr. Lyman Abbott puts it thus neatly and pungently: "There is only one argument in favor of race track gambling, namely, that it improves the breed of horses. The answer to that argument is conclusive—it deteriorates the race of men."

Mr. Rockefeller's income is said to be over $1,000,000 a month. Perhaps he considers that he deserves a rather large salary for standing for the disagreeable things that are continually said of him.

FIVE YEARS FOR J. R. WALSH

FORMER CHICAGO BANKER REFUSED A NEW TRIAL.

Stay Order on Appeal—All Points Raised by Attorneys for Financier Are Overruled.

Chicago.—John R. Walsh was denied a new trial by Judge A. B. Anderson in the federal court Friday and was sentenced to five years in the government prison at Fort Leavenworth. The sentence was five years on each count on which the president of the old Chicago National bank was convicted, but it is to run concurrently. All the points raised by the attorneys for the defense in their plea for a new trial were overruled by the court, who, in his opinion, reviewed at some length the events during the trial and after the return of the verdict. An appeal to the upper court is expected to stay the execution of the sentence he now faces. In making his ruling Judge Anderson first took up the Palmer incident when that juror hesitated before replying to the poll of the jury. Judge Anderson recited in detail what occurred and said that counsel for the defendant had not objected at the time and that it was clear that Juror Palmer assented to the verdict. This finding was directly against the argument in support of the motion for a new trial.

John R. Walsh.

The Walsh case involved large sums of money and presented many questions of banking and financial methods rarely called to the attention of a court.

The main contention of the government in the prosecution of the case was that Mr. Walsh in his capacity of president of the Chicago National bank had misapplied certain amounts from the funds of the bank by investing them in railroad and other enterprises with which he was connected.

Little time was lost by Attorney Miller in presenting the assignment or errors, already drawn up, to Judge Grosscup, as a judge of the United States circuit court of appeals. The stay order was entered without question by Judge Grosscup and the bond was fixed at $50,000. The appeal is expected to be taken up at the October term of court and at least until then Mr. Walsh will be free from the necessity of attending court or serving sentence behind barred doors.

LUNATIC TRIES TO ROB BANK.

Demands Money and Threatens Official with Death.

Omaha, Neb.—A bold attempt was made Tuesday to rob the Merchants' bank at Thirteenth and Farnam streets by a man who, although at first thought to be a desperate criminal, is now believed by the police to be a lunatic.

The man gave his name as L. L. Fee, formerly of Rockford, Ill.. He walked into the bank soon after it opened and menacing Vice-President Luther Drake with a bottle which he said contained nitro-glycerin, demanded $5,000 cash. Mr. Drake, though believing for the moment that his life and those of his fellow officials and employes of the bank might be in imminent danger, conferred calmly with the would-be robber until other officials called the police and the man was taken into custody. Tests by the police seem to show that the contents of the bottle were harmless.

ASSASSIN ALIA MUST DIE.

Murderer of Denver Priest Is Sentenced to Death.

Denver, Col.—"Is there no appeal?" These were the only words spoken by Giuseppe Alia when informed by Interpreter Motter that the jury found him guilty of murder in the first degree and fixed sentence at death. Just 18 days after firing the shot which brought death to Father Francis Leo Heinrichs, at the altar in St. Elizabeth's Catholic church, while in the act of administering the holy sacrament, this waif from Italy, an alleged, but not proven anarchist, heard his doom. There was absolutely no demonstration in the courtroom when the verdict was read by Foreman D. S. Johnson, a mining engineer. The finding had seemed inevitable from the beginning and the audience received it in silence, apparently satisfied that justice had been done.

MAY AMEND TRUST LAW.

Important Conference Is Held at the White House.

Washington.—An important conference was held at the White House respecting amendments to the Sherman anti-trust law. The changes in the law, it is expected, will be proposed along the lines suggested by the conference of the civic federation held in Chicago a few weeks ago. No concrete results were reached, and it is likely that further conferences will be held. The president, it is understood, is desirous that a bill embodying the conclusions of the conference if any be reached, be submitted to congress for passage at this session.

Total length of cruise from Hampton Roads to San Francisco, 14,000 miles.

San Diego, Cal.—When the American battleship fleet under command of Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans steamed Thursday into Magdalena bay, passing through the rocky gateway marked by Sail Rock on the north and Redondo point on the south and dropped anchors behind the high peninsula's promontory which stretched a protecting arm down from the main land and makes Man-o'-War cove the most sheltered harbor of the lower Pacific coast, the history making naval cruise of more than 13,000 miles begun at Hampton roads less than three months ago, practically came to an end. Magdalena is the present naval base of the Pacific for American target work and battle practice drills, and by right of temporary ownership through government lease, the vessels, if not the men of the fleet, may feel that they are again in home waters. There remains to be made the trip from Magdalena bay to San Francisco, the destination originally announced, and a matter of some 1,100 miles, but it will not be begun until after target practice is concluded and fleet drills are done. This last stage of the journey will be a tour of holiday making, with stops at San Diego, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and Santa Cruz, where reception committees are planning all manner of entertainments for officers and men. The California committees announce that the uniforms of the enlisted men far from being a bar to any place of amusement, as has sometimes been known to be the case in other places, will be a mark of hospitality and welcome all along the Pacific coast.

MAY RELATE THAW ORGIES

ESCAPADES OF WHITE'S SLAYER UNEARTHED BY EVELYN.

Will Be Unfolded if Family Persists in Fighting Satisfactory Settlement.

New York. — Astounding revelations of orgies attributed to Harry K. Thaw, now at Matteawan insane asylum may be uncovered by Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who is seeking a divorce from her husband on grounds of insanity.

Strangest of all the disclosures made since Evelyn began suit in New York for the annulment of her marriage to Thaw is the declaration that within a month after her wedding she discovered that he was insane. At that time she announced her intention of applying for a divorce on the ground that he was crazy before the ceremony and that all members of the Thaw family knew it when they allowed her to wed him.

Evelyn, of course, knew nothing about these escapades at the time, but immediately after her marriage Thaw now and then dropped a remark that opened her eyes. She concluded that no man in his right mind could think of such affairs, much less actually participate in them; hence, her conclusion that Harry was insane.

Matteawan, N. Y. — Papers in the suit of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw for the annulment of her marriage with Harry K. Thaw was served upon Thaw at the insane asylum Thursday night. At the same time a copy of the summons and complaint was delivered to Superintendent Lamb of the asylum, who is the legal guardian of the defendant.

New York.—Denying the charge of insanity and praying for dismissal of the suit, Harry K. Thaw, through his counsel Friday night, made answer to Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's suit for divorce. The case is to be heard before the Supreme court at an early date.

SENATOR KILLED IN DUEL.

Louisiana Salon, D. S. Kemp, Slain by a Political Leader.

Amite, La.—Democratic State Senator-Elect D. S. Kemp was Tuesday night shot and killed by C. F. Hyde, a political and business leader in the community.

The men quarreled over the recent Democratic state primary election, Hyde charging Kemp with untruthfulness. Later Kemp, revolver in hand, met Hyde and slapped his face. The men then agreed to a duel, which took place almost immediately. Hyde was not injured.

The shooting followed a quarrel over the charges made in New Orleans that 9,000 fraudulent votes were cast in the recent state primary to bring about the defeat of J. J. Bailey for the nomination of lieutenant governor. Mr. Bailey was defeated by Paul Lambremont by a margin of less than 2,000 votes. Several shots were fired and Kemp fell dead, a bullet piercing his heart. Hyde was not wounded and surrendered to the sheriff.

FOUR CONVICTED OF GRAFT.

Capital Jury at Harrisburg, Pa., Returns Verdict of Guilty.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Late Friday night the jury in the capitol graft case returned a verdict of guilty as to all defendants in the capitol trial. Motions for re-trials were made for Sanderson, Snyder, Mathues and Shumaker at once. The four men were convicted of defrauding the state in furnishing the new capitol, which cost the state about $13,000,000, instead of $4,000,000, the figure at which the contract was estimated. The present case constituted one of the longest jury trials in the history of Pennsylvania courts, and it attracted much attention throughout the country.

CLIMATE IS IDEAL

GREAT WEALTH ACQUIRED IN GROWING GRAIN.

Writing from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, W. H. Ellwanger, who was formerly a resident of Green Mountain, Iowa, says: "The climate in summer is ideal for growing grain. Long, clear days of sunshine, no bad storms. We never need to guard against cyclones; I never saw a better climate in my life. We made more money during the season of 1906 than any previous five years in central Iowa—one of the best districts in the state." But Mr. Ellwanger was a resident of the town, and it might be more interesting to read what a farmer has to say about Western Canada. From hundreds of letters all filled with words of praise, recounting success in Western Canada there has been one selected. It is as follows:

Paynton, Sask., Canada,
Dec. 10th, 1907.

To Whom This May Concern:

I moved to this address February 3, 1907, from Montgomery, Iowa, and took a homestead 35 miles north of Paynton. It was cold when I moved here but it did not stay cold long; it broke up the 8th of February, and was not so cold after that but the spring was late on account of the heavy snow fall, but in spite of the late spring I saw better grain than I ever saw in the states, raised this year. I helped a man finish sowing oats the 4th of July and they made fair oats. In a good year oats will go 100 bushels to the acre and wheat 25 to 50; all root crops do well here. I saw turnips weigh 7 and 8 pounds. I raised potatoes this year that measured 11½ inches one way and 18½ the other in circumference. This is a fine stock country; hay in abundance, good water, plenty of fuel, free and plenty of building material—the government gives us timber to saw into lumber and we can get it sawed for about $6.00 per thousand. All small fruit grows wild here, then there are ducks, geese, grouse, pheasants, deer, moose, elk and fish in abundance. I was over to Turtle Lake yesterday where there is lots of fishing being done this winter. I saw about a carload of white fish in one pile. I gave 25 cents for 86 pounds of fish. What do you think of that, Brother Yankee? I think this is a fine place both to make money and to live. There was an old man up here visiting his brother-in-law. Now this man owns land close to Des Moines, Iowa, and is in good circumstances, but he took a homestead and says he will be contented if he can only put in the rest of his days in Canada. He would get up in the morning and look out of the door and say: "Well, who wouldn't live in Canada?" Now I have been in 13 different states in the United States, and I never saw the chance that there is here for a man that has a little muscle and a little brains. Three cheers for Canada!

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Advise Assessors.

St. Paul.—Announcement was made by the state tax commission of the dates of the meetings to be held in the various county seats this spring with the assessors and county officials. The itinerary has been arranged so as to give the commissioners one whole day in each town. Each of three commissioners will cover a certain district so that the entire state may be covered by the end of the first week in May, when the assessors begin their work. The work of the meetings is to discuss taxation matters and to endeavor to secure the co-operation of the assessors in making their work as thorough as possible.

The commission is sending out letters to the county auditors notifying them of the date of the meeting in each county.

St. Peter's Jubilee.

St. Peter.—Efforts will be made to make St. Peter's three-day jubilee and celebration to be held the first week in July, the biggest thing of its kind in Minnesota this year. The general plan is to have an old settlers' reunion on July 2, a home-coming day on July 3, and a big Fourth of July celebration on the last day. Torchlight processions will parade the streets each night, it is intended to have a barbecue, and the various committees will arrange for games, horse races and similar attractions. Governor John A. Johnson probably will be one of the speakers, and Senators Knute Nelson and Moses E. Clapp, and other men of prominence, will be invited to make addresses.

A Noiseless Rifle.

Le Sueur.—People in Le Sueur who for several years have known about the wonderful "noiseless rifle" invented by Mr. John Oliver, an eccentric mechanic of Le Sueur, are somewhat amused by the statement of Hiram Percy Maxim, that he has invented a "noiseless rifle," accompanied as the statement is, by the admission that there is a slight hissing sound at each discharge.

Mr. Oliver's invention is different from the Maxim affair in that it is absolutely noiseless, that is, makes no sound on being discharged louder than the ticking of a watch. It is a simple contrivance.

Urge War on Public Dance.

Duluth.—The grand jury in making its report recommends that the city authorities take the necessary steps to abolish public dances in so far as practical, as it has been found that they are, as a rule, of a demoralizing character. It is recommended that the Armory building which is owned by the city, be no longer rented for such purpose. It is urged that the council take action by amending the charter, or by adopting an ordinance to accomplish the general abolishment of public dances. The city also is urged to take action against hotels of immoral character.

Emma Is Barred.

New Ulm.—Emma Goldman, "high priestess of anarchy," who was booked for two lectures in this city, March 23 and 24, and whose topics were to be "The Revolutionary Spirit in Modern Drama" and "The Child and Its Enemies," will not be allowed to appear here.

The New Ulm Turnverein, after a spirited meeting, voted to cancel the engagement, and she will be unable to secure the Verein hall. The board of education at a meeting disapproved of her appearance.

Fiering Jumps 110 Feet.

Duluth.—The ski tournament at Hibbing was favored by good weather conditions. The longest standing jump was made by Ole Fiering of Duluth, 112 feet. Ole Jannum of Coleraine won first prize, A. Nordby of Stoughton, Wis., second, Ole Mandson of Coleraine third, Ole Fiering of Duluth fourth, John Mangson of Duluth fifth, Ole Westgard of Coleraine sixth and Joseph Colstad of Coleraine seventh.

Baby Scalded.

Duluth.—The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward House of Chub Lake, Carlton county, was fatally scalded by falling into a tub of hot water. The child was two years of age.

The skin came off the body when the clothing was removed and death relieved the sufferer in a few hours. Chub Lake is three miles south of Carlton.

The next morning he was found lying between two buildings in the principal street of Roosevelt badly frozen.

DIVORCE IS ASKED BY EVELYN THAW

WIFE OF WHITE SLAYER FILES PETITION ON GROUNDS OF INSANITY.

Husband Defends Suit—Though Now Confined to Asylum He Will Fight Separation, According to Announcement—Couple Remain Apart.

New York, Mar. 11.—Evelyn Nesbit Thaw Wednesday instituted proceedings for the annulment of her marriage to Harry K. Thaw. The action was based on the allegation that the defendant was insane when the union was contracted. Thaw planned to defend the suit. The papers in the case were served and an early trial is expected. In the meantime the two, by mutual agreement, will remain apart.

In official statements, by counsel for both parties, was confirmed the long-suspected culmination in the wedded lives of Stanford White's slayer and the woman whose story in his defense brought her an unhappy notoriety as wide as the reading world.

Divorce Talked for Weeks.

For weeks it had been gossiped that a divorce was imminent, and even during Thaw's last trial, throughout which his wife stood gamely by him, it was pretty generally believed that, whatever the outcome for the prisoner, the two would never again live together. These reports were frequently based on rumored opposition to the young woman on the part of the Thaw family. In their statements Tuesday night, however, counsel denied that Mrs. William Thaw, Harry's mother, had taken any part in the proposed separation.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw.

Thaw and Mother Served.

Harry K. Thaw was served late Wednesday with a copy of the summons and complaint in the proceedings brought by his wife, Evelyn Nesbit Thaw to annul their marriage. A messenger delivered the papers to Thaw at the Matteawan Insane asylum, and about the same time Mrs. William Copley Thaw, who is made a co-defendant, was served at the Hotel Loraine in this city.

SENATE PROBES NEGRO AFFRAY.

Four Committee Reports and Presidential Message Received.

Washington, Mar. 12.—Reports from the committee on military affairs were presented to the senate Wednesday in regard to the investigation of the affray at Brownsville, Tex., which resulted in the discharge without honor of three companies of negro soldiers of the Twenty-fifth infantry.

At the same time a message was received from the president calling attention to the fact that the testimony taken by the committee sustains his position in discharging the negro soldiers. He recommends extension of the time for re-enlistment of the discharged men who might be found not to fall within the terms of the order.

LILLEY IN ACCUSER'S ROLE.

Washington, Mar. 13.—The Lilley submarine boat inquiry was begun in earnest Thursday by a special house committee. Beginning at ten o'clock the committee continued its work during the greater part of the day. Mr. Lilley was heard at length. He began his testimony by reading a long typewritten statement, a part of which was in the nature of an affidavit, in which he outlined his charges in detail. When he had completed this formal presentation he was questioned at length by Mr. Olmstead of the committee, who was designated by Chairman Boutell to perform that service.

SLIPS FOR SUMMER GOWNS.

Are Built on the Princess Lines Popular Last Year.

The costumes for the summer will not be complete if worn without slips built on the princess lines of last year. This does not necessitate heavy, elaborate undergowns of silk and satin. Ordinary figured dimities and lawn may be used with charming combinations, and trimmed with lace and all-over embroidery.

Some of them are made on the plan of circular corset covers and circular petticoats, joined at the waist with a line of beading. They must all be made simple, so that washing is easy, and really they will be no more expensive than the usual lingerie for summer wear.

Every girl will need three of plain white and two of flowered lawn or dimity, or else five of plain white. Some girls will have them all in white, but trimmed with beads of the flowered materials.

Of course, the slip would not be quite enough as a foundation for a sheer dress unless it is of silk, so many girls will also wear the "pantalons-jupons" so popular in Paris at the present time. These latter may be made of material to match the slip and very full, with deep ruffles of lace.

Some of the more elaborate slips will be trimmed with Dresden ribbon and fine lace, and many will have little ruffles running from knees to feet.

The Bordered Gown.

An original white frock of the "youthful simplicity" order struck a new note the other day, being worn by a golden-haired girl in slight mourning. It was a soft filminess of very fine white net resembling tulle, and both the upper skirt (short to the knees in front and apparently caught up at the back of the waist to fall in irregular edged box plaits) and the lower one was bordered with a deep hem of black velvet, above which was embroidered in a jet running design of round garlands and ribbons, looping over and under a band of silver tissue laid beneath the net.

This idea could be varied and carried out in all sorts of colors, or in one or two shades combined with a white or ivory gown, or all in one pale hue.

The difference in material is often sufficient contrast; velvet on chiffon or crepe de chine, for instance.

Something Original.

Extremely pretty and new was a little frock destined for a girl to wear at one of the balls. Of fine white net, it was mounted upon soft satin and trimmed with many deep bands of what looked at first like braiding, but which proved to be a closely-woven design of narrow satin rouleaux, arranged in a geometrical pattern of the "maze" description, exactly like soutache on cloth. The same idea has been carried out in velvet or even cloth, on materials stalwart enough to stand the weight of it. A dear little pale pink tulle frock was "braided" thus with chenille.

Undersleeves in Color.

It is said that Parisian style makers are concealing their original designs because Americans steal them, as if style isn't anybody's property. Word comes that the favorite sleeve in Paris just now is finished by an undersleeve, not the sheer white undersleeve with which women here have long been familiar, but an undersleeve of satin, velvet or silk, of relieving color from the loose outer sleeve. They don't seem to be worn around here as yet, but women should be on the lookout for them, as they may be attractive

Waists of Wash Tulle.

A distinct novelty for the south, and which will create a kind of revolution in the shirt-waist line, is a tailored waist of white washable tulle, made very severely and designed to take the place of the white linen shirt-waist. It is lined only as high as an ordinary corset cover would come, has long tucked sleeves, and fastens down the front with six pearl studs. This tulle is said not only to launder beautifully, but to wear well.

WEAR COLORS THAT COMBINE.

Proper Harmony the Most Effective Thing in a Costume.

After all, there is nothing more important in a costume than combination of color, for, no matter how rich the material, if the colors do not harmonize the gown will be wrong. For this reason, brown and gold have remained so very popular, as have also smoke gray and silver.

A charming tea gown is of silver gray crepe de chine, made empire and finished with yoke and sleeves of white Oriental lace, which is net embroidered in heavily raised dots. The gown hangs straight and untrimmed from bust to hem, where it has a band of silver braid.

A tea gown of brown chiffon velvet is made in a rather skimpy style, cut in slightly at the waist line, while the yoke and sleeves are of ecru net heavily embroidered with gold thread. At the foot of the gown is a band of the same embroidered filet, only the thread extends over the edge of the net in pieces and makes a pretty curve on the velvet.

Ecru is always an attractive color, and so is champagne, and both combine beautifully with a deep golden brown. Blue is the hardest of all colors to trim, but its own color in a lighter or darker shade is always a safe combination.

New Sofa Cushion.

An innovation in pyrography has just been introduced which adds much to the beauty of the work. Suede or leather is burnt and cut into designs and colored satin or tapestry is fastened to the back. This gives a brighter look to the whole work and relieves the solid-leather effect.

A beautiful soft cushion is made in brown suede, burnt in some flower design. A large diamond is cut from the center of the leather and a multi-colored tapestry is fastened to the back, so that the colors are set in the dark leather like a jewel.

This idea is carried out in leather boxes and picture frames, in these bright-green and red satin being used. The result of the combination is rarely beautiful and it at once overcomes the oft-expressed objection to decorated leather, "it is too dark and plain."

Fashion Favors Coarse Laces.

All the old laces are at present fashionable in Paris, and it is the coarse mesh that is most sought. We see handsome blouses of nothing save Cluny lace sewed together, and even when the finer meshes are employed, big medallions and anemones are put on, so that the coarse lace is always in evidence. Even for lingerie the coarsest of meshes and threads are sought. Material for such purposes cannot be too beautiful, and the daintiest and sheerest of batiste is used; but with the laces—that is another matter.

TEN YEARS OF BACKACHE.

Thousands of Women Suffer in the Same Way.

Mrs. Thomas Dunn, 153 Vine St., Columbus, Ohio, says: "For more than ten years I was in misery with backache. The simplest housework completely exhausted me. I had no strength or ambition and suffered headache and dizzy spells. After these years of pain I was despairing of ever being cured when Doan's Kidney Pills came to my notice and their use brought quick relief and a permanent cure. I am very grateful."

What's a Widower?

Is a widower a married or a single man?

This question continually crops up and it is continually being answered both ways. Certainly a widower is married—he is not a bachelor. That is one answer. Certainly, on the other hand, no matter what the man once was, he is single now. That is the other answer. Thus in all match games of single against married men—games of hockey, football, baseball, cricket—the poor widower is tossed from one side to the other like a shuttlecock. The solution depends solely upon his skill.

EYESIGHT WAS IN DANGER

From Terrible Eczema—Baby's Head a Mass of Itching Rash and Sores—Disease Cured by Cuticura.

"Our little girl was two months old when she got a rash on her face and within five days her face and head were all one sore. We used different remedies but it got worse instead of better and we thought she would turn blind and that her ears would fall off. She suffered terribly, and would scratch until the blood came: This went on until she was five months old, then I had her under our family doctor's care, but she continued to grow worse. He said it was eczema. When she was seven months old I started to use the Cuticura Remedies and in two months our baby was a different girl. You could not see a sign of a sore and she was as fair as a newborn baby. She has not had a sign of the eczema since. Mrs. H. F. Budke, LeSueur, Minn., Apr. 15 and May 2, '07."

Oh, Pshaw!

One of the consuls to Persia, during a recent visit home, said at a dinner in Chicago:

"The present shah will never be the equal of his predecessor. What a character the late shah was. He never opened his mouth without saying something worth repeating.

"Lady Drummond Wolfe once got permission to visit the shah's harem. She took a friend with her, a Miss Blank, who was about to be married. The two English women wandered over the splendid palace, among the hundreds of beautiful girls, and presently the shah encountered them.

"'Come here,' he said to Miss Blank, in his crude French.

"She approached. He looked closely at her.

"'You are about to be married?' he said.

"'Yes, your highness.'

"'It's late!'"

Leisure to Burn.

"My dear," asked the overworked business manager of his wife, as he tried to write a check for her, answer the telephone, receipt the expressman, and give instructions to a floor-walker, at one and the same time: "My dear, in that 'Great Beyond,' do you suppose any of the elegant leisure, of which the preacher tells us, will fall to my lot?"

"Sure, John," answered his wife, sweetly, "you will doubtless have leisure to burn."—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

MUSIC STUDENTS.

Should Have Steady Nerves.

The nervous system of the musician is often very sensitive and any habit like coffee drinking may so upset the nerves as to make regular and necessary daily practise next to impossible.

"I practise from seven to eight hours a day and study Harmony two hours," writes a Mich. music student. "Last September I was so nervous I could only practise a few minutes at a time, and mother said I would have to drop my music for a year.

"This was terribly discouraging as I couldn't bear the thought of losing a whole year of study. Becoming convinced that my nervousness was caused largely by coffee, and seeing Postum so highly spoken of, I decided I would test it for a while.

"Mother followed the directions carefully and I thought I had never tasted such a delicious drink. We drank Postum every morning instead of coffee, and by November I felt more like myself than for years, and was ready to resume my music.

"I now practise as usual, do my studying and when my day's work is finished I am not any more nervous than when I began.

"I cannot too highly recommend Postum to musicians who practise half a day. My father is a physician and recommends Postum to his patients. Words cannot express my appreciation for this most valuable health beverage, and experience has proven its superiority over all others." "There's a Reason."

An American trainer has this to say of the Orloff trotter. "The Russian horses look well and do well in front of a family carriage, but they would be badly out of place on the race track of any other country than their own."

When They Are Quiet.

"I like to go to church."

"Why?"

"Well, it's comforting to see a man keep a hundred women or so quiet for an hour."—Bohemian.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Minnesota Ahead.

We received a letter from a sister in Oklahoma yesterday with a peach blossom in it, as the trees are all in bloom down thare now. Did it make us wish to change climate? Well not yet, after reading a little farther on in the letter that the green bugs had distroyed all their crops last season. No green bugs up in this country; as they and the big bugs all freze to death, and the only bug of distruction we have is the bed bug.

A Good Time To Build.

The prices of lumber, other building meterial and labor in the Red River Valley, is lower now than it has been for years, and the question arises. How long will such cooditions last? Statistics show that all manufactures of lumber are contracting their output; which means a scarsity before an other year goes by, even with a very normal demand.

A scarcity always tends towards higher prices and it might be good business policy to take advantage of the present market.

Notice To Subscribers.

We do not intend to place our accounts in the hands of any collectors, other than ourselves, as we have tried that method of doing business before, with the result that the collectors collected all the best accounts, made all the subscribers mad, kept all the cash they collected, then turned the dead and down timber back to us and says "we got our share now get yours."

We have had some expearience in the collection business, and shall go on the principal that we have earned the money due us, and if you want to be mean enough to try to beat us out of it, we will be just mean enough to try to colect it.

A Tale of Germs and Love

By I. L. HILL

(Copyright, 1908, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"This is the Widsl's test. You saw under the other, microscope how actively the bacilli were moving. Now, you will see, when I odd this drop of blood from the typhoid patient, how the bacilli will cluster ond clump and lose their motion."

Dr. Young deftly adjusted the slido nnd with delicate manipulation completed the test. The reaction was typical.

"How interesting!" said the charming girl who was being initioted into some of the more striking phenomena of the laboratory. If indeed she was not sincere in her profession of interest for these somewhat unaesthetic technicalities, she certainly did not fail to find attraction in the handsome young physician who was demonstrating them. Her eyes followed him in every movement and beamed with admiration and sympathy.

"And are these real live germs, the [illegible] that cause all the mischief?" she inquired.

"There are enough bacilli in that tube of bouillon to give typhoid to an entire city."

She gave a playful little scream and stepped back. "Oh, how dreadful! And how dangerous you are who work with those things every day! I believe I shall have to be corfeul how close I let you come."

"You needn't fear. See, now they are safely stowed away in the incubator, and here go my hands in the antiseptics. I shall be perfectly safe [illegible]."

From the by-play that followed it was evident that she took his word for it.

"After to-morrow you will hear the scientists talking of the Young test just as they now do of the Widal test. It's a reaction I have discovered to establish the identity of the cholera germ, and there is a test-tube culture of cholera in that incubator that may make my name famous. I've grown them under certain new conditions. At the medical meeting to-morrow night they will be the illustration of my maiden paper. I can't exploin to you just what manipulations I shall make to cause the reaction that will show that it is cholero and nothing else, for you wouldn't understond it. But, pshaw! this isn't interesting to you. I'm a bore when I get on my hobby. You'll excuse me."

"Why, Jack, you know I'm terribly interested in science, and especially in what you accomplish. Oh, I know we're all going to be proud of you."

They wolked out of the laboratory together—perhaps closer than tho necessities of the spaco demanded. But a hospital laboratory is an uncanny place, and one would naturally lean toward the confident guide who possessed such a mastery over its sinister elements.

There were two other occupants of the laboratory. The doctor and his fair visitor had not been unconscious of their presence—merely oblivious to it. Perhaps they might have been less self-sufficiently comfortable hod they observed the attention with which their dialogue had been noted.

Penton, a junior house physician, was the first to speok. "Conceited fool, that man Young. It's more luck than sense that has given him his advancement. He never did anything wonderful at college when I was in his class. Humph! I never had to give way to him then. But he had the cash and could go right on and I had to drop out a year and work. Now, I'm taking orders from him! Making discoveries! Just his luck to fall into something new. They'll all pat him on the back whether it amounts to anything or not. Then there'll be no living with him."

Penton looked bitterly envious, but Heller, the pharmacist, evidently harbored a deeper feeling. His face boro tho picture of jealousy ond hatred. Yet, he spoke lightly.

"She's a mighty pretty girl, that Miss Alden. He seems to stand very well with her. But there's many a slip—ha!" His chuckle sounded harsh and unnatural.

"Well, I must bo going," said Penton. He glanced back furtively at the incubator as he left the loboratory.

Heller paced nervously up and down the room. "Ten years ogo Young whipped me for something I said to that same littlo Alden girl," he muttered. "He has crossed mo a dozen times since that. Sho ond I got along well enough as school-mates until he became acquainted with her; then he made a good deal of her business his own. The last few years she has not even bowed to me. I can see whose influence that is. And that other deal. He had to discover irregularity in my method of buying drugs! Claims he'll report me as soon as he has completed his investigation. Pretty sort he is! No other house physician ever made it his business to find out where I bought tho drugs, or what I paid for them, or whether I got anything out of it. Humph! I supposo my job is gone.

"What a lot of deadly rubbish—(he paused before the door of the incubator)—living poisons kept multiplying by that heat. More deadly than barrels of arsenic. Lord! And no one can tell more than that the victim has contracted the disease. Let's see this little plaything." He opened the door of the oven and took out a tube-culture. He started suddenly as though frightened at the trend of his own thoughts.

"Heller, have you the key of the dispensary?" He drew up suddenly at the call of his name; hurriedly replaced the tube and answered tho call.

A half hour past midnight Dr. Penton quietly entered the loborotory, which was dark and deserted, lighted a Bunsen burner and worked for half an hour with test tubes, heat and chemicals. He had the door closed and worked quietly. He made sure before he stepped into the hall that he was not observed. He left the loboratory in darkness.

Two hours later a figure crept along the walls of the hall to the laboratory. Reassured by a quick glance up and down the hall, Heller, the pharmacist, entered the door, which had not been locked. He made his way quickly to the incubator and lit a match with trembling fingers and removed a tube from its stand. "Cholera culture. Dec. 2nd," he read the label. "Day before yesterday—fresh," he muttered. He left the laboratory without daring to look behind him.

"A letter for you, Dr. Young." The orderly handed an envelope to the young doctor, just as he was glancing over his notes, the reading of which was next on the program that night. Young opened the letter. As he read his face grew white; he tottered and sank back in his chair. "It's too late, too late!" he moaned. "Oh, Alice, Alice!"

The physician who was reading an article to the meeting stopped at this interruption. Several of the physicians rushed to Young's side. "What is it?" asked old Dr. Jarden, chief of the visiting staff.

Two Hours Later a Figure Crept Along the Walls.

"The letter," Young gasped, pointing to the sheet on the floor.

Dr. Jarden seized the letter and read it in an undertone to the physicians at his side:

> Dr. Young: For God's sake save yourself if you can! I am now on my way to the sea, but if I am to continue in the torture of conscience that I am now enduring I shall put myself into the ocean rather than on it. Be quick when you get this. Early this morning I took a drachm of pure cholera culture from the laboratory and put it in your drinking glass. I saw you pour water in that glass and drink it all down. Oh, God! I was drunk when I did it.
>
> For heaven's sake save yourself.
>
> Distractedly, HELLER.

"Who is Heller?" inquired the old doctor of Penton, who was in the group that listened to the letter. "But first attend to this poor young man. Irrigate continually with my antiseptic solution. You know my formula. But I fear we are too late."

"Doctor Jarden, may I speak with you in private?" Penton spoke like one about to be whipped. "It was contemptible, doctor," he said, when they had stepped aside; "just pure envy, but it is true, nevertheless, that last night, in order to spoil Young's experiment before the meeting, I took his culture tubes of cholera and typhoid and subjected them to heat enough to kill all the germs and make his tests failures. Of course the culture media were then harmless and sterile."

"Well, well!" exclaimed the old doctor. "I shall not divulge this. Let them go on with the treatment; it will do no harm."

"My antiseptic formula will get credit for the cure," he was thinking.

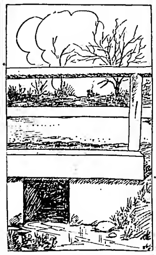
Never Rode on Cars.

Miss Mary A. Egge, one of Allentown's oldest women, died suddenly today, after having lived more than 50 years within a block of a railroad and for 15 years close to an electric railway, but without ever having ridden on a steam train or trolley car.—Philadelphia North American.

CEMENT CULVERTS.

Prove the Cheapest Because They Last Longest.

If it is necessary to lay a pipe within two feet of the surface of the roadway, iron water pipe or gas pipe should be used. For larger volumes of water culverts of rubble masonry or Portland-cement concrete may be built. Very often, with a proper design, it will be found to be more economical to use the concrete, particularly if it is re-enforced with steel.



Concrete Culvert End.

Large culverts and bridges should always be designed by competent civil engineers and constructed under their supervision. Indeed, very often the advice of such an engineer in regard to the smaller waterways might be sought with profit. Money is too often wasted from a lack of knowledge concerning the proper sizes of pipes and culverts.

In many localities it is the custom to extend to the center of the road driveways leading from adjacent lands to the road to meet its center grade. This practice makes it necessary to carry the gutter water under the driveway in a pipe. Nearly always it is possible, by regarding such a driveway, to make it coincide with the gutter grade, so that the surface water will flow by without interruption. This should always be done when possible. Pipes with open ends laid at the gutter grade are always unsatisfactory, since they fill up quickly with leaves and sand and with slush in winter time, and thus the surface water is forced out upon the macadam and soon gullies it. When a pipe is required, a catch basin should be built on the upper side of the driveway, the pipe should be laid to connect with it, and carried sufficiently far underground to discharge properly into the gutter below the driveway.

In cuts where the grade is in excess of three per cent. and where the soil is loose or sandy it is sometimes necessary to pave the gutters with cobblestones or with paving bricks or paving stones to prevent the formation of gullies in the shoulders and in the macadam. Usually a gutter three feet in width laid on the same or a little greater slope than the macadam, with an outer row of large stones about one foot high laid vertically against the bank of the cut, is sufficient. Such a gutter usually replaces the shoulder, and it should not be constructed until the macadam is substantially completed.

DRAG THE ROADS.

Work If Done While Roads Are Soft Is Most Effective.

The spring of the year is the time when the work of road-dragging must commence if the roads are to be brought into a good condition through this process. Dragging is a work that must be done at the very muddiest time to be most effective. Some communities have waited till mid-summer or fall before beginning this work, and the results have not been very satisfactory.

In the spring the frost coming out of the ground leaves the roads muddy to a great depth. The whole mass is then plastic and will yield under the passing of the road drag. The glazing is then easily done and when the good weather comes the heat of the sun dries the surface into a hard mass that remains so for a long time. In states where great advance has been made in the science of road dragging the major part of the work has been done in the early spring. After the foundation work is done the work can be later continued after heavy rains, but these rains do not usually wet the road in to a very great depth.

The benefits of dragging have been demonstrated in a thousand localities where the soil has in it enough clay to glaze under the passing of the road drag. We believe that every community where the roads are not sandy in nature can afford to take up this work and give the roads treatments that will insure good roads for the balance of the year.

Trees received in frozen or dried-up condition should be buried for awhile in the ground to thaw out and moisten.

GREATER CORN CROPS.

Conditions Which Must Be Secured for Large Yield.

Every farmer located in the corn belt is desirous of growing as much corn per acre as possible and it is the fault in many instances of the corn land owner if he does not do so.

In this section our farmers are learning that it is profitable to study the minor details that affect the production of a good healthy corn crop.

Proper soil and good drainage are the first two requisites. We have the former and cannot afford to do without the latter.

Then disk well both ways of the field before breaking up the soil. This cultivates the soil and pulverizes thoroughly the portion that is to grow and nourish the roots. Before disking the soil it is proper to get all the manures upon the farm onto this soil and thoroughly disk it in by the operation. Then you are ready to break up the soil with a good plow.

You will find this last operation greatly lightened by the disking and you can not only plow better furrows, but deeper as well than where you have a rigid and unworked surface before you. The tilth of the entire field is greatly lightened and much easier prepared for planting.

This operation pays great returns when done in the proper manner and not only pays in growing corn alone, but as well in growing the potato crop.

Then grade your seed, both in quality and quantity. In quality first. Do not shell into your basket one single ear that you are doubtful of in appearance.

Test each ear, urges the Epitomist, by shelling off a few grains and placing them upon a muslin mat marked off in checks and numbered, numbering the ears to correspond. Place this mat into a good-sized flat box filled with moist earth or sawdust. In a few days you can discard the worthless grains and the ears to which they belong, for they have failed to germinate or are weakly in sprouting. Shell off the tips and butts. No use for them. Yet they will grow and produce, but plenty of nice uniform grains will make a more even stand.

DURABLE SUPPORT FOR SCALES.

Substantial Foundation Should Be Provided.

The American Miller describes a support for scales, the foundation of which was constructed of bricks with six-by-eight-inch sills on top.

Cement piers were built in the corners as shown in Fig. 1 at AA. They were made one foot high, on which were placed the saucers that hold the balls. The saucers were fastened in the cement as it was about hard, with lag screws, and when the cement was set the saucers were firm and solid.

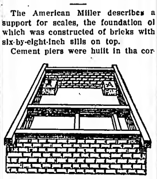


Fig. 1.—Showing Cement Piers in Corner.

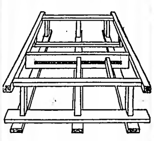

Fig. 2.—Wooden Frame Used in Pit.

In Fig. 2 is shown a wooden frame to be placed in a pit as a foundation.

Cross-Over for Barbed Wire Fence.

Anyone who has ever tried to cross over a barbed wire fence knows how difficult it is to accomplish it without injury to body or clothing. A safe passage may be arranged by taking two short boards or pieces of planking six inches wide and long enough to reach from the ground to four inches above the fence. Nail these strips securely to the fence post, slanting out at the bottom about two feet from the post. To these pieces nail three cross pieces on either side of the fence thus forming what in practically a ladder on both sides. The fence post should be longer than the others along the line as it enables one to grasp it for support while crossing. Several ladders of this kind arranged at convenient intervals will make the matter of crossing wire fences easy.

Any Kind of Fertilizer Helps.

About one-fourth of the land here is in hay meadows, of which the principal grass is timothy. These meadows are occasionally plowed up and reseeded with timothy and clover. Not much fertilizer is used, but the meadows are productive in most cases. These meadows are pastured with cattle after the hay crop is cut. Nearly all of our meadows are well drained, as they must be to get good results. Two of the most important things in the cutting of our hay crops, is to have the meadows thoroughly drained and to have them well fertilized with fertilizer of any kind.

PERUNA EDITORIAL NO. 2.

Dr. Hartman has claimed for many years that Peruna is an EXCELLENT CATARRH REMEDY. Some of the doctor's critics have disputed the doctor's claim as to the efficacy of Peruna.

Since the ingredients of Peruna are no longer a secret, what do the medical authorities say concerning the remedies of which Peruna is composed?

Take, for instance, the ingredient HYDRASTIS CANADENSIS, OR GOLDEN SEAL. The United States Dispensatory says of this herbal remedy, that it is largely employed in the treatment of depraved mucous membranes, chronic rhinitis (nasal catarrh), atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), chronic intestinal catarrh, catarrhal jaundice (catarrh of the liver), and in diseased mucous membranes of the pelvic organs. It is also recommended for the treatment of various forms of diseases peculiar to women.

Another ingredient of Peruna, CORYDALIS FORMOSA, is classed in the United States Dispensatory as a tonic.

CEDRON SEEDS is another ingredient of Peruna, an excellent drug that has been very largely overlooked by the medical profession for the past fifty years. THE SEEDS ARE TO BE FOUND IN VERY FEW DRUG STORES. The United States Dispensatory says of the action of cedron that it is used as a bitter tonic and in the treatment of dysentery, and in intermittent diseases as a SUBSTITUTE FOR QUININE.

OIL OF COPAIBA, another ingredient of Peruna, is classed by the United States Dispensatory as a mild stimulant and diuretic. It acts on the stomach and intestinal tract. It acts as a stimulant on the genito-urinary membranes. Useful in chronic cystitis, chronic dysentery and diarrhea, and some chronic diseases of the liver and kidneys.

Our Peruna Tablet Is Peruna With Fluid Removed.

These opinions as to the ingredients of Peruna are held by all writers on the subject, including Bartholow and Scudder.

OF HYDRASTIS, BARTHOLOW SAYS it is applicable to stomatitis (catarrh of the mucous surfaces of the mouth), follicular pharyngitis (catarrh of the pharynx), chronic coryza (catarrh of the head). This writer classes hydrastis as a stomachic tonic, useful in atonic dyspepsia (chronic gastric catarrh), catarrh of the duodenum, catarrh of the gall duct, catarrh of the intestines, catarrh of the kidneys (chronic Bright's disease), catarrh of the bladder, and catarrh of other pelvic organs.

BARTHOLOW REGARDS COPAIBA as an excellent remedy for chronic catarrh of the bladder, chronic bronchitis (catarrh of the bronchial tubes).

BARTHOLOW STATES THAT CUBEB, an ingredient of Peruna, promotes the appetite and digestion, increases the circulation of the blood. Useful in chronic nasal catarrh, follicular pharyngitis (catarrh of the pharynx), increasing the tonicity of the mucous membranes of the throat. It also relieves hoarseness. Useful in atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), and in chronic catarrh of the colon and rectum, catarrh of the bladder, prostatorrhea, and chronic bronchial affections.

MILLSPAUGH, MEDICINAL PLANTS, one of the most authoritative works on medicinal herbs in the English language, in commenting upon COLLINSONIA CANADENSIS, says that it acts on the pneumogastric and vaso motor nerves. It increases the secretions of the mucous membranes in general. In the mountains of Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Carolina, collinsonia canadensis is considered a panacea for many disorders, including headache, colic, cramp, dropsy and indigestion. DR. SCUDDER regards it highly as a remedy in chronic diseases of the lungs, heart disease and asthma.

These citations ought to be sufficient to show to any candid mind that Peruna is a catarrh remedy. Surely, such herbal remedies, that command the enthusiastic confidence of the highest authorities obtainable, brought together in proper combination, ought to make a catarrh remedy of the highest efficacy.

This is our claim, and we are able to substantiate this claim by ample quotations from the HIGHEST MEDICAL AUTHORITIES IN THE WORLD.

Surely a No-Account Dog.

A man in Missouri recently sued a railway company for damages for the death of a hound killed on the track, says the Youth's Companion. The company defended itself upon the following points:

Said dog was chasing a rabbit on defendant's tracks in violation of the game laws.

Said rabbit lived on defendant's right of way, and was therefore the property of the defendant.

Plaintiff's dog was a trespasser, and was hunting defendant's property without permission.

Said deceased was not much of a dog, anyhow, or it could easily have kept out of the way of defendant's trains.

And having fully answered, defendant prays to be discharged.

LUMBAGO

This is really Rheumatism of the Muscles of the Loins and is characterized by a severe, at times, agonizing pain in the small of the back, allowing the sufferer scarcely a moment's rest, while the ailment is at its worst. It can come from cold, exposure to draft, from getting wet feet or wearing wet or damp clothing. It causes acute suffering, and if allowed to become chronic it may permanently disable the sufferer. The way to secure quickest relief is to redden the skin over the painful part by rubbing with a flesh brush or piece of flannel rag, and then apply ST. JACOBS OIL by gentle friction with the hand.

To refuse to yield to others when reason or a special cause require it is a mark of pride and stiffness.—Thomas a Kempis.

SCIENCE VS. KNOW HOW

AN EPISODE IN WOODS AND WATER EXPLOITS

By
Ernest McGaffey
Author of Poems of Gun and Rod, Etc.

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"Ever tell you how I cleaned up one of those scientific fishermen?" said Jud Bates, as we dried our lines out over the grass by hanging them from the branches of the soft maples in the front yard of the Twin Lakes hotel.

"No," was my answer, "how did you turn the tables on him? Did you 'out-luck' him or put a charge of dynamite in the creek?"

"I just brought my boy-hood knowledge into play,' says Jud, "I turned the trick like I used to at the old gravel-hole."

"How was it, now that you've got started, Jud?" says I.

"Well," said Jud, "it was this way. I was just breaking into the fishing game. Somehow, I had got bitten with the idea of having my picture taken holding up one end of a big string of fish, with an expression on my face as if I was about half-ashamed of being such a fish hog, and half proud of getting such a whale of a catch. I bought me a lot of tackle, and I had a regular fish 'bug' go along with me to help pick it out.

"Well, I 'framed up' with the 'bug' afterwards, and he takes me out, and honest, the first time I land a three-pound small-mouth bass, and I says to him, 'Ferdy—his name was Ferdinand—Ferdy, says I, 'it's worth the price, just this one guy alone.' And it was."

SAY, I WAS DOING A LAND-OFFICE BUSINESS.

When I got here there was a fellow here from Oconomowoc, and according to his say-so he was a scientific fisherman from somewhere before the flood. One or two of the men around the hotel said he was able to make good, although at that he was very generous with his talk. He had his wife with him, but she wasn't a fisherman.

"So along about nine o'clock, he and I gets to talking, and the first thing he does is to 'kid' me about my tackle and lines and hooks. He was the greatest ever about advice, and to hear him I wouldn't be able to catch a bull-head with my outfit if I fished for a month. He had everything different from my works, and on the level, he must have paid a thousand dollars for his plant."

"I had a little talk with Ducky Jones, the fellow that used to work here around the stables, and he told me the fish bit best early in the morning, just before the mist rose up off of the bars. He said that when the mist rose, the fish could see the boats, and then they tobogganed for deep water, and that made the fishing slow. But he said that when the mist was over the water, they bit to beat Banagher. Said you could catch 'em with both hands and both feet."

"I slipped Ducky a little piece of money for his 'tip' and says I, I'll get out before this Oconomowoc geezer gets up and have a dozen bass by the time he's getting his boat ready. I got my boat all ready, and Ducky said he'd have a minnow bucket filled and in the boat for me. So I turned in and when the old alarm clock rattled for me, I was Jonathan on the spot, and out in a hurry."

"And right on the stairs I met this Oconomowoc 'fresh' and he was saying 'Hurry up, Clara.' We got into our boats together, and he seemed to have his bait all right the same as I did, and his wife, she was looking sleepy and kind of disgusted at being hauled out before she got her beauty sleep.

"I sounded the bottom with my big pole, and found about four feet of water and I knew I was over the bar, so I anchored and begun operations. About fifty feet away from me in the foggy mist this Mr. Oconomowoc anchors, and by the time he was fast and ready I had landed one bass. I fastened onto him the minute I cast in, and it took me about five minutes to get him in. I threw out again, and another bass had the minnow in a second. It took at least five minutes to get him around and get the landing-net under him and about this time the Oconomowocs landed their first bass."

"Ducky Jones had said that the mist sometimes rose over the lake and cleared up in half an hour, and about that time the great white light broke in on my gray matter about where I was at. So I took off the tip of my rod, tied the line tight to the end of the second joint, bid a hasty farewell to scientific methods and started to yank 'em in like I used to snake in sun-fish out of the old gravel-hole on my grandfather's farm. Gee, but that was a swift game. As soon as the minnow hit the water there was a bass or a wall-eye waiting for it. And the minute I got a bite it was come-all-ye, and I jerked 'em in by main strength and slid 'em on my chain stringer and baited up again."

"Say, but I was doing a land-office business. And just about then I heard Clara say to Mr. Oconomowoc, "He's catching five fish to your one." And then Oconomowoc says, "He might as well dynamite 'em."

"Well, he's getting 'em just the same," says Clara.

"Look out there with the net," says Oconomowoc, as he steers a bass alongside, "easy now," and then I heard Clara say, "Oh, he got away."

"That fellow'll hear every word we say," and she says, "I don't care if he does, you started it."

"And all this time it's just biff, splash, and snake 'em out with yours truly. The little ones I throw back, and the big ones go on the string, and during this time—you know how clearly voices sound over the water—I can hear this Mrs. Oconomowoc shooting it into hubby."

"'Why, I'll wager he's got a hundred fish by this time,' says she, as the tail of a three pound bass comes over the side of my boat."

"'Yes,' says he, 'and he'd be drummed out of a fishing camp if he caught fish that way up in the weeds.'

"'You don't seem to be out of the woods yourself,' retorts Clara, 'with this stingy little four bass and one pike,' she says.

'Well they're all caught in a sportsmanlike manner,' returns Mr. Oconomowoc.

"'That must be a great relief to them,' says Clara.

"'Clara,' says Mr. Oconomowoc, 'I'm sorry I brought you out this morning. What's the matter with you anyway?'"

"'Horace,' says the lady, 'you ought never to have been a fisherman; you're too passionate.'"

"'There you go,' says he, 'and d—n me, if there don't go that bass I'd a got if you had been there with the landing net.'"

"'Mr. Wellington,' says the lady, 'I'll not be sworn at; row me to the hotel this instant.'"

"And so they rowed in, and the mist lifted in a few minutes, and I followed after them."

I had fixed my tackle all right before I ups with my anchor, and I knew that no one at the hotel would know of my crimes if Horace didn't blow the gaff. But I reckon his wife stayed that off, for I was IT for that trip. But when the guests were asking me questions and congratulating me at the table, Horace was as sulky as a bear with a sore head. Clara, however, gave me a real friendly, beautiful smile."

"He was a real 'mutt' that Horace; but Clara—she was an out-and-out thoroughbred!"

HOW TO KNOW PURE PAINT.

A Way in Which It May Be Identified Before Using.

After a building has been painted long enough for a weather test, it is easy to tell if the paint used was made of pure White Lead or not. But such belated knowledge comes like locking the barn after the colt is stolen.

What one wants is a test that will tell the quality of the paint before it and the labor of putting it on are paid for.

Nature has provided a way in which genuine White Lead may be positively distinguished from adulterated or fake White Lead before you spend a cent on your painting.

Pure White Lead is made from metallic lead, and, under intense heat, such as is produced by a blow-pipe, pure White Lead will resolve itself back into metallic lead. If, however, it is not genuine White Lead, or if it contains the slightest trace of adulteration, the change will not take place. Therefore the "blow-pipe" test is an absolute and final one.

The National Lead Company are urging everyone interested in painting to make this test of paint before using it, and they guarantee that the pure White Lead sold under their "Dutch Boy Painter" trade-mark will always prove absolutely pure under the "blow-pipe" or any other test. To make it easy for you to perform the experiment they will send you free upon request a blow-pipe and everything necessary for you to make the test, together with a valuable booklet on paint. Address, National Lead Company, Woodbridge Building, New York City.

IN JAPAN

The Funny Things One Sees in Smiling Round the World

By

MARSHALL P. WILDER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Japan compels a more rigorous examination at her various ports of entry than any other country. China makes no examination whatever, perhaps on the principle that it is difficult to sweeten a bad egg.

All holders of official positions in Japan are obliged to wear European dress, and the little Japs who boarded our steamer looked, in their long, green coats, elaborately ornamented, like schoolboys in their fathers' clothes. They are very important little people, you must know; but one of these came to grief in a manner speedy as it was unexpected.

• • •

Everything is so neat and clean in Japan, it looks as if somebody had got up before breakfast to sweep and dust the whole country. Prince Hasebe, in an after-dinner speech at Spokane, said: "If you should visit a Japanese house you would be obliged to remove your shoes at the doorway. Japanese floors are beautifully kept. I know of some houses where 30 or 40 servants have no other duty than the polishing of the floors."

Clutching at the Bunch of Chains.

And Japan is the land of unrealities. The whole country is a toy shop. Everything is small. The horses are all ponies; the chickens bantams; the dogs small and shy—with apologetic manners—they wouldn't presume to bark at your heels without first asking permission; the oysters are about as large as a quarter; clams no larger than a dime; bananas not more than four or five inches long; and oranges about the size of lady-apples. Yes, everything is small. I never felt so much at home in my life.

• • •

Japanese art has had many admirers and many detractors. The latter have likened their china, sprawling with dragons and alive with grinning faces, to a fit of the jim-jams; their sunflowers to jellyfish and their chrysanthemums to cartwheels.

Its admirers claim that all you have to do is to study up its symbols, and then go ahead. But it strikes me that by the time you've learned the symbols it would be time to die. For instance, when a Japanese artist draws a picture of an April evening, a dyspeptic moon, a nightingale and a couple of plum trees, and asks you its meaning, I'll wager that if you stood first on one foot and then on the other for two mortal hours you couldn't give the fellow an answer. It's dollars to doughnuts you couldn't tell the nightingale from a fishhawk, and you couldn't tell what he was doing on the plum tree, or on the moon—it don't matter which—if they gave you the whole business—the hawk, the plum tree, the moon and the April evening—to take home to your wife for a birthday present. For, my dear fellowman, that picture means happiness! yes, happiness. And if you can't see the artist's meaning, and—what's more to the point—get your wife to see it, you'd better stay right in the artist's studio and—

But you won't! You'll rush straight home with the picture under your arm, and you'll rush up to your wife and, in an insane endeavor to expatiate on the complex beauties of the thing, you'll say:

"Look, Maria! just see this! A present for your birthday—didn't forget you, did I? Here you are—great! Look at the willowy moon, and the nightingale sky, and the plum-hawk—"

And then she'll burst into tears, and cry: "I knew it! I knew it! I've seen it coming! Oh, I knew it!"

"Know what, for heaven's sake?"

"That you'd begin to see things! Stopping off at that corner nights has done it—I knew it would!—A plum-hawk! Oh, Archibald! that you should come to this! Oh, oh!—"

And there you are!—hysterics; the telephone; the doctor; and, let us hope, a "quick curtain," as they say at the theater.

• • •

You prop the casus belli on your knee and thus apostrophize it:

"You call yourself a moon, do you? Why, a half-baked soda biscuit is a queen to you! And you're a nightingale, are you? Why, you splay-footed, wry-neck, hollow-back, shark-nose nightmare! a setting hen with the wind-cackles is a bird of paradise to you! What did that idiotic Bilkins, with his infernal 'symbols' mean by letting me in $25 for this? Yes, $25! and what's the result? Maria throwing fits, and the doctor's bill another twenty-five, and nothing to show for the fifty but this dumbasted Japanese brain storm!

"A symbol of happiness, eh? Well, it hasn't brought much happiness to my home! A plum tree! Looks more like a gooseberry bush. I'll bet the plums on it would sour a barrel of molasses!

"'Patriotism,' said that ass of a Bilkins, 'is sometimes indicated by a spray of cherry blossoms.' Well, I've seen it indicated round the 17th of March by a sprig of shamrock, and more times round the Fourth of July by a red, white and blue rosette, but nobody needed an interpreter in either case to tell what they were the 'symbol' of.

"Grace and quietness are indicated by the willowy tree and the swallow, eh? Very well; I admit the willow tree. For gracefulness she's all to the good. But the swallow for quietness! Well, I've seen some swallows that wouldn't go in that class—not for nickels. One swallow don't make a summer, but two will get away with a whisky-straight in a second and a half; and three more will make a man's tongue go like a mill-clapper, while three more will bust up all the quietness left over from a generation of country Sabbaths.

"And this little game cock perched on a drum signifies good government? Well, that's a stretch of imagination with a vengeance! Looks more like a sparrow on a pancake-griddle. Good government, eh? I reckon they don't need any over there, or they'd get something bigger than his drumsticks for a symbol. His purple nibs hardly looks equal to the job. I should say scratching worms in the back yard was more in his line.

"Well, I've had an alcoholic sufficiency of Japanese art; my reputation for sobriety with my wife is gone to the four winds; I'm fifty out of pocket, and nothing—absolutely nothing—to show for it but you! you brain-twisted, colicky, jaundiced paranoiac!

"It's the furnace fire for yours!"

On the other hand, no style of art is so fascinating to occidental minds. The daintiness of conception, the charm of color, the spring-time freshness of atmosphere that pervades each and every effort of the oriental workman possesses a charm.

As I have said, the scheme must be studied, the symbols learned; but to the dilettante this is ever a wellspring of pleasure, and one that will never go dry.

"The system of threes" or of "ones," once learned, captivates the fancy—for things artistic are nothing if not fanciful in this oriental land—and holds the imagination in spite of oneself. The art-etiquette, so to speak, of a Japanese interior is enchanting, when one has learned it. There is only one bunch of flowers—sometimes only a single expressive blossom—in a room. There is but one picture. But this oneness must be at just such a time and in just such a place. Can you not understand why? Love is not always responsive to love's demands. Solitude, at times, is sweeter and more to be desired. So the picture is hung; the flower placed.

Every flower has a meaning. Certain flowers must never be seen together. Certain others must never be seen apart. Then, again, everything goes in threes—blossoms, boughs, or sprays. Even furniture has a meaning. The details of this etiquette are endless and, to the occidental mind, bewildering unless one "has imagination," or at least an esthetic sense to which its poetic features can appeal.

When I Got Into a Jiu-Giki-Sha.

In the matter of coloring alone Japanese art leads the world; the secret is their own. Their silden, etc., notably those by Kimbei, Japan's greatest colorist, are unsurpassed by any heretofore attempted.

Though Japan is the land of beautiful bric-a-brac, none is ever displayed. The precious vase, rich with gorgeous lacquer; the picture, beautiful with poetic symbols; the carving, that has taken years of patient conning to create, these are never displayed on wall or cabinet, but locked away in safe or storeroom to be brought out as a special honor to guest or visitor whose coming their host wishes to celebrate with the highest rites of eastern hospitality.

"If we had our precious treasures always before our eyes," they say, "they would then become too common, and we should tire of them, and that must never be!"

HURT HOME TRADE

WHAT GREEDY, SHORT-SIGHTED PEOPLE DO.

WAYS THAT KILL CUSTOM

Fair Treatment by Tradesman Assists in Building Up Towns and Increases Business for All.

One of the troubles in small towns seems to be that petty jealousies keep the business men from working in harmony. There is just so much business to be had, and it either goes to the home stores, the mail order houses, the department stores or some nearby city, or perhaps is let go to a more progressive neighboring town. It should be the aim of every town to make its trade territory as large as possible. It is the attitude of the business men that counts. One good, live man in business in a small town is a benefit to the whole place. He brings trade to all. People are swayed to and fro by opinions that are formed sometimes without careful reasoning. It is the best policy to treat each and every one fairly and honestly.

Let the average farmer think that he has been given the worst end of a bargain, and he will ponder over the matter for years. It is not a good idea for a merchant to have a scale of prices for different customers. Charge John Jones $12 for a suit of clothes, and sell the same suit to his neighbor, Jim Smith, for $11, and Jones will find it out and feel that he has been treated unfairly, and Jones is right about it, too. There is one town, a county seat, in a western state, a place of nearly 3,000 population. Its trade territory extends for a dozen miles in each direction. The country has a large foreign population. They are the best classes of customers, liberal buyers and not quibblers over prices. Still, they desire just treatment. A few years ago thousands of dollars in trade was diverted from the town through a dealer in agricultural implements being a poor business man. A wealthy German purchased from him several hundred dollars' worth of agricultural machinery, wagons and other goods. The farmer wanted a harrow. A price was made—$33. A few days later the farmer was at a town where there were but two stores and an elevator. He saw the same kind of harrow and was told that $28.50 would buy it. He visited the county seat a few days later, called on the man from whom he purchased his implements and again asked the price of the harrow, and was told the same as before. He then stated that the same make and kind of harrow had been offered him for $4.50 less. After some talk he was told that he could have the piece of machinery for the same price. He did not take it, but secured the one offered him by the man in the smaller town. He did not like the style of the dealer in the larger town. In fact, he concluded that the other storekeepers of the place were of the same caliber. He quit trading, and not alone was his trade lost to the county seat town, but the trade of a score of his neighbors, and even they changed their post office addresses to the smaller place. The trade of this one farmer lost to the county seat was the means of building up a healthy trade in the smaller town and bringing to it other business places.

Nonprogressive People.

A commercial club, a business men's association or whatever it may be called, that is useful in furthering the interests of any city or town is a highly useful organization. The field for work is unlimited. Its extent is only limited to the power of the members to act and accomplish. One of the chief aims of all such associations should be to advance the varied interests of the towns in which they are started. Sometimes these organizations fail in their purpose because they are not started rightly. Some person who has nothing to do but collect rent, pay his money for supplies to some mail order house, and collect interest from the bank, or the ones whose property is mortgaged to him, is made the president, or given a place on the executive board. What is the result? The club goes under. Its usefulness has been destroyed even before its organization. The only successful clubs are the ones that are under the control of the live business men of the towns, who have made their money by their business connections and who depend upon the growth of the town for their continued success. Keep the knocker out of the commercial club. He is sure to be a disturbing factor. His place in the club affords him a place to further his own selfish interests, which in ninety-nine cases out of the hundred is in keeping back every enterprise that will possibly increase his taxes.

Giving Bonuses.

The giving of a bonus to gain trade is prima facie evidence that the dealer is selling goods at a price which affords the giving away of a portion of his profits. Would it not be better to reduce the price, and with the saving to the customer he could buy whatever he wants? But the people want something for nothing, and think that they are getting it when they pay ten or fifteen per cent more than they should for goods, and in recognition of their deals receive a coupon or ticket for some article valued at about half the extra money they paid the dealer. As long as people figure this way, it seems that their wants must be satisfied.

PRICES OF COMMODITIES.

"Labor Should Reap Its Reward" Is the Key-Note of Commerce.

The matter of prices and profit is always interesting, not alone to retailers of merchandise, but to consumers as well. There has been nothing that has been so troublesome to every class as the matter of prices. It is all easy, there is no great problem to solve, and it all rests in the little phrase, "labor should reap its reward." Cost is an all important thing in every product. There is the raw material, the expense of putting the manufactured article in mercantile form. It matters not what the product is, it is the expense of preparing it for the consumer, the price of the raw material, cost of manufacture and distribution that counts. Allowance must be made for an equitable compensation to all having a part in the production of any article of commerce. We hear of cut prices, of cheapness in this or that staple, but when it is given consideration, where is the cheapness? Every article has or should have a standard value. There is no good reason why the worker in the shop should not have fair and equitable compensation for his labor. The manufacturer who has thousands of capital invested should have interest and pay for his time; the men who places the product in the hands of the retailer is entitled to pay according to his ability as a salesman, and the retailer should have equitable interest on the capital he has invested and compensation for his time and labor. Here you have all in a nutshell. The elimination of the middleman destroys one of the established customs and industries. When any article of commerce is placed on the market at a lower price than cost of manufacture and the expense of placing it before the consumer, somebody is the loser. Here is food for reflection, and it behooves the merchants and consumers to think the matter over.

THE OLD HITCHING POST.

It May Be Useful, but Is Unsightly and Generally a Town Nuisance.

That good old hitching post! What a familiar object to all of us who had the good fortune to be reared near a country town. Still, while tender memories hang around the old post, there is much about it at times worthy of condemnation. There is nothing that makes a main street of a small town look so shabby and thoroughly countrified and heck-woodish as a row of rickety old hitching posts on each side of the street. Constant tramping and pawing near them makes holes in the ground, unsightly mud-holes, in damp weather and ill-smelling and offensive in numerous respects. It may appear a bit of enterprise on the part of the merchant to erect a number of posts in front of his store, but does he gain business by it? How often do you see Farmer Shortcrop drive in, tie his team to the post in front of Smith's store and go over to Green's to do his trading? As long as hitching posts are allowed to occupy places in front of stores on main streets it will be impossible to keep the streets in the neat and good condition that they should be in. Far better to have a some unoccupied street within easy reach of the business sections posts where the farmers can hitch their teams. Every town which has the power to control its own affairs should make regulations that will keep the hitching post from "ornamenting" the main streets.

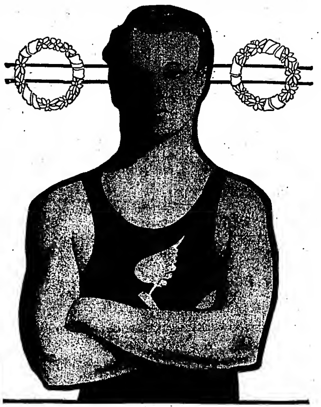
Merit vs. Prizes.

Premium schemes and prize offerings held out as bait to the people to get them to use certain brands of goods should be very carefully considered. The most common plan is the certificate deal, by which is promised some article represented to be worth the total amount paid for goods, if only a certain number be saved. Common business sense assures that when such a proposition is made the goods must be of an inferior quality, or that there is a catch somewhere. Goods of merit do not have to carry a prize in order that they be in demand. People are quick to buy goods of merit, particularly in the staple line, if they know of them. Of the standard brands of foodstuffs, of cigars, of thread, of different other things, how many are giving prizes? This is not the case with numerous classes of goods that are sold with a premium attachment. Most of them are of inferior quality and the price paid for them more than covers the cost of the premium given. It is the old glimmer of getting something for nothing, and the women who want trading stamps, or a prize with their purchases, pay pretty dearly "for their whistles."

Unwise Competition.

There cannot be a doubt but that competition stimulates trade; but trade is the natural outgrowth of civilization and found its origin when intelligent man discovered that he had a few wants, and that they could be supplied by commodities others possessed and which he did not have himself, and that he had a surplus of things that he could trade for articles others had and which he needed. Thus it can be seen that want, demand, supply, all go to make up that which is the life of trade. Competition is merely an indication of a man's ambition to excel his neighbor, to gain more in barter and trade than what would in ordinary chance come to him. It is merely to seek, to reach out after things desired. From the fact that 90 per cent. of those who engage in the mercantile business fail, it seems more appropriate to say that competition, unhealthy and not directed by sound judgment, instead of being the life of trade, is one of its fatal diseases.

SETS NEW WORLD'S SWIMMING MARK



Charles M. Daniels of the New York Athletic club broke the world's record for the 80-yard swim, covering the distance with three turns in 43 seconds flat at Madison Square garden in New York city recently. The previous record of 43 2-5 seconds was held by Daniels and was made at Duquesne garden, Pittsburg, on April 21, 1907. The new record was made in a match race with C. D. Trubenbach of the New York Athletic club, who had a handicap start of five seconds, but was beaten by five or six inches by Daniels. Daniels holds nearly every record of any importance in this country and several world's swimming marks.

CHICAGO ATHLETIC BOARD VOTES FOR SEVEN GAMES

Maroon Football Team, However, Will Play Only Six Games Next Fall.

Seven football games are assured the conference colleges for next fall. The University of Chicago board of physical culture and athletics cast the deciding vote in favor of the lengthened schedule the other day, with the provision that the Maroons themselves will play not more than six games and that all the "big eight" schools must revert to five games next season.

The Maroon board's action was embodied in two resolutions, the net result of which concedes the big point desired by the majority of the colleges and at the same time places Chicago in the position of partially "standing pat" on what it has urged for the last year. Following are the two complicated opinions expressed by the Midway savants:

This board consents to a schedule of seven games for next year, only with the understanding that the schedule revert thereafter to five games and with the further understanding that any college may play less than the schedule number.

Voted, that in accordance with recommendation of Director Stagg, the University of Chicago will play not to exceed six games next season.

According to the board members, the resolution restricting Chicago to six games was the result of a telegram received just before the meeting from Coach Stagg. Coach Stagg requested that Chicago should "play six games," and the board then took action limiting the Maroon contests to this figure. Dr. Alonzo K. Parker of the board announced that the professors wished to have it emphasized that this limitation was placed by Coach Stagg's desire.

The Maroon schedule will probably include an eastern game by virtue of the six-game privilege, with Cornell the most likely one to get the date at present. Minnesota and Wisconsin are already on the schedule, and Indiana, Purdue and Illinois probably will get the other games.

The Maroon board did not put itself on record as to the reasons for its change in favor of the lengthened schedule, beyond the cryptic statement of one of the members that "conditions are now changed and certain barriers have disappeared." The rooters are inclined to think the barrier referred to was the presence of Michigan in the conference at the last meeting.

The understanding that the colleges must play but five games again next year will not come up until after next fall, according to Dr. Parker, and the provision will thus be no bar to the 1908 schedule.

Wisconsin and Northwestern, the minority leaders who voted against five games, are both thought likely to play less than the legal number this year.

"Sandow" Mertes to Boss Denvers.

"Sandow" Mertes has been engaged to manage the Denver baseball team of the Western league the coming season. He had a nonreserve contract with Minneapolis last season and consequently is at liberty to take advantage of the Denver club's offer.

Dexter to Manage Des Moines.

President J. F. Higgins of the Des Moines Western league club has signed Charlie Dexter, the Chicago ball player, to manage his team. Dexter succeeds Mike Kelley, who will manage the Toronto Eastern league team.

SPORTING FACTS AND FANCIES

When "Kid" Nichols, the old pitcher, said Johnny Kling of the Chicago National league team, the world's champions, was the greatest catcher that ever lived he started something. Manager Hugh Jennings immediately took issue with Nichols and not only said that Kling was not the best, but claimed he wasn't even second best. Nor even third best. Worse yet, that he could name four men who were better than Kling. Chicago fans think Johnny outclasses any catcher playing to-day as well as any old-timer that can be named. Of course, there is no way to prove that he is better than the old boys, because they can't be measured up in actual competition. The quartet that Jennings named included Charlie Bennett, "Buck" Ewing, "Duke" Farrell and William Robinson. Kling's greatest admirers will admit that Jennings picked out some live ones, for the names of those four fellows will be fresh in the minds of baseball fans for many years to come. All of Jennings' selections were excellent catchers and exceptionally hard hitters, averaging up better than Kling in the batting department. But then it must be remembered there was more hitting in those days. There were any number of .400 hitters—something unheard of these days—so allowance has to be made for the difference in the pitching, the fielders' gloves and mitts and the manner in which batsmen's weaknesses are discovered. Jennings sort of admitted that Kling was the best of all present-day catchers. Otherwise he would have named somebody now in the game who in his opinion could beat Kling as a catcher. As a rule, Kling is regarded as the most valuable man on the Cub team, because he is so wonderfully clever in a position that has so few really high-class stars. He is always on the alert and a most potent factor in keeping down the runs. If Kling has ever had any superiors or has any to-day, the Cub fans don't believe it.

Gossip of Washington

What Is Going On at the National Capital.

Red Tape of the District Government

WASHINGTON.—Don't give a policeman a present, particularly money, unless you want it to get moss-covered and rusty with age before he is permitted to receive it. There is red tape and formality in the District government, particularly that branch governing the police department, which calls for much routine before any employe can receive anything from a citizen until it has been investigated and marked "approved" several times.

More than two months ago a much petted and loved Angora cat suddenly disappeared. There was gloom about the place for more than a month. Then the clouds parted and the sun shone again.

Policeman Stott was responsible for the uplifting of the gloom. It was he who, while prying about dark alleys and on vacant lots, found the wandering Thomas. As a reward for Stott's great act of kindness the cat's owner shoved a crisp dollar bill in the officer's hand as he relieved him of the pet.

Aside from being a brave and courageous policeman, Stott is a stickler for duty, and after receiving the dollar he hurried to the commander of his precinct, Capt. Boyle, and told him of his good fortune.

This was the starting point of the big ball of red tape that was to wind around that crisp dollar bill before Private Stott could really call it his own.

The next day Maj. Sylvester received a letter from Capt. Boyle relating the facts in the case. Capt. Boyle in turn forwarded the document to Commissioner West.

After carefully reading the communication and looking up the laws upon the subject Commissioner West placed his stamp of approval on the document. The paper was sent to Commissioner Macfarland and Commissioner Morrow in turn, who, after due official consideration, followed the example of Commissioner West and gave their rubber-stamped approval.

Then the jacketed document started upon its return journey, and some day Stott will get his dollar.

Best Woman Campaigner at the Capital

MRS. BIRD SEGLE M'GUIRE, wife of the dean of the delegation representing in congress the new state of Oklahoma, has the unique reputation for being the best campaigner of her sex in the official circle at the national capital. It is even claimed that to her tact and cleverness is due no slight part of her husband's political success. The voting records of Oklahoma as a territory seem to bear out this claim, for they tell of his winning his first public office by a majority of two, the year in which the lady who was destined to become his wife, but who was then unknown to him, cast her maiden vote along with that of her mother, for him as district attorney of the county in which they both resided. Since their marriage Mrs. McGuire has campaigned with her husband from one end of their adopted commonwealth to the other and entered upon the social duties of her position in Washington with the same enthusiasm when in the last days of its territorialism Oklahoma sent Mr. McGuire to plead her statehood cause in the lower house of congress.

Long afternoons were spent scattering her own and her husband's cards everywhere official etiquette required—and sometimes where it did not—if only the opportunity offered a chance for her making a friend for the would-be youngest state in the union. Moreover, she never failed to be in the family gallery of the "big house on the hill" whenever there was anything on the tapis concerning the future of Oklahoma. Thus, for four years she watched the rise and fall of the statehood hope of that vast section of the middle west for many years marked "Indian Territory" on the map of the United States, and which was finally admitted to Uncle Sam's bosom.

Humor of Reporter Fails to Please

A COUPLE of weeks ago one Jimhsy, a gentle reportorial soul, who has drunk deep of the milk of human kindness, and who is never happier than when plucking the blushing violet from its sheltering nook and putting it on the pan, decided it was up to him to do a good deed. So he looked around for a mark and finally selected one, James S. Davenport of the Third Oklahoma district, a first-termer and a hard worker.

So in due course of time there appeared in print a highly veracious account of how James S. Davenport of the Third Oklahoma district, finding in front of his door in the house office building two bulging bundles of what he supposed were public documents, seized them, lugged them into the seclusion of his office and, by the judicious use of the franking privilege, sent them broadcast throughout his district.

Then, in throbbing minor tones, the story told of the astonishment, disappointment and chagrin of James S. Davenport of the Third Oklahoma district when he learned that in his well-meant effort to hand his constituency all the unattached public documents in Washington he had inadvertently flooded his district with the monthly issue of the local telephone directory.

Mr. Davenport hopes eventually to be able to tell each of his constituents personally, or over his own unforgeable signature, that the tale of the telephone directories was an outrageous, malicious and unqualified shorter and uglier word. He is working at the job right now.

And while James S. Davenport of the Third Oklahoma district writes letters, one Jimhny, a gentle reporterial soul, is waiting for the thanks that never came.

Senate Seat Number 23 Proves a Hoodoo

SUPERSTITION in the senate? Read this story of "23."

Senator Wetmore of Rhode Island occupied seat No. 23 on the Republican side. After a long and bitter contest in which he was opposed by two Republicans, the legislature of his state on the twenty-third day of the month gave up the effort to elect and adjourned, leaving a vacancy and Wetmore out of the senate.

The new legislature tried it again this winter and Wetmore was chosen to succeed himself. He was elected in time to be sworn in on January 23, but respectfully declined and waited several days.

His resumption of his seat gave the senate a full membership—92 senators, the largest in its history.

Now, it is a tradition—not a superstition, of course, of the senate that whenever that body has a full membership, which doesn't often happen and never continues long, there will presently be a senatorial death. This has been the experience so many times that the exceptions are forgotten. So when Wetmore came in the probability of a death was whispered about. Twenty-three days elapsed between the day of Wetmore's resumption of his seat and the day Senator Latimer of South Carolina died.

Senator Wetmore, by reason of being out of the senate for some months, had the luck to lose seat 23. That seat was drawn by Senator Kittredge of South Dakota, who would now be occupying it but for the fact that he is staying at home to look after his interests in a desperate campaign for control of the next legislature. Gov. Crawford wants the senator's seat and the 23 story has done a good deal to convince senators that Kittredge's days of statesmanship are numbered.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

ILLINOIS OFFICIAL WEDS

Lawrence Yates Sherman, lieutenant governor of Illinois, who was quietly married the other day to Miss Mary Estelle Spitter, left orders that no public mention should be made of the affair. The orders were obeyed until the smoke of Mr. Sherman's train died away, and then the telephone exchange and telegraph wires were crowded with messages announcing the gladsome tidings.

The wedding explains the mysterious visits which the lieutenant governor has been making to Effingham, where it had been reported he owned a farm. It also explains lavish orders left with the tailors. Sherman had led a life almost monastic. For years his home was a room in a lodging house.

Genial and sociable among men, he has been known to put himself to all manner of personal inconveniences to escape any gathering that approached formality.

Sherman has the gift of invective oratory. He is a politician with a memory. Just to indicate how well Mr. Sherman can bide his time and hit back when the opportunity comes, it may be related that in 1905 Senators Cullom and Hopkins, being desirous to break up the big four—Deneen, Hamlin, Yates and Sherman—who had controlled the state convention of 1904, offered Sherman a place on the interstate commerce commission. The work appealed to him and he agreed to accept. Then the two senators fell down in their attempt to deliver the office to him. President Roosevelt said flatly that he did not intend to have federal offices traded about and that he wanted a lawyer and not a politician for the place.

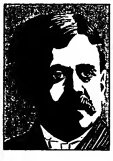
Sherman apparently ignored this affront to his self-esteem. In 1907 the two senators, thinking that it was up to them to "make good" with something or other, secured an option on a place in the Spanish claims commission, and offered it to Sherman. He allowed the two misguided senators to secure his appointment, and have it announced from Washington. Then he rejected it, and the score was even.

WHIPS ZAKKA KHELS

Gen. Sir James Willcocks, who has brought the punitive expedition against the Zakka Khels, a tribe of Afridis on the frontier of India, to a brilliant conclusion by destroying their forts and villages, killing several hundreds of their fighting men and ravaging the country, has had more experience in that kind of warfare than almost any man alive to-day. He was only 22 when the Leinster regiment, to which he belonged, was ordered out on the second Afghan campaign, and the young soldier so distinguished himself that he was mentioned in dispatches. Willcocks was second in command of the West African frontier force in 1896, and was taken thence to accompany the Borgu expedition of 1898. Then he went back to his old post and took command of the Ashanti field force, and was at the relief of Coomassie in 1900. He was also with the field force in South Africa, and has since been repelling minor raids upon India by the restless tribes in the mountains.

The campaign which he has just brought to a successful termination has been in as difficult a country as ever he penetrated. There is said to be not a single square yard of level ground in the whole country, but on every side rise ridges of mountains littered with rocks behind which the expert riflemen can sit and pick off the advancing troops at ranges of from 600 to 700 yards. That the natives are expert shots is not surprising, as in that land of blood feuds a man's life often depends upon his quickness on the trigger and his straight shooting. That Gen. Willcocks has been able to take an expedition of 9,000 men through such a country with only a trifling loss will probably win him further honors from this government.

BROWNLOW RENOMINATED



Representative Walter P. Brownlow has been unanimously renominated for the Sixty-first congress. Mr. Brownlow had no opposition at all, there being no other man in his district who even so much as whispered that he wanted the job, consequently the congressional committee of the First Tennessee district, under the primary laws of Tennessee, named Mr. Brownlow as the nominee.

The First district is that which was represented from 1843 to 1853 by the late President Andrew Johnson. Mr. Brownlow has already beaten that record by four years, and this renomination puts him in line for a total of 16 years' straightaway service in the house. Incidentally Mr. Brownlow's district has the one absolutely loyal and consistent Republican constituency in the whole south.

Mr. Brownlow has had a long service in public life. He was postmaster at his home town of Jonesboro in 1881 and resigned to accept the doorkeepership of the house of representatives of the Forty-seventh congress. In 1884, 1896, 1900 and 1904 he was elected by the delegation from his state to the national convention as Tennessee's member of the Republican national committee. He was elected by congress a member of the board of managers for the National Soldiers' home for disabled volunteer soldiers, was twice the Republican nominee for United States senator and has had a seat under the dome since the Fifty-fifth congress.

PROMINENT CANADIAN

Hon. William S. Fielding, the father of the Canadian government scheme to enter into competition with the life insurance companies by issuing government annuities, a measure which he hopes to put in operation next year, is looked upon as the natural successor to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the premier. Mr. Fielding has had the most rapid rise of any man in public life in Canada to-day. He was a newspaperman in Halifax, N. S., and resigned that in 1882 to go into politics. He was elected to the provincial legislature to represent Halifax city and county, and in a few months was taken into the cabinet. Two years later he was premier of the province, and remained so until 1896, when Sir Wilfrid called him to Ottawa to enter the Dominion government as minister of finance.

One of Mr. Fielding's first duties was the revision of the Canadian tariff and the drawing up of a preferential tariff with the mother country. This involved the denunciation by Britain of the trade treaty with Germany which gave the latter "the most favored nation" treatment. Germany retaliated on Canada by raising her tariff, and it fell to Mr. Fielding to devise methods of retaliation on Germany. He seems to have been fairly successful. He was a representative of Canada at the colonial conference in London in 1902, and it was from suggestions made by him at that conference and previously that Joseph Chamberlain drew up the scheme of inter-imperial free trade which split up the Conservative party in Britain and caused the return of the Liberals at the last election.

Talk of New York

Gossip of People and Events Told in Interesting Manner.

Wealthy Widow Seeks Re-Press Agent

NEW YORK.—Mrs. George Law, the young and wealthy widow who has the unique distinction of being accounted a beauty according to the standards of London, Paris and New York, is the first society woman to start a crusade against publicity. The central figure of stories ranging from the latest fad to the newest suitor, Mrs. Law has revolted.

The beauty, who has been harassed by the constant attention attracted by her grace and dash ever since 1894, when at 18 she became the bride of 50-year-old George Law, was about a year and a half ago the guest of the Reggie Vanderbilts at Sandy Point farm. Mrs. Vanderbilt fell ill, and Mrs. Law's devotion to her friend in the sick room, followed by the breaking of her own health, caused an enormous increase in the mention of her name. She had regarded the record of her social doings as one of the penalties that all society folk must undergo, but what touched her more personal feelings became intensely disagreeable.

It was then that she began her search for her "re-press" agent. It had been well known that the anecdotes from Paris, where Mrs. Law's hospitality in the Avenue d'Antin had a tremendous vogue, had seriously troubled the petite beauty. Her reported engagements were among these, the Maharajah of Kapurthala being announced as one of the favored, among whom were Craig Wadsworth and Norman Whitehouse, not to mention an Egyptian khedive, a French count and an Austrian prince.

Then there was the account of her love affair with Gerald Lefevre Pontalis, a son of the president of the French Cable company, who was credited with jilting her.

Mrs. Law's pertinacity in the suppression of all details of her plans has succeeded. The young woman to whom she first offered $2,500 for this delicate office was unable to accept the position, but from the moment of her return from her American trip it has been noticeable that the descriptions of Mrs. Law's gowns and entertainments, her friends and her pets, her daring escapades and her many lovers, have grown less and less.

Mrs. Law's friends still see her, but the mere fact that she has been in New York since last October, a guest at the Hotel Manhattan, and that her presence has passed practically unnoticed is a potent sign of the times.

Fred T. Martin, New Leader of the 400

STAGE manager for the 400 practically covers the responsibility of Frederick Townsend Martin, upon whose shoulders the mantle of the late Ward McAllister has fallen as the new ruler in society.

The job isn't what it used to be. McAllister was the only real simon pure "ruler" the 400 has ever acknowledged. For a time the antics of Harry Lehr were amusing, and some of his innovations became temporary fads. His best efforts, however, amounted to little more than buffoonery.

Martin, the new leader, has arranged several rather elaborate entertainments this season. In one Mrs. Howard Gould participated. In another, more recent, Mrs. James B. Eustis created a mild sensation by appearing as Salome with a live python coiled about her neck. In still another Kyrle Bellew and Mme. Nordica appeared.

McAllister was exclusive and autocratic in the extreme. Martin is more democratic. He has displayed a rare tact in bringing talent and society together on at least speaking terms.

Martin is independently wealthy. Heretofore his chief claim to distinction was his being a brother-in-law of Mrs. Bradley-Martin, who gave a ball several years ago which became the talk of two continents.

In New York he resides at the Plaza hotel. Usually he spends the winter at Palm Beach. He is a member of the leading New York clubs and of the Marlborough club of London.

Turkish Bath Luncheon Now the Latest

A NUMBER of the smart set pulled off a stunt the other day that will make monkey dinners and Teddy bear tees take to the tall timbers. It was a Turkish bath luncheon. Mrs. E. Sankey Jones, the well-known clubwoman, started the fad by inviting 17 presidents of the various women's clubs to come and bathe with her. The scene of the festival was the Hotel Prince George bathrooms, and there in kimonos fair feminity held revel. It was really a very exclusive as well as novel affair, for the swellest ladies came to the annual washday.

Autos called for each guest and brought her to the hotel. Here they quickly disrobed, donned kimonos, and the Turkish bath luncheon was on. The first part of the entertainment provided was the "Swedish movement" avoirdupois cure. Elaborate machinery, whose effect was as of trotting and galloping horses, whirling bicycles or rolling ships at sea, was turned upon the unprotected figures of the guests. Then after immersing in the tub for awhile they assembled in the dining-room, where a dainty luncheon was spread.

But before the fair dames were allowed to eat they were severely lectured on the antipathy of the American woman to a real cleansing bath. The kimonoed guests then sat around and talked of how to be attractive though 40. After the chat the ladies retired to their dressing-rooms and went to sleep.

Hotel Where Rigorous Rules Prevail

IN the midst of New York's district of trade and traffic—near Astor place—is a "family hotel," managed by a woman, that has finer and subtler distinctions than any mere man in the business can ever hope to attain.

For more than 60 years this hotel has been in the hands of one family, the present owner being the third generation to entertain patrons of the highest social standing.

All the furnishings speak of gentility and the fine points of decorum. The pictures are prints of famous cathedrals and buildings of antiquity. This is most seemly, as here many famous divines and bishops of the Episcopal church stay during convocations and important church gatherings.

The halls have marble floors, and in the parlors are chairs and settees of solid rosewood and mahogany, family possessions of more than a century. A silver stand for cards takes the place of the combouret. Gas is used for illumination; electricity would be a concession to the cheap haste of the age. For the same reason the telephone does not disturb the restful composure of the establishment.

Applications for accommodations are rigidly investigated. Respectability is taken for granted. Stability of character is the point most considered. No person given to levity or giddiness of conversation may ever hope to have a favorable response to an application for admission. To all such the answer is that all the rooms are occupied, which is usually a fact. The waiting list is longer than that for membership in a popular club. So careful is the scrutiny of all applicants that a discordant note is never heard. Once admitted to the house it is for life on good behavior.

The Chase for Titles.

At least 50 titles, more or less authentic, have been captured by American woman in France. How many are real? A good proportion. Others are papal; others merely assumed. Since titles were abolished in France the "aristocracy" has increased fivefold. There are five times as many dukes, counts and all that in republican France to-day, as there were in the royal France of old. They spring up like mushrooms. There is no law against your butcher assuming the title of the Marquis de Tete de Veau if it so pleases him. And, therefore, comes it that many a girl does not get what she pays for—poor child! However, authentic titles—registered in the Almanach de Gotha—are going cheap these days, declares Vance Thompson, in New Broadway Magazine. One of the best-known American women in Paris makes an excellent living as a marriage broker. I have seen one of her lists which was brought to the attention of a girl with money—money made, curiously enough, out of wooden toothpicks. Among the titled men offered to the wooden toothpick heiress were the Duc de Montmorency, the Count de Chateaubriand and the Prince de Lecca. She hasn't chosen yet. I recommended the Prince de Lecca. He is of the Corsican branch of the Colonnas and has been trying to marry an American girl for years and years. Of course, he has no money, but the title is a good one. He 's known as the Knight of the Sorrowful Visage; and he writes verses. "Take him," I said to the heiress. "Why?" she asked. "Because he looks like a toothpick;" but she didn't like the reason.

Men Who Think.

When a man makes a serious blunder, or discovers that he has engaged in an unprofitable enterprise, his excuse is, "I didn't think." He should have reflected on his enterprise before engaging in it. It is the duty of every man to think. Thinking is the important thing in business. Every man should take from five to fifty minutes each day and divorce his mind from the strenuous activity surrounding him and devote the time to thought. The brain is like the muscle; it must have exercise, or it becomes flabby. Cultivate concentration of thought; study your sphere of usefulness; cut out the weeds that grow in your brain; get out of the mental rut you are in; stop drifting; keep your brain active. Men are paid for either what they think or what they do with their muscles, says the New York Weekly. Man's muscles have a limit; he can move just so much matter by physical force, but by thinking he has unlimited possibilities. The world offers golden prizes to the man who thinks. You can cultivate your brain; you can make it expand. The brain is like a plant. Nourish it, cultivate it, care for it, and it will grow. The man who thinks is the man who succeeds.

"There are a number of cattish men in this world. Their yowl is audible around public places frequently," remarks an editorial writer in the Washington Post, in the course of an article defending woman from the assertion that all women are cats. While placing men in the same class may not be much of a defense of the gentler sex it is encouraging to see that there are men broad enough to espy the small failings of their own sex. After all, cattishness is only an expression of these attributes—envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness—and from their attacks the so-called stronger sex is not immune.

When the Bank of England note returns to the bank it is never re-issued. It is canceled by having the signature of the chief cashier torn off. After the signatures are torn off the notes are pricked off in the register and sorted into the dates of issue. They are then placed in boxes in the vaults, where they are kept for five years, after which they are burned in a furnace placed in a courtyard.

They hear in Paris that Germany may buy the Philippines. That Paris rumor factory is turning out a mighty poor product these days. It should get a new foreman. The raw material he is using appears to be all right. That is to say, it is raw enough to suit the most fastidious taste. The finished product, however, causes even the serious-minded to smile.

A man in Brooklyn laughed so heartily over a joke that it killed him. This is the sarcasm of fate. There are repeated cases on record of people laughing themselves to death, but whoever heard of ill-natured persons dying of a grouch? Yet the latter kind could be so much more easily spared.

Some persons are curious to know where Mrs. Hetty Green kept all those millions she had on hand to lend to needy capitalists during the financial stringency in New York city.

LOVES ANOTHER; KILLS WIFE

MILWAUKEE MAN CHLOROFORMS AND SHOOTS HIS SPOUSE.

Badly Wounds Himself—Tells Police Story of Twenty Years of Domestic Unhappiness.

Milwaukee.—George Willoughby, manager of the Jewett & Sherman company, coffee and spice millers, early Friday morning chloroformed and then shot and killed his wife, Florence Willoughby, at their home on Prospect avenue. After the murder Willoughby fired two shots over his heart. Physicians believe he will recover as he has a vigorous constitution.

Willoughby made a full confession to the police, in substance as follows:

"I married my wife 20 years ago. I did not love her, but married her mostly out of sympathy, she being a poor woman. We frequently quarreled. Mrs. Willoughby was insanely jealous of me. She continually accused me of not being true to her and on the whole we both lived a miserable existence. Matters went on this way for years. Four years ago while I was on my way to New York I met a woman on the train. Our acquaintance ripened into love. Then for the first time I realized I had met a woman I truly loved. This woman also was living an unhappy life. Her husband was cruel to her, and soon after I met her he deserted her and her two small children. I then began to support her. We became intimate, and have been so for several years. Two years ago she obtained a divorce, and since that time I have been providing for her and her children. She is living in Chicago.

"My domestic affairs did not improve, and a long time ago I decided that I would end it all. I began to collect chloroform. I bought it in small lots, and began to keep it until I had a bottle of the drug. Friday, after my wife had fallen asleep, I obtained the chloroform and then I shot her. I then fired two shots into my breast, intending to shoot myself in the heart, but I failed. I did not have any more cartridges."

HEAVY DAMAGE AT PITTSBURG.

Flood, However, Is Not So Serious as Had Been Expected.

Pittsburg, Pa.—A feeling of relief swept over Pittsburg and vicinity early Thursday night when officials of the United States weather bureau announced that conditions had suddenly changed and that the flood which came upon the city with unusual suddenness in the morning would not be as serious as they had expected.

However, the flood will be attended by enormous loss, much of which has already been inflicted. The rise came with such suddenness that there was not time to remove goods and take other precautions such as saved property of enormous value a few weeks ago. Many families are prisoners in their homes and are being furnished food and other necessities by the flood patrol. Railroads are delayed and crippled and heavy losers of property. River craft have suffered severely.

THOMAS TO SUCCEED EVANS.

Rear Admiral Sperry Will Bring Battleships Home.

Washington.—At Admiral Evans' personal request he will be relieved of the command of the battleship fleet on reaching San Francisco. Rear Admiral Thomas, the next in seniority, will succeed Admiral Evans in command of the fleet.

Rear Admiral Charles S. Sperry will bring the battleship fleet from San Francisco to the Atlantic coast by way of the Suez canal. This detail was announced by Secretary Metcalf late Tuesday.

Admiral Evans will retain command of the fleet until after the grand naval review to be held at San Francisco May 8. The admiral retires in August. It is expected he will return at once to Washington. Secretary Metcalf said, however, that he had no special duty in mind for the admiral between his relinquishment of command and the date of his retirement. Rear Admiral Thomas, who will succeed Admiral Evans in command until the homeward journey begins, is scheduled to retire in October. When he relinquishes the command to Admiral Sperry it is expected that he also will return to Washington. The vacancies caused by the retirement of Admirals Evans and Thomas will be filled by the promotion to that rank of Capts. Seaton, Schroeder and Richard Wainwright, each of whom now commands a battleship in the fleet.

NEW LIABILITY ACT ASSURED.

Speaker Cannon Tells Labor Delegation Bill Will Pass.

Washington.—Speaker Cannon and Vice-President Fairbanks Thursday announced their belief that the present congress will pass an employers' liability act which will meet and overcome the unconstitutionalities of the present law pointed out by the supreme court of the United States in a recent decision.

These statements were made unreservedly by Speaker Cannon, and guardedly by the vice-president to a delegation, led by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, from 87 national and international trade and labor organizations and farmers' organizations assembled in a national conference in this city. The delegation called on the speaker to lay before the house of representatives, through him, a memorial entitled "Labor's Protest to Congress."

ASKS MERCY FOR ORCHARD.

Judge Pronounces Death Sentence But Recommends Commutation.

Caldwell, Idaho.—Harry Orchard was sentenced to death Wednesday for the series of murders the confession of which shocked the world. But after all he may not pay the penalty which since his conversion in prison he has not turned a hand to escape.

Stating that he believed Orchard in his testimony in the trials of William D. Haywood and George A. Pettibone for the murder of ex-Gov. Frank Steunenberg told the exact truth, attempting to conceal nothing, Judge Wood recommended that the state board of pardons commute Orchard's sentence of death to imprisonment in the penitentiary. The sentence of death was pronounced in accordance with the plea of guilty entered by Orchard Tuesday of last week, when he was arraigned.

FLEET TO VISIT JAPAN

EMPEROR'S CORDIAL INVITATION TO ISLAND ACCEPTED.

CHINA MAY COME NEXT

Any Other Bids Probably Will Be Declined—New Itinerary Is Being Arranged in Washington.

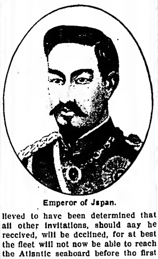
Washington.—The American battleship fleet is to visit Japan. The desire of the emperor of the island kingdom to play host to the "big sixteen" was laid before Secretary Root Thursday by Baron Takahira, the Japanese ambassador.

The invitation which was couched in most cordial terms, was made the subject of extended consideration by President Roosevelt and his entire cabinet Friday. Secretary Root was directed to accept the invitation and the acceptance was laid before the Japanese ambassador late in the day.

It is regarded in official circles here as more than likely that China will be next to bid for a look at the fleet, and that should this be the case the invitation would be accepted.

New Itinerary Being Planned.

Secretary Metcalf and Admiral Pillsbury, chief of navigation, are arranging the details of the new itinerary. With the exception of China, it is believed to have been determined that all other invitations, should any be received, will be declined, for at best the fleet will not now be able to reach the Atlantic seaboard before the first of next March.



Emperor of Japan.

The itinerary which seems to be the most direct includes stops at the Hawaiian islands, Samoa, Melbourne, Sydney, Manila, Yokohama—should that port be selected as the stopping place in Japan—possibly a Chinese port, back to the Philippines, and then home by way of the Suez canal, with only such stops as are necessary for coaling.

Japanese Ministers Pleased.

Tokyo. — The American government's acceptance of Japan's official invitation to the battleship fleet to visit Japanese ports was received with every evidence of gratification when communicated to the foreign office and the naval department by the Associated Press Friday morning. Foreign Minister Hayashi said:

"It affords me and the whole people of Japan intense satisfaction to know that our invitation has been accepted so promptly. I believe that the visit of the fleet will afford opportunity to demonstrate the sincerity of Japan's friendship for America, and her appreciation of the courtesy of the attitude of the administration and congress. A full reception program will be prepared later."

The news of the acceptance of the invitation by telephone was communicated to Baron Saito, minister of marine, at his country residence. He was equally pleased at the intelligence.

RUSSIANS IN DEADLY DUEL.

Gen. Smirnoff Probably Fatally Wounded by Gen. Fock.

St. Petersburg.— Lieut. Gen. Smirnoff was probably fatally wounded in a duel fought here Wednesday with Lieut. Gen. Fock. The men met in the riding school of the Chevalier Guard regiment and fought with pistols, a distance of 20 paces separating them when the shots were exchanged. The duel was caused by the memorandum written by Gen. Smirnoff on the siege of Port Arthur in which he questioned the courage of Gen. Fock. The letter considered that his honor and reputation were involved and challenged the author of the memorandum.

FRATERNITY OUT $75,000

SECRETARY OF MICHIGAN CONCERN IS ARRESTED.

Port Huron Man Peculates Funds of United Home Protectors, Using Them in Speculation.

Port Huron, Mich.—An investigation into the affairs of the United Home Protectors' fraternity of this city, ordered by the state banking commissioner, ended Thursday with the announcement that Supreme Secretary W. L. Wilson of this city is short a sum in excess of $75,000, and his arrest in the afternoon on the charge of embezzlement.

State Banking Commissioner Zimmerman, who took charge of the affairs of the fraternity Thursday, states that Secretary Wilson had been investing heavily in electric railroad promotion and in oil and mining stocks. He says that Wilson's peculations were committed by means of continuing on the books of the fraternity, which operated a building and loan business, as live assets mortgages and certificates of the association which had been paid. Mr. Zimmerman says that the fraternity is hopelessly insolvent and that he will apply for a receiver.

"Secretary Wilson, when confronted with the facts discovered, admitted appropriating the funds of the association to his private use for many years," says Mr. Zimmerman.

"The amount of his shortage is uncertain, but as far as the investigation has proceeded it looks as though the shortage will not a larger amount than $75,000."

The United Home Protectors' fraternity was organized 14 years ago under a special act of the legislature, and conducted a building and loan business in the form of a fraternity, doing business only among its own members. There are about 100 subordinate lodges scattered throughout both the upper and lower peninsulas of Michigan, with a total membership of about 2,500.

Port Huron, Mich. — William L. Wilson, supreme secretary of the United Home Protectors fraternity, was arraigned Friday afternoon on the charge of embezzling $75,000 of the fraternity's funds. He refused to plead and Justice Benedict directed that a plea of not guilty be entered. Wilson waived the reading of the information and his examination was set for March 24. He was sent to jail with bail fixed at $50,000.

Famous Maryland Statesman Passes Away in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—United States Senator William Pinckney Whyte died at his home in this city Tuesday night.

Mr. Whyte was born in this city August 9, 1824, and was the son of Joseph Whyte and grandson of Dr. John Campbell Whyte. His maternal grandfather was the famous lawyer and orator, William Pinckney. His political career may be said to have begun with his election to the house of delegates of the Maryland legislature of 1847-8, since which time he has held nearly every office in the gift of the people of his state.

DO YOU KNOW WHAT WHITE LEAD IS?

Its Chief Use and a Method of Determining Good from Bad Explained.

White Lead is the standard paint material all over the world. It is made by corroding metallic lead into a white powder, through exposing it to the fumes of weak acetic acid and carbonic acid gas; this powder is then ground and mixed with linseed oil, making a thick paste, in which form it is packed and sold for painting purposes. The painter thins it down to the proper consistency for application by the addition of more linseed oil.

The above refers, of course, to pure, genuine White Lead only. Adulterated and fake "White Lead," of which there are many brands on the market, is generally some sort of composition containing only a percentage of white lead; sometimes no White Lead at all; in such stuff, barytes or ground rock, chalk, and similar cheap substances are used to make bulk and imitate the appearance of pure White Lead.

There is, however, a positive test by which the purity or impurity of White Lead may be proved or exposed, before painting with it.

The blow-pipe flame will reduce pure white lead to metallic lead. If a supposed white lead be thus tested and it only partially reduces to lead, leaving a residue, it is proof that something else was there besides white lead.

The National Lead Company guarantee all White Lead sold in packages bearing its "Dutch Boy Painter" trademark to prove absolutely pure under this blow-pipe test, and that you may make the test yourself in your own home, they will send free upon request a blow-pipe and everything else necessary to make the test, together with a valuable booklet on paint. Address, National Lead Company, Woodbridge Building, New York.

Fatal Accident.

Minneapolis—While hunting squirrels on the outskirts of North Minneapolis, S. D. De Witt sent a bullet whizzing thru the air and before its course had been spent it pierced the heart of Nels Nelson, an employe of the C. A. Smith sawmill, killing him instantly.

De Witt was at once placed under arrest and hauled into police court, where, after a preliminary examination on the charge of manslaughter, he was held to the grand jury. He was released on $1,000 bonds. The shooting took place within the city limits, thus giving the municipal court jurisdiction in the case.

Nelson, at the time of the accident, was unloading edgings about a mile west of the city workhouse. While they were at work, the other men heard a shot apparently some distance away and saw Nelson drop to the ground. They ran to their wounded comrade, picked him up and started for the city.

Leaves Guests to Die.

Winona, Minn.—William Estey, aged 65, a wealthy farmer, left his home at midnight, while his house was full of guests, and hanged himself to a tree. The body was found in the morning ten rods from the house.

Estey had invited friends to spend the evening at his home. Just as his guests were preparing to depart, Estey stepped outside, saying he would return in a few minutes.

Failure to return alarmed his friends, who went to search for him.

No trace of the man was found, but at daylight his son, looking from the window, saw his father's body hanging on a rope which had been fastened to a tree near the house.

Ill health is given as the cause of the deed.

Restitution of $33,000 by Buyck and $1,500 by Jones, alleged to have been misappropriated from the township funds, is demanded by the plaintiff in the action.

Alleged "Terror" Nabbed.

Winona—Thomas McCoey, who is alleged to have terrorized the residents of Dresbach by keeping them in a state of fear by the use of a loaded revolver, and who was brought to this city and examined as to his sanity, was found sane, was arraigned in the municipal court on the charge of assault in the second degree, and was bound over to the grand jury under bail of $500. He is charged with having threatened the life of his wife.

MINNESOTA AGAIN CARRIES OFF ALL HONORS IN NATIONAL BUTTER CONTEST.

Most Successful Convention of National Creamery Buttermakers Association.

St. Paul—Earnest discussion of the improvement of the quality of butter and of dairy conditions in general was commenced by the buttermakers of the United States when the annual convention of the National Creamery Buttermakers' association was opened at the Auditorium. The attendance was unusually large for the first day of the convention and a good many more are expected to arrive. They come from almost every state in the Union, the following states being best represented: New York, Vermont, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, South and North Dakota, Montana, Washington, California and Minnesota.

President J. J. Farrell of Carver introduced Gov. Johnson, and the governor was given an ovation. The governor spoke briefly of the surprising growth of the dairy industry and the development of the dairy country in the Northwest. He spoke of the growth of the creamery industry in this state and complimented the persistent efforts of the buttermakers in continually improving their products.

H. J. Nietert, of Walker, Iowa, made the response. He pointed out the vast wealth invested in the dairy industry and the wealth produced each year.

President J. J. Farrell then gave his address. He also spoke of the growth of the dairy industry and of the work of the association in increasing the quantity and improving the quality of the butter produced in this country.

Minnesota was honored at the morning session the second day by the reelection of J. J. Farrell of Carver as president. Lauritz Olsen, of West Depere, Wis., was elected vice president, and S. B. Schilling, of Chicago, was re-elected secretary-treasurer. These were all elected unanimously, although there had been a lively boom for Lauritz Olsen for president.

A lively discussion was the result of the paper read by A. Jenson, of Eureke, Cal., on "How to Secure Uniformity in Overrun and Quality of Butter." His paper contained some pointed statements aside from the technical topics it covered. He charged that in his trip across the continent he had not had a bite of decent butter and had not found any at any of the St. Paul hotels.

L. S. Edwards, of Arlington, Iowa, read a paper on "Do Buttermakers Need Accident Insurance?"

B. D. White, connected with the dairy division of the department of agriculture, read a paper at the afternoon session on keeping creamery records. Two papers on market conditions were read at the afternoon program. W. S. Moore, of Chicago, discussed whether butter could be paid for according to quality under present conditions.

Minnesota again carried off all the honors at the National Creamery Buttermakers' association. Not only does Minnesota win the banner for the highest average scores, but her buttermakers got the highest individual score and the second highest. Iowa won the first in the gathered cream class and Minnesota second. Iowa also won the butter scoring contest, with Minnesota and North Dakota tied for second.

All in all, the convention was as successful as any the association has ever held, both in point of attendance and enthusiasm. "If the people of St. Paul are as well satisfied with the convention as we are," said Secretary S. B. Schilling, "we'll be satisfied all around."

Federal Dairy Bureau.

Resolutions practically indorsing the proposed advance in freight rates on cream on long hauls were passed by the convention. The resolutions also urge the secretary of agriculture to place the dairy interests under a separate bureau in the agricultural department.

The session closed with the announcement of the scores and the presentation of the cups. The highest scorer in each state was awarded a cup, and all those scoring above 90 in the whole milk class or above 85 in the gathered cream class will share in the prize money. J. C. Past, of Hector, Minn., winner of the sweepstakes, also in 18 points of the official scores of 98. G. P. Saner, of East Troy, had the highest for Wisconsin, 97. A. M. Whitney of Whittemore got the Iowa prize scoring 96 in a warm contest.

COW AND VIOLIN ON TOMBSTONE.

Monument with Odd Inscription at Plainfield, Conn.

Boston.—It is no uncommon occurrence for persons to mark the burial places of their pet dogs and favorite cats with monuments, but the town of Plainfield, Conn., has the somewhat peculiar honor of being the only place so far as known where a monument is to be seen in a cemetery telling the virtues of a favorite cow.

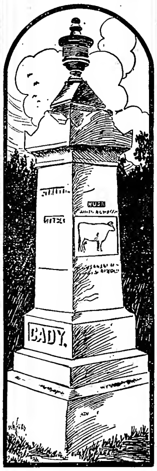
The man who was responsible for this curious burial shaft was Gurdon Cady, who was widely known 50 years ago throughout central Connecticut.

The monument is pointed out to visitors as one of the sights in Evergreen cemetery, in Plainfield. On one side of the shaft are these words:

"Rose, my first Jersey cow. Record 2 lbs. 15 oz. butter from 13 quarts, 1 day milk."

On the opposite side is this inscription:

"All ready, Mr. Cady—At rest," with a violin and bow carved between the words.



Curdon Cady's Monument.

The man whose body lies beneath this somewhat unusual tombstone was widely known as a prompter and musician. His reputation as a fiddler assured the success of any dance for which he was engaged. He had a large frame, and was as big-hearted as he was big corporeally. He was accustomed to sing while he played, and chanted old-fashioned square dances in perfect tune.

Besides his love for music, Mr. Cady took much interest in his cows, of which he had a fine herd of jerseys. Then the jersey cow was not so well known as now. Mr. Cady used to take his herd to all the cattle shows in his vicinity, and won a large collection of blue ribbons.

Before he died he made arrangements to have his favorite cow and his beloved violin carved on his tombstone.

ALL IN THEIR OWN HANDS.

One Reason for Success of Gilbert and Sullivan Operas.

At a complimentary dinner given to Sir William S. Gilbert at the Savoy hotel, London, the guest, in responding to the toast of his health, described himself as "an idle singer of an empty day," and made a striking reference to his copartnership with Sir A. Sullivan: "During our regime at the Savoy my distinguished coworker and myself invariably exercised the most absolute and undisputed control over the production of our pieces. By arrangement with our excellent impresario, D'Oyley Carte, we selected our own cast; we directed our rehearsals in every detail. We superintended the modeling of the scenery, the designing of the dresses. Our company was always admirably in hand, the best possible feeling existed between them and ourselves, and, speaking for my share of the result, I can truthfully say that the impression conveyed to the audience was almost invariably a reflex of my conception. To few authors indeed has such absolute control been accorded, and it is to that absolute control that I attribute a large measure of the success that those pieces achieved on their original production."

That Fishing Feeling.

"I've got the fishing feeling so bad," he said, "that I just must throw down everything and take a two weeks' trip to Florida. I'll pack my grip right now!"

"John," said his wife, "come here."

She opened a closet. A gallon jug stood before him.

"There!" she said. "Cut out the Florida trip. It's too expensive."

"Maria," he said, "you're a wonder."—Atlanta Constitution.

FATHER OF OIL KING

NEW TALE OF DUAL LIFE OF ROCKEFELLER PERE.

Chicagoan, with Dr. William Levingston for Twelve Years, Says Man Admitted He Was Parent of Famous John D.

New York.—Many additional facts about the dual life led by Dr. William Avery Rockefeller, father of John D. Rockefeller, are supplied by Dr. Charles H. Johnston, his assistant and business partner for 12 years. In those years Dr. Rockefeller went under the name of Dr. William Levingston, but to his partner, Dr. Johnston, so the latter declares, he revealed the secret of his life—that he was Rockefeller and that John D. Rockefeller was his son.

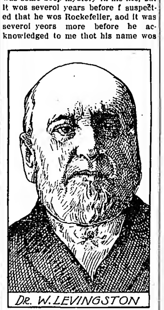
Dr. Johnston is president of the College of Medicine and Surgery in Chicago. He explains:

"It was in 1874 that I paid him $1,000 and became his student and assistant. He was living then in Freeport, Ill., as Dr. William Levingston, and he never posed under any other name thereafter. His wife, Mrs. Margaret Allen Levingston, living yet in Freeport, was one of the sweetest women I ever knew. I did not know until years afterward that he had two wives, one the mother of John D. Rockefeller. She lives in Cleveland, O.

"Dr. Levingston and I traveled over all the west, through Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas. It is not true that he sold medicines in the street. He had a fine team of horses, the best that money could buy, and a fine carriage in which we drove from town to town. He would have a string of eight or ten towns at once. He would drive into a town, scatter handbills, in which the great Dr. Levingston asserted that he could cure all diseases, and we would have a suite of rooms at the best hotel, and to the doctor there would come the sick and the halt and the lame. In all cases of common ailments he could detect the cause almost at a glance.

"He made a great deal of money. He often took in $200 in a day, and if he took only $100 he thought it a poor day's business.

"I knew from the first that there was some deep mystery in his life, but it was several years before I suspected that he was Rockefeller, and it was several years more before he acknowledged to me that his name was William A. Rockefeller and that John D. Rockefeller was his son.



"In all the years I was with him the old man went twice a year to Cleveland and stayed a week or two. He told me he went there to look after his money invested with John D. Rockefeller, and he would tell me wonderful stories of John D.'s shrewdness and great wealth."

Dr. Johnston showed several letters, postmarked Cleveland, O., and signed William Levingston, M. D.

"I first learned positively that Dr. Levingston was Dr. Rockefeller when he was injured on a ranch in North Dakota and thought he was going to die. He and I went to North Dakota together in 1881, and took up adjoining homestead claims where the town of Park River is. We were building a shed for a cattle shelter and in lifting a heavy log he strained himself. He was an old man then, and he thought he had ruptured an intestine. The pain was great and he thought he was dying. I asked him if I should send for his wife, Mrs. Levingston, if he should die, and he said: "No; notify John D. Rockefeller, but be very careful and let no one else know it.

"When he got well I told him I knew he was John D. Rockefeller's father. At first he denied it and then he said it was true. He told me that the reason he kept it secret was that he found it necessary in his younger days to assume a name because he was practicing medicine without license. He might be arrested any time and he did not wish to disgrace the name of Rockefeller because of his children. He stuck to the name later, he said, because it was then too late honorably to take his right name."

WESTERN CANADA CROPS CANNOT BE CHECKED.

OATS YIELDED 90 BUSHELS TO THE ACRE.

The following letter written the Dominion Government Commissioner of Emigration speaks for itself. It proves the story of the Agents of the Government that on the free homesteads offered by the Government it is possible to become comfortably well off in a few years:

Regina, Sask., 23rd Nov., 1907.

Commissioner of Immigration,

Winnipeg.

Dear Sir:

It is with pleasure that I reply to your request. Some years ago I took up a homestead for myself and also one for my son. The half section which we own is situated between Rouleau and Drinkwater, adjoining the Moose Jaw creek, is a low level and heavy land. We put in 70 acres of wheat in stubble, which went 20 bushels to the acre, and 30 acres of summer fallow, which went 25 bushels to the acre. All the wheat we harvested this year is No. 1 hard. That means the best wheat that can be raised on the earth. We did not sell any wheat yet as we intend to keep one part for our own seed, and sell the other part to people who want first-class seed, for there is no doubt if you sow good wheat you will harvest good wheat. We also threshed 9,000 bushels of first-class oats out of 160 acres. 80 acres has been fall plowing which yielded 90 bushels per acre, and 80 acres stubble, which went 30 bushels to the acre. These oats are the best kind that can be raised. We have shipped three car loads of them, and got 53 cents per bushel clear. All our grain was cut in the last week of the month of August before any frost could touch it.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have had a late spring, and that the weather conditions this year were very adverse and unfavorable, we will make more money out of our crop this year than lost.

For myself I feel compelled to say that Western Canada crops cannot be checked, even by unusual conditions.

I am, dear sir,

Yours truly,

(Signed) A. Koltenbrunner.

Origin of the Elevator.

The elevator originated in Central Europe. The earliest mention of the elevator is made in a letter of Napoleon I. addressed to his wife, Archduchess Marie Louise. He writes to her that when in Schoenbrunn, then the summer residence of the Austrian emperor, near Vienna, he used the "chaise volante" (flying chair) in that castle which had been constructed for Empress Maria Theresa. It consisted of a small, square room, sumptuously furnished with hangings of red silk and suspended by strong ropes with counter weights, so that it could be pulled up or let down with great ease in a shaft built for the purpose about 1760.

Asserted His Rights.

John Hunter was a negro given to chastising his wife.

"You, John," said a neighbor one day, "Susanna say, ef you don't quit beatin' her she gwine to de Freedman bureau!"

"She do, do she?" he replied, with scorn. "Now, lemme tell yer, wunst on' fer all! Susanna am my wife! An' so long as she go 'bout her bizness I gwine leff her 'lone. But w'en she git ter cuttin' up I gwine ter beat her, on' ther' ain't no bureau nor no sidebodo nor no chist of drors whot kin hol' me back!'"

A New Excuse.

"I suppose your husband is proud to contribute his share toward the support of our beautiful library?"

"Yes," answered the woman with the slightly acid expression; "only John was none too industrious in the first place and now he's tempted to put in most of his time reading novels and trying to get his money's worth."—Washington Star.

HAPPY OLD AGE

Most Likely to Follow Proper Eating.

As old age advances, we require less food to replace waste, and food that will not overtax the digestive organs, while supplying true nourishment.

Such an ideal food is found in Grape-Nuts, made of whole wheat and barley by long baking and action of diastase in the barley which changes the starch into sugar.

The phosphates also, placed up under the bran-coat of the wheat, are included in Grape-Nuts, but left out of white flour. They are necessary to the building of brain and nerve cells.

"I have used Grape-Nuts," writes an Iowa man, "for 8 years and feel as good and am stronger than I was ten years ago. I am over 74 years old, and attend to my business every day.

"Among my customers I meet a man every day who is 92 years old and attributes his good health to the use of Grape-Nuts and Postum which he has used for the last 5 years. He mixes Grape-Nuts with Postum and says they go fine together.

"For many years before I began to eat Grape-Nuts, I could not say that I enjoyed life or knew what it was to be able to say 'I am well.' I suffered greatly with constipation, now my habits are as regular as ever in my life.

"Whenever I make extra effort I depend on Grape-Nuts food and it just fills the bill. I can think and write a great deal easier."

H E IVES, Chairman.

A. P. TOUPIN, Secretary.

The Democratic politicians are looking for the row that never [illegible] in the republican party, this year.

The sentiment is so solid for Taft that no convention fights, but there is liable to be a light attendance of delegates to the county republican conventions

The Thief River Falls News is authority for the fact that A. Jones of St. Hilaire, will be a candidate for the republican nomination for sheriff Mr. Jones may be all right for the position, but we are of the opinion, that as far as The News is concerned, it would be a case of "Jones paying the freight", to railroad some other candidate into the office

There is no use of any other paper in Minnesota trying to beat the St. Hilaire Spectator out of the honor of being the first paper to support Taft for president, as editor Ives opened the campaign so early that we thought he was joking. We copy the following from THE SUNBEAM of June 7th, 1907.

The St. Hilaire Spectator is for Taft for president. Harry believes in supporting a man of heft for the position,

J. W. McGinty, of Thief River Falls has filed for the democratic nomination for sheriff of Red Lake county. Mr. McGinty is a man that is well qualified for the position, and has strong political backing throuout the county, and while it is a little early in the game he will be in the race when the line up comes. Should his home town indorse him as their candidate they will not stir up the ill feeling in the country districts that they would by trying to foist a man into office who has only used it for political and financial gain without regard for the rights of the tax payers.

DEEP CRACKS FROM ECZEMA

Could Lay Slate-Pencil in One—Hands in Dreadful State—Permanent Cure in Cuticura.

"I had eczema on my hands for about seven years and during that time I had used several so-called remedies, together with physicians' and druggists' prescriptions. The disease was so bad on my hands that I could lay a slate-pencil in one of the cracks and a rule placed across the hand would not touch the pencil. I kept using remedy after remedy, and while some gave partial relief, none relieved as much as did the first box of Cuticura Ointment. I made a purchase of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and my hands were perfectly cured after two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap were used. W. H. Dean, Newark, Del., Mar. 28, 1907."

Transmitted Snake Bite.

An extraordinary case of snake poisoning is reported from a country hospital in Victoria, N. S. W. An old man was brought in in a comatose state and showing all the symptoms of having been bitten by a venomous snake. But on investigation it was found he had been bitten by a dog, which died almost immediately afterward from snake bite. Medical treatment was successful, and the man gradually recovered from the snake poison which the reptile had indirectly transmitted to him.

The past winter has been especially hard on cattle and horses. The scarcity and poor quality of the feed has left the horses in poor condition for spring work and the cows weakened at their most critical, the calving, time. In many localities the farmers are using a tonic which they prepare themselves with good results. An 8 oz. box of Powdered Germas Compound is obtained at the druggist's and mixed with 8 oz. Powdered Willow Charcoal, 8 oz. Powdered Ginger, 1 lb Common Salt, 6 lbs. Ground Oil Cake. Two tablespoons of the mixture is fed to each cow or horse with regular feed twice a day.

Answered Truthfully.

During the late financial flurry a St. Louis business man was called to serve on a jury. "What is your name?" asked the attorney. "John Smith," the business man replied. "Your color?" the attorney continued. "White," said John Smith. "Your age?" "Forty-eight," quoth Mr. Smith." "Your business?" "Rotten," said John Smith.

THE OLD LADIES' ENTERTAINMENT

By DELLA THOMPSON LUTES

(Copyright.)

"It's just dear of you to go, Miss Radford, and you, too, Miss Lockwood." Miss Francesca Vancouver, in the private parlor of Miss Alicia Radford, violinist, soloist and vaudeville star, Hotel du Nord, rose from the satin-tapestried chair and drew her slipping furs up over her shoulders. "The poor old creatures have so few treats, you know." Miss Radford and Miss Lockwood, pianist and accompanist, rose also, and looked their sympathy.

"I think it's good of you, Miss Vancouver, to go to so much trouble, in preparing a treat for them. And what shall we play?" asked Miss Radford, moving toward the door with their guest.

"Oh, something good, you know. Something classical and—er—religious, I suppose. That's the kind of music old ladies generally like, isn't it? They're all real old, you know, and ill, some of them, and they've really seen better days, poor things, and will appreciate good music.

"Then I'll say you'll come directly the afternoon's performance is over," she said. "It's so good of you; I hardly dared dream you'd come. Two such famous performers!"

"It's not so long since we were infamous performers," laughed Miss Lockwood, "and, anyway, we're always glad to do anything of the sort. You'll let them know."

"I'll go straight there now. It will be their dinner hour and I'll tell them to assemble in the parlor at—is it four o'clock?"

"That will do nicely."

"I sha'n't be able to be there myself at that hour, and I'm awfully sorry, for I'd love to hear you, but I've an engagement a week old for four. You won't mind? The matron will take care of you."

Four o'clock found half a dozen old ladies, out of a membership of 50, gathered in the big parlor of the home.

"Where's Mrs. Brainerd?" asked one. "She's generally the first down when anything's going on."

"She said," volunteered another quavering voice, "that she wasn't coming. She said they always sang and played the same old things, and she's tired of them."

Another, leaning upon a crutch, paused in the doorway and looked in. "I had half a mind," she said, "not to come down the stairs for it. I thought, though, being's they're from the stage maybe they'd play something a little different."

The matron passed along an upper hall and, noting the many occupants of rooms who were not taking advantage of the invitation, asked the reason.

"We'll hear all we want up here," one informed her. "It's sure to be 'high-class' music, such as Miss Vancouver considers good for the comfort and elevation of our old souls, and I, for one, can hear all I want from here." Others voiced the same opinion in different manners, and when, punctual to the minute, the Misses Radford and Lockwood appeared with music roll and violin box, but few more than the original half-dozen met them.

"The Angels' Serenade," most soulfully and exquisitely executed by Miss Alicia Radford, opened the program, and while upstairs one old head nodded to another as if to say, "I told you so," and here and there a door was closed, not too quietly, the parlor audience greeted the finale with polite if mild enthusiasm. The "Holy City" and "Jerusalem" followed, and their conclusion found three out of eight asleep.

The Miserere from Il Trovatore awoke the slumberers, and the piercing sweetness of its wail drew tears from eyes whose brilliancy had long since been washed away. Poor old Anna Fanning, weak of intellect and gentle of heart, crept to a stool in the hall and sat wiping her eyes with her apron and sobbing softly.

"For heaven's sake, let's play something more lively," whispered Miss Radford to her accompanist, and broke into a gay little mazurka which, to her relief, had the effect of dispelling, to some extent, the gloom, and moved old Anna Fanning to hitch her stool a step nearer the door.

"Is there anything in particular you'd like us to play?" asked Miss Radford, gently, when the mazurka was finished. For a few moments no one spoke, and then one, more rotund of body and brighter of eye than the others, ventured her desire.

"Do you—can you—play Hiawatha?" she asked timidly.

The girls looked at one another and smiled. Hiawatha was a bit old and not exactly in their line, but they could play it. They were also, to tell the truth, somewhat amazed. They had not been led to suppose that the old ladies of the Vancouver home were acquainted with, or had a taste for popular music.

However, they played Hiawatha, and played it with a vim and spirit that brought a faint flush to the still rounded cheek of the old lady who had proffered the request, and caught the slippered toe of another softly beating time beneath the faded hem of her gown. At the final happy and lightsome chords of the gay little intermezzo there were a dozen old ladies where there had been eight. A clapping of hands, also, rewarded the efforts of the artists.

"That was beautiful," breathed the admirer of Hiawatha, happily; "I could listen to that all night."

"You don't know 'What You Gwine to Do When the Rent Comes Round?' do you?" timidly inquired a particularly saint-like old soul, leaning feebly forward from her rocker, emboldened by the success of her predecessor. The vaudeville artists laughed aloud. They were beginning to get some fun out of it, too.

"I should say we did," replied Miss Radford heartily, and "Rufus Rastus" brought more than one crocheted slipper to beating time to his irresistible rythm. From every corridor came gentle creaking of doors, and down the stairs came softly trooping a steady line of the lame, the halt and the blind.

When Rufus Rastus was finished there were not half chairs to accommodate the eager and enthusiastic audience. Poor old Anna Fanning had left off her weeping and stood a little back from the open door, stepping lightly back and forth to the music and humming to herself.

"I don't suppose you—could—sing something kind of—lively, could you?" The questioner was bowed and crippled and old. Her face was drawn with grief and her eyes were faded with weeping, but her heart bespoke the immortality of youth.

"He Certainly Was Good to Me."

The girls looked at each other, flushed and laughing. This program was certainly different from what they had expected.

"Singing rag-time," said Miss Radford, "isn't exactly my style (how I wish we had Jim Mewlett here)," she interpolated to her friend, "but I guess—" She whispered a few words to Miss Lockwood, who, nodding and laughing, swung her fingers off to the jolliest, catchiest bit of rag-time they could remember.

Miss Radford laid her violin and her dignity both on top of the piano and, assuming a coquettish, cake-walk air, trolled out in a voice that, to the hungry ears before her, rivaled any Melba or Eames, "He Certainly Was Good to Me."

There were 40 eager listeners now where had been eight; and the other ten were leaning on their elbows, with heads propped up and ears strained to catch every blithesome note.

Back and forth pirouetted Miss Alicia Radford, violin virtuoso and soloist, and louder and louder grew the applause, while tears again rolled down aged cheeks, but no longer from memories aroused. Never in all their lives had anything so perfectly delicious happened to them.

When at last Miss Radford dropped laughing, panting and disheveled into a chair, and Miss Lockwood turned flushed and laughing also from her stool, an eager and happy throng surrounded them.

"Beautiful," said one voice, its qualities revived as they had not been in years.

"I never enjoyed myself so in all my life," exclaimed another, hobbling on two crutches to lay a wrinkled hand on Miss Radford's shoulder. From every aged face beamed smiles and glances of appreciative delight when finally Miss Radford had boxed her violin and Miss Lockwood had encased her music.

It was supper time when the old ladies returned to the parlor, and as at the sound of the gong they filed haltingly out to the dining room, unwonted smiles lighted the passage and the walls of the dining room echoed gayer laughter and happier conversation than ever their monotoned surfaces had done before.

Until the last light was out and the last aged form had crept away to rest, there came at intervals from unlatched door and from open ward a broken strain, hummed by long unused lips, from "He Certainly Was Good to Me."

PLEADS FOR COLOR HARMONY.

Tints That Vibrate Will Rest and Soothe, Declares Milliner.

That harmony of color has its effect on the nerves is the theory followed by a milliner.

"Take a well-appointed table, for instance, with its soft-shaded candle light," she says in explaining certain hats. "It pleases the eye, relaxes the nerves and one forgets under its spell the brutality of feeling.

"An unshaded clear white electric light is enough to take away the appetite from even the hungriest man. It is like eating under an X-ray.

"Take the soft rose lights of the dining room of the Carleton in London, for instance. I mention it because it is the most perfectly harmonious room as to coloring that I know of anywhere.

"The women look pretty, the men handsome and distinguished, and one does not have to resort to the vulgar cocktail to see the rosy side of life. The pink shade answers the purpose quite as well and saves the digestion.

"America has much to learn on this subject. Most of its hotels and places of amusement are most unbecomingly treated. And I maintain that one reason American women wrinkle so soon is that they have to face such strong lights.

"There is no vibration in black, and yet it is the favorite apparel of the multitude. We are overrun with blackbirds; sometimes they vary it with a wash of white; then they become magpies.

"I designed a hat the other day for a most interesting woman, a Buddhist. It was like weaving a Persian rug. The materials were all in half-tones, and so becoming.

"I do not sacrifice the individuality of my clients, either, to my creations, but study the lines and contours of the head, the face and figure, and match the tones that have the proper color vibrations to suit the hair and the eyes.

"Only in this way can one expect results which are altogether happy and distinctive. There is no mystery in it at all, only common sense, as you, I am sure, will agree, once you have thought it out."

Hair Powders.

At the seashore and wherever warm, humid weather is encountered, the woman with straight hair has much to contend with. Unless unusually luxuriant, straight hair is always difficult to arrange becomingly, but in a hot climate the task is an almost impossible one. Some kind of powder rubbed into the hair as often as necessary will do much to keep the stray locks manageable, but of course the powder must not be recklessly used or it will defeat the very end for which it is aiming. Swedish hair powder rubbed into the hair twice, three times, or oftener, a week, is particularly good, as it also acts as a tonic and strengthens the roots of the hair besides keeping the scalp in good condition.

Corset Novelty.

A decided novelty is a new corset which proposes to support the back by pressure of two crossed straps inside the back of the corsets, the ends of the straps being anchored to the front steels on the outside. Seems almost like the proverbial lifting one's self by the boot-straps, yet the inventor says that it not only rests the back, but gives the wearer the very best "new figure," with flat back and slender hips. Furthermore, that the back steels can never turn and dig into the flesh, be the corset laced ever so tightly. For the sake of suffering womankind, it is to be hoped that this back-resting corset may prove to be all that its designer claims for it.

Pesm in Mole-Color.

A smart and useful little suit is of moleskin gray tweed of a firm rather smooth make, with the merest suggestion of a very faint dull purple stripe in it. It is faced with moleskin broadcloth, strapped with a heavy raised silk braid to match, and finished off with purple satin buttons, inclosed in a network of mole silk crochet till the purple hardly shows.

HOW TO WASH SILK HOSE.

A Few Hints for Careful Girls Who Want to Save Them.

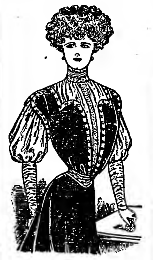
Careful girls don't waste their substance on silk stockings, and then send them to the laundry to be reduced to ravelings. Besides, it's a pleasure to wash the daintier, pale-tinted ones.

The very latest way, which girls who have cared for their own silk hose all winter say is best, is to wash them first in white soap and lukewarm water. Then they are rolled in a cloth previously wrung out in hot water and left there to steam for an hour. At the end of this time they are turned inside out and hung out to dry, and when nearly dry rubbed between the palms of the hands to make them soft and pliable, as well as to give the foot the correct shape. Ironing is a great mistake, as the iron not only rots the silk, but causes an unsightly ridge down the center of the leg.

Another way, when the stockings are badly stained, is to soak them first in warm water, to which a little borax has been added, and then wash them quickly in tepid soapsuds, after which they should be squeezed between the fingers to rid them of the soapsuds, and finally rinsed in soft water and hung out to dry without being wrung. In the case of white hose, most girls add bluing to the water.

Lace hose should first be soaked in water in which salt or a lump of alum the size of a walnut has been dissolved, and then plunged into a mixture of a wineglass of vinegar stirred into a soapy lather, pressing them well between the fingers until they are clean. Before washing black or bronze silk stockings it is a good plan to soak them for an hour in water to which a little black pepper has been added.

BODICE FOR AFTERNOON DRESS.



This is a pretty bodice for a dress of velveteen. It has a fitting lining, which fastens down the center front; upon it is arranged a full yoke and vest of soft silk trimmed with insertion, then the velveteen is put on plain under a narrow silk galloon. The sleeves are of the silk, the lower part being rucked and tight-fitting. Epaulettes of the velvet edged with galloon ornament the top of sleeve.

Materials required: 2¼ yards velveteen, three yards silk and two yards lining.

Outline Tucks.

Some of the broad tucks in the new linen tailored blouses are sewn in with the outline stitch in mercerized cotton. This is merely the back stitch used on the right side of the material, and in contrast of shades it presents many possibilities. Many women wisely prefer mercerized cotton for the purpose because it washes so much better than does the less twisted silk.

Soutache Braid.

Soutache braid is as popular as ever and whole bodies are made entirely of this material. It is very attractive when combined with cluny lace or filet.

"Grizzly Pete" and Old "Stub-Foot"

AN EPISODE IN WOODS AND WATER EXPLOITS

By
Ernest McGaffey
Author of Poems of Gun and Rod, Etc.

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

In my brief stay in the little mining camp of Tail-holt, Friskiyou county, California, it was my fortune to make the acquaintance of Mr. Peter Walker, guide, prospector, hunter and raconteur. "Grizzly Pete," as he was called, told me several stories of his experiences, after I had won his confidence by a disposition to distribute, as regarded tobacco, and a willingness to imbibe, as regarded certain intoxicants. Mr. Walker's stories, some of them, seemed to me to be a trifle open to criticism, as far as veracity is concerned, so in selecting the tale of his adventure with "old Stub-Foot."

"And so," said "Grizzly Pete" to me one windy autumn day, "and so you'd like to hear about old 'Stub-foot?'" I acquiesced.

"Got any chewin'?" inquired "Pete."

I silently shunted him a plug of navy. Biting off in the neighborhood of three and one-half inches of this, he said: "Well, I reckon there never was sech a bear hunt before nur afterwards. This here feller that went out with me after 'Stub-foot' had heard of this bear there back east, and he'd made up his mind fer to kill him er git killed hisself. His name, the feller's, not the bear's, was De Pyster, rhymes with oystar.

"DE PYSTER UPS AN' BLAZES AWAY."

"Well, sir, he showed up here one afternoon in the Mariposa stage, and he gits off and asks fer me. Some o' the boys hunts me up, and we git to talkin' bear right away. And he tells me ef I can git him where he can kill old 'Stub-foot,' and prove beyond any doubt that he was the feller that done it, he will pay me $2,500 in gold.

"So the next day I takes my outfit over to De Pyster, and I says, 'Here's my lawyer, and here's my short-hand reporter, and here's my photograph feller, and here's three burros to pack the camp outfit and grub. When'll you be ready?' And this here feller he sort o' takes a reel long breath, and he says, 'All these fer a bear hunt?' And I says, 'On the advice of my lawyer.' An' he says, 'You're the doctor, Mr. Walker, I'm here to obey orders.'

"So we gets out in the mountains and begins to climb. Old 'Stub-foot' he lived up so high in the ranges that the miners there used to put the ore out on the mountains and let the spring avalanches take it down to the smelters in the valley; no railroad er pack train bein' able to git in to where they wuz; an' they got their provisions and stuff in by way of trained eagles, same as these here carrier pigeons is learned to carry mail.

"So one day we got to where old 'Stub-foot' ranged, and I sort o' got his bearings. So De Pyster he practiced a little with his gun one mornin'. It was the most powerful shootin'-iron I ever seen, an' he was knockin' off the peaks from along the mountain ranges inside the first few miles till I stopped him from spilin' so much scenery. So he quit that an' begins to plow up a few new canyons with his steel-plated bullets fer a change. It was a master powerful shootin' gun, that there rifle of his wuz. 'Well, that evening he blots out the front part of a bull elk, 'as easy as a new blotter would lap up a blot of ink,' as my lawyer said, and we planted the carcass out where old 'Stub-foot' would be sure to see it at daybreak.

"There was a few scrubby pines around, and when we got out at daybreak the next day De Pyster had his rifle, this here shorthand man had his note book, the picture man had his machine all fixed, and my lawyer had all sorts of affidavids ready, and a dyin' declaration fer the bear to sign, purvidin De Pyster didn't blow his head off the first shot. I want to say right here that this here lawyer of mine was certainly the most thoughtful cuss I ever did see.

"Well, sir, we wasn't more'n 15 minutes hid in the pine scrub before here comes old 'Stub-foot' growlin' like a thunderstorm, and he looked like he was perty nigh as big as an elephant. There wuzn't no doubt he was the one, and three of his claws on his left fore-foot was gone, 'count of his gittin' ketched in a trap once. So the minute we sees him, the lawyer, the shorthand man and me we climbs trees, the lawyer gittin' the best tree and climbin' higher up than any of us. The picture man of course he had to stay on the ground to git the pictures of the scrimmage, and De Pyster had to be there to do the shootin'. So the picture man, as was a dead-game proposition as ever I see, he's all ready and peekin' out from his curtain, and he gits one picture as old 'Stub-foot' takes a bite out of the bull elk's carcass. Then this hero De Pyster ups an' blazes away, and fer some reason he only wounds old 'Stub-foot,' who immejitly drops the elk and comes lopin' over to'rds De Pyster, aimin' to finish his breakfast on him. The picture man gits another good picture of 'Stub-foot,' an' then goes up the lawyer's tree, and just then De Pyster shoots again, and drops old 'Stub-foot' with a bullet through the fore-quarters that busts both shoulders and lays the old feller out as helpless as a sick kitten. Then he soaks him with another bullet through the body, and jist then my lawyer hollers, 'hold on, you've done fer him,' and then we all slides down our trees and the picture feller takes a few more pictures while we looks at the bear.

"Fer a little while we thinks he's stone-dead, but bime-by he rouses a little, and my lawyer he jerks a paper out of his pocket and a fountain pen, and he says, 'he'll jist be able to sign the dyin' declaration,' he says, and so he sticks the fountain pen in the bear's right paw, my lawyer reads the declaration to him, and with me helpin', old 'Stub-foot' signs this here paper with his mark, and then finally tumbles over, havin' passed in his checks right proper.

"Immejitly De Pyster an' me we skins the bear, the picture man goes back to camp and develops—that's what he called it—them picters; my lawyer he writes out the affidavids and fixes up the dyin' declaration all right, and the shorthand man writes out and hammers out on a typewritin' machine a full account of the fight. This dyin' declaration told how this here 'Old Stub-foot,' a monster grizzly bear of Friskiyou county, California, feelin' the near approach of death, and havin' no hope of recovery, identified De Pyster as the feller that killed him, and so forth.' Reglar legal, my lawyer said, and provin' certain that De Pyster was the cause of old 'Stub-foot's' death. And we all signed it as witnesses to 'old Stub-foot's mark.'

"Well, sir, I got my money and paid my lawyer. And when De Pyster took the stage he had 'old Stub-foot's' pelt, the pictures of the affair, the shorthand man's account of the fight, all our affidavids, and 'Old Stub-foot's' dyin' declaration that De Pyster shot him. It was the most convincin' array of evidence ever furnished, so my lawyer said. De Pyster shook hands with me and he sez: 'Mr. Walker, you're simply a genius.' And he sent me from New York this here watch as a remembrance. Cost a dollar an' keeps as good time as a hunderd-dollar one. And I'm wearin' one of old 'Stub-foot's' missin' claws on it fer a watch-charm."

And he passed the time-piece proudly over to me for a closer inspection.

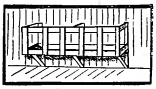
CARE OF THE FLOCK.

Animals Need Protection from Stormy Wet Weather.

Sheep need little shelter except to keep off rain and snow. I have always allowed them to stay out in the coldest weather, if it was not stormy. However, I never, under any circumstances, allow them to take rains and snows in winter, writes a correspondent of Farm and Home.

At this season I give good clover hay, and in addition a little silage or corn fodder about three times a week. I feed twice a day in the yard on the ground if it is frozen, but when the ground is not frozen I feed in racks in the sheep barn. I feed a little entire grain, mostly oats, to the breeding ewes.

My troughs are made of three boards, 8 feet long, the bottom one 10 inches wide and the sides 6 inches, as shown in sketch. I scatter the oats thin in these troughs and the sheep cannot get a large mouthful. Thus better mastication of the grain is secured than in narrow troughs. I have fed threshed oats to my sheep for a good many years and have not as yet experienced any bad results from their use. I feed oats until after lambing time, then I add about one ear of shelled corn to one pint of oats per day.



Wall Sheep Trough.

I know from my own experience that it pays to keep sheep, provided they are kept well, and those who do not do this are very likely to condemn the breed of sheep which they may happen to have or the breeding stock which they have purchased for the improvement of their flock when the fault is really their own.

CATTLE AS A SIDE ISSUE.

Probable That They Pay a Larger Profit Than Cattle Otherwise Raised.

It is probable that cattle as a side issue pay larger comparative profits than cattle raised in any other way. The farmer that raises a small bunch of good calves can frequently feed them at almost no cost. The statisticians that figure on the cost of raising beef cattle always put in the cost of the pasturage at a certain fixed price. But in the case of the pasture being otherwise understocked, the feeding of a bunch of steers actually costs nothing. On many of our farms unused opportunities go to waste. These opportunities include acres of corn stalks in the fall of the year; rough grasses that the smaller stock do not eat; pasture grasses in excess of what the other stock will eat; silage in a greater abundance than can be eaten by the dairy cows. Sometimes these opportunities include unused grazing areas in the woodlands. The farmer to utilize all of these lets some of his calves grow up into beeves. The men that think they know that beeves do not pay cannot convince the farmer that he is not ahead under the above-mentioned conditions.

Sheep Getting Back on Farm.

There is no danger of any person getting into trouble in predicting that from now on the sheep is to be returned to its proper place on the farms. And why not, when it makes by far more money out of the grass and the weeds, and the seeds, the roots, the grains, the hay and anything else fed to it than any other kind of animal we raise, and it does that without one needing to milk or grind for them? All this is required to give the feed as it comes from the field, only that turnips had better be cut. Does that not tell, and tell materially, when the labor saved is considered, how we can farm, farm well, and cut down expensive labor bills?

Clover for Swine.

I prefer clover pasture for my hogs, but this year have only Juna grass and rape, writes a farmer in the Orange Judd Farmer. A portion of the pasture is in an orchard where the pigs have access to the fallen apples. I find the more liberty a pig has the better he does. In connection with pasturage I feed corn. The pigs get skim milk twice a day. Stock foods I give a wide berth. In their places I feed ashes, salt, etc. Pure water is provided and shade is afforded by sheds and apple and other trees.

It is a good idea to fatten the hogs on old corn. They may be sent to market earlier in the fall and secure the high prices. Do not feed old, hard corn to them until it is well soaked.

Many farmers feed the sow too much corn and when the pigs arrive they are weak and the sow is in feverish condition. The result is that only about a half crop of pigs are saved.

Hogs in a straw pile are apt to get too hot, then chilled, and trouble is likely to result.

MAKING BUTTER ON THE FARM.

Two Prime Essentials to Success in This Branch of Dairying.

There are two prime essentials in making butter on the farm a profitable business. In the first place, one must have plenty of pure, cold water; and then a good enough grade must be turned out to make and hold customers. The trouble with nine out of every ten farm homes is they are not equipped to take care of milk and cream. When one goes into this work to make money, better put up a milk room, where pure water may be had from pumping or from a spring. Concrete floor and walls may now be built as cheaply as with lumber, and it is a great deal better than lumber. Don't stop here. A barrel churn and a butter maker will be necessary in turning out a uniform product. It looks easy—simply separating the cream, churning till the butter comes, and salting and the trick is done. That is where so many fail. The cream must be churned at the right temperature; it must be neither too sweet nor too sour. Working and salting butter to secure uniform color and flavor is a very nice art. Don't try to learn to do it infallibly in two or three weeks, but by all means don't practice on your customers. That means loss. It is better to wait two or three months, until you are sure of your quality before you seek customers. And before you ship, find out how your commission man or private customers prefer to have their butter put up. Sometimes the package means a difference of two or three cents a pound.

A GOOD BARN.

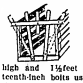
This Is the Only Kind That It Pays to Build.

It pays better to build a good barn than it does a poor barn. It will pay the farmer better to take time to think over the matter of building than it will to rush in and build a barn that will become rickety in 20 years. Time slips away rapidly, and the poorly built barn deteriorates rapidly. If it is so built that it will have a life of not more than 20 years, then five per cent. must be charged off as depreciation each year, and this is equivalent to an interest of that amount, which has to be added to the interest on the original investment. This will sometimes make a total of more than ten per cent., which is too much money for a man to pay out annually on any structure. Therefore, says Farmers' Review, the part of wisdom is to build for permanency. Materials, plans and labor should be such that the barn will have a life of from 50 to 100 years. In that case the annual charge for depreciation will be less than two per cent. The poorly built barn will soon take on an appearance that will detract from the value of the farm, in case the farm has to be sold.

CRATE FOR CATCHING HOGS.

Must Be Made of Strong Material to Stand Strain.

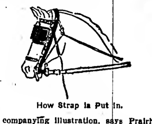
This crate can be made of most any kind of strong material. We used 2x2 for posts, 1x4 for slats and inch boards for bottom and lower side boards. Crate is about five or six feet long, 2½ feet high and 1½ feet wide. Five-sixteenth-inch bolts used at corners and through lower end of lever and at cross at top where levers slide. Run any size hog or pigs in from back end and have man catch them as they stick their heads between the lever slats. A boy can hold the largest hog very easily while being rung, etc., without injury to either. When ready to let them loose, directs the Epitomist, throw levers open and hog goes through outside and is separated from unrung hogs. We also use it as a crate to haul one or two hogs. This is worth $25 to us and can be made for almost nothing and in an hour on a rainy day.



TO HOLD A RUNAWAY.

Check Strap Which Holds Horse Under Complete Control.

A strong strap 48 inches long with a stout ring in each end is required to make the device shown in the accompanying illustration, says Prairie Farmer. It is fastened on the top of the bridle, brought down on each side and passed through the rings on the bridle. The lines are then attached to the rings on the strap and when the horse starts to run it is very easy to hold him as the bit is drawn up.



How Strap Is Put In.

Care of Milk Utensils.

Milk utensils should be rinsed with cold or lukewarm water. They should then be washed thoroughly with hot water, with the aid of some cleaning preparation, other than laundry soap or inferior washing powder, as sal-soda, then rinsed with clean water and sterilized by exposure for at least ten minutes to live steam, or water that is actually boiling.

JAPANESE SNAPSHOTS

The Funny Things One Sees in Smiling Round the World

By

MARSHALL P. WILDER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

The streets in Japan are fascinating, overflowing as they are with life and color. The children are as the sands of the sea, and seven times out of ten a child has a smaller one strapped to his or her back. There is no distinction, boys playing nurse quite as frequently as girls. I contrasted their cheerfulness and evident pleasure in performing this duty with the outraged dignity of an American boy of 10 or 12 obliged to carry a baby about for a morning or afternoon.

A Child Strapped to a Child's Back.

The children are put out of the houses early in the morning, when the mothers sweep, dust and polish everything to an immaculate cleanliness, and the little nomads live and play, and apparently eat all their meals in the streets.

The shops are open to the streets, and closed at night with wooden shutters. At the back of every shop may be seen the paper covered sliding screen leading into the little home. This screen is almost invariably open, disclosing the entire family group. The hair dresser, building up the wonderful coiffure—rolled over tiny bolsters, and greased with cocoa-oil to a shining blackness—affected by the Japanese women; shampooing, sewing, writing, reading—every occupation is in full view of the passer-by.

• • •

Speaking of shops and making oneself understood, I felt that after my experience in the Hawaiian tongue I was fully justified in letting the Japanese severely alone. I never got much beyond the two words, "O-hay-o" (good morning) and "sayonara" (good-by). The "good morning" is pronounced as near like Ohio as they can make it.

I suppose if they wanted to bid anyone "good night" they would say Philadelphia.

But I did try to learn something about the Japanese money and its various divisions, only I had bad luck from the start. I got hold of the wrong customer, or else he did.

I started in to buy some sandals and a hat. I know that one yen, at par, is worth almost exactly 50 cents American money, and that ten rin go to a sen, and 100 sen to a yen. But the old man who waited on me either knew no more than I did, or was exploiting some new and original methods of his own; for he held up the sandals in one hand and the hat in the other, the while he ejaculated in a low guttural: "Mon! mon!"

"Oh, yes! I gotta da mon!" I replied, pulling out my purse, and spreading some Japanese coins in my palm.

But he shook his head and held up his forefinger, saying: "Shy!"

"Oh, I'm shy one, am I? Well, take this!" and I threw the largest coin I had into the little basket before him. But this seemed to excite him. He wagged his forefinger at me and cried: "Bunkyu!" at the top of his voice.

"Bunco me? I guess not, my friend!" I replied. "I'm from New York!"

At this he threw down the hat and sandals, and, shaking his hands as though he were trying to get rid of soap-suds, cried: "Shi-mon! shi-mon!"

"Oh, I was shy one, and now I'm shy the whole business! Well, I don't think you and I will make a deal to-day!" and, sweeping the coins into my purse, I was preparing to be gone.

Suddenly he leaned forward, thrust his face close to mine, and in the most indescribable manner hissed through his teeth: "Ichi-bu! Ichi-bu!"

Well, say! Did you ever play that idiotic game with a six or seven months' old infant, sayyed Kitch-a-boo? The baby lies in the cradle, or on its mother's lap, as the case may be, and you, wishing to make yourself solid with the family, lean over toward the infant and then teeter back again, and then teeter forward, sputtering: "Kitch-a-boo! Kitch-a-boo!" until it's ten to one that the kid either goes into fits or lets out a howl that makes the mother wish that murder was not a punishable offense.

If you have ever indulged in that tender little pastime, then you can have some idea of my frame of mind when the old Jap performed this strange antic. Backing away from him, I shook my head violently and thrust my purse into my pocket; when he plucked me by the sleeve, and with a whine that would have done credit to a Hester street old clothes man, said: "Kaaye! Kanye!"

"No, I can't! and I'm hanged if I ever will!" and with that I turned away, and the negotiations was at an end.

Now, what do you think was the matter with the old fellow? Why, he was not only a little touched in the upper story, but he knew nothing of the cash system of his country later than the vintage of 1868. He had been left to tend the shop for a few moments, and as usual I fell a victim to the change of circumstances. Let it be said, that, according to Delmar, the standard formerly was, as in China, the small round iron or bronze coins with the square hole in the center which were of three denominations: First, the mon; second, the bunkyu; third, the shi-mon. The shi was an oblong silver coin, and the ichi-bu another; the latter being equal to four shi. Kan-ye means the era of coinage; but the era on the old coins does not indicate the age of the coin. For example, coins made about 1860 bear the name of the era kanye.

The manufacture of all these ceased at the beginning of the present era of Meidji, that is to say, the 25th of January, 1868, which was the year when the present emperor assumed sovereign power. The mon is now valued at one rin, and the bunkyu at one and one-half rin. The old gold coins and the oblong silver ones are only to be found in the curio shops.

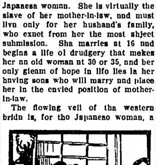
When her husband dies, even though she may be young and charming, the widow's hair is cut off, and she is doomed for the rest of her life to single blessedness and a cropped head. An old-time custom, which is fortunately dying out, was to blacken a woman's teeth when she got married. So it was hard to tell which was most disfiguring—getting a husband or losing one. Every district has its own distinctive marriage ceremony, but the following is the one in general use:

No priest officiates at the marriage ceremony. An elderly couple, called the "go-betweens," conduct the courtship and assist the bride and groom to perform the rite that makes them man and wife, which consists of nine cups of wine drunk alternately by the bride and groom, who hand them to each other. This is called the "san-san-kudo," literally "three-three-nine," and means that they will share the bitter and the sweet in life's cup together.

Sometimes there are the images of an old man and woman, a couple who lived happily for a hundred years; also a bough of plum-blossoms, symbol of conjugal happiness.

The bride wears white, the mourning color in Japan, to signify that her old life is ended—for marriage is too often a sort of death-in-life to the Japanese woman. She is virtually the slave of her mother-in-law, and must live only for her husband's family, who exact from her the most abject submission. She marries at 16 and begins a life of drudgery that makes her an old woman at 30 or 35, and her only gleam of hope in life lies in her having sons who will marry and place her in the envied position of mother-in-law.

The flowing veil of the western bride is, for the Japanese woman, a large hood made of white wadding, that modestly shades her features. When the ceremony—which is never witnessed by the guests—is completed, she retires and changes her costume; for the wedding kimono once doffed, is never worn again.

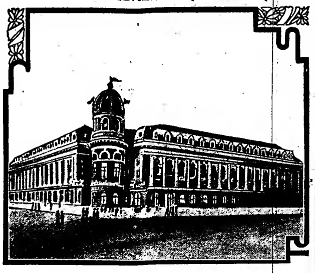


The Rite Which Makes Them Man and Wife.

When she is re-dressed, she appears at the feast to which guests are bidden. Very wealthy brides retire between each course—sometimes there are nine, sometimes seven or eleven, a regular game of crans!—and reappear in more gorgeous raiment, until you begin to think there's a corner in kimonos.

When the feasting is over, the "go between" couple conducts them to the bridal chamber and serves them a special cup called the "bed-wine." During the marriage ceremony the bridal pair do not drink the nine cups of wine, but merely touch their lips to the cup; for the well-known potency of the sake would have them paralyzed by about the fifth cup, and they'd never get married at all.

FINEST BASEBALL PARK IN WORLD



When the Philadelphia Athletics' new ground and grandstand is completed it will be the largest and finest equipped in the country. The plans have already been accepted, and the work is to be started at once. The lot measures 485 feet east and west and 520 feet north and south, containing 252,200 square feet—a greater area than contained in any other ball park in the country. An important feature of the work is that not a foot of lumber will be used. All the building materials are to be of steel and concrete except the wall which will be of brick. The grounds will have a seating capacity of not less than 30,000 people, and the stands will be built on the cantilever plan. The Athletic club will spend $500,000 upon the plant, and when the work is finished the club will have the finest baseball park in the world. The above picture shows the buildings as they will appear when completed.

EASTERN CRITIC COMPARES GIANTS AND HIGHLANDERS

McGraw's Men Have Call Because They Can Enlist Jim Corbett and Louis Mann.

It is hard to compare, at this early stage of the 1908 season, the Highlanders with the Giants.

The Highlanders will have Niles, Stahl, Glade, Elberfield, and Edward Everett Bell among their principal pillars.

The Giants will have Mathewson, Bresnahan, Doolin, Tenney, Shannon, Jim Corbett, and Louis Mann.

Chesbro, for the Americans, is not so young as he used to be, but he is ready and willing to play the game of his life, and there is no use in going back of a man's intentions. Mathewson, if we compare him with Chesbro, has a slight shade—a shade about as big, let us say, as Jack Johnson, who is not such a slight shade. He, too, is ready and willing to play the game of his life.

Next, comparing Newton with Taylor, the Highland southpaw has a distinct advantage, because he can say positively that he is ready to play the game of his life, and the silent Mr. Taylor can only indicate his good intentions by wiggling his fingers. Doc Newton, on the other hand, is afraid to go home in the dark, while Taylor, never hearing any noises, is always perfectly willing to beat noises, is always perfectly willing to beat it home to his flat early in the evening.

Mr. William Hogg of the Highlanders, compared with Iron Man McGinnity, the old polo grounds standby, loses by several lengths. McGinnity is usually steady under fire, while the Hogg person, like the animal of the same name, frequently becomes frantic in times of danger.

Wiltse and Ames will rank favorably with Glade and Doyle, and here, in view of the fact that the Giants have run out of pitchers, the comparison must come to a halt.

All the catchers for the two New York clubs are ready and willing to play the game of their lives, except Kleinow, who is willing, but not ready. Bresnahan has it on Kleinow a mile, James and Blair ought to pair off about evenly, and the other youngsters should balance the scales.

Chase has Fred Tenney at first base by a big margin, no matter how brilliantly Tenney may perform for the Giants. Chase is too fast for Mr. Tenney, too fast for his teammates, too fast for the league. Chase is so fast he could be started in the third race and win the second.

The second base position is more or less in doubt on both clubs. It is true that Merkle and Herzog are practically experiments on the polo grounds team, but it is also true that Harry Niles, with all his speed as a base runner, falls a long way short of such second basemen as Evers, Huggins, or Lajoie.

At shortstop, Elberfield, of course, has it on Bridwell. The latter is a surprisingly clever infielder, but he is not Elberfield, and although the little Tennessee gamecock has his faults and makes his occasional wild throws, he is a valuable man on any baseball club. There's no getting around that.

There is much doubt about the Hilltop outfield, and it appears as though McGraw's men had the age here.

SMITHS PROMINENT IN PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL

May Be Found in All Sections of the Country—Clever Players of Every Hue.

Much fear has been expressed in recent years lest the valiant family of Smiths, who have done so much to baseball, should die out and pass away from the game. Wrong idea. Even though Alec Smith has skidooed, there are enough Smiths left to flood a couple of leagues. Here is the list of the gallant Smiths in professional baseball:

Catchers—Smith of Pittsburg, the Athletics, Pueblo, Columbia, S. C., and Madison, Wis.

Pitchers—Smith of Cincinnati, Smith of the Sox, Smith of Washington, and the Smiths of Youngstown, Eau Claire, and Madison—the latter not the same Madison Smith who caught.

First Basemen—Smith of Springfield, O., and Lansing, Mich.

Second Basemen—Smith of Grand Rapids, Charleston, and Buffalo.

Third Basemen—Smith of Newark, O., and Los Angeles.

Shortstops—Smith of Washington, Springfield, Mo., and Lansing, Mich.

Outfielders—Smith of Birmingham, Newcastle, Kane, Bradford and Oakland.

Don't overlook the Smiths. They are coming along thicker than ever.

In case any fastidious ball crank should ever insist on a nine made up of different colors, quite a clever assortment of players could be shown him. Most of the men are either White or Brown by hue, but there are a few others. The Whites of professional baseball last season were Dr. White of the Sox, White of Denver, first base; White of Lancaster, pitcher; White of Oklahoma, shortstop; White of Dubuque, catcher; White of Charleston, pitcher; White of Edmonton, shortstop; White of Buffalo, fielder, and two Whites, positions not given, in Kansas. The Whites, by shifting a couple of them, could put up an awful battle as a family team.

The Browns are thus located: Brown of Chicago, pitcher; Brown of Philadelphia Nationals, pitcher; Browne of Boston Nationals, fielder; Brown of Lynn, first base; Brown of New Haven, pitcher; Brown of Boston, catcher; Brown of Cedar Rapids, first base; Brown of St. Louis Americans, first base.

Other colored gents in the business: Bay of Cleveland; Blue of St. Louis, Green of Milwaukee, Golden of Norwich, Sorrel of Nashville, Ruby of Springfield, Lemon of Clinton, Redman of Youngstown, Black of Keokuk, Green of Burlington, Gray of Webb City, Whiteman of Houston, Gray of Monroe.

BASEBALL NOTES

Jack Thoney, the Fort Thomas boy, has signed his contract with the Boston Americans.

Pete Noonan, Andy Conkley's old battery partner up at Holy Cross' college, has been sold to St. Paul by the St. Louis Nationals.

Joe Sugden, well remembered as catcher for Pittsburg, and later with the two St. Louis teams, is gradually fading from view. His latest hike is out to Vancouver, B. C., where he will play the coming season.

Rube Waddell, transferred to St. Louis by the Philadelphia Americans, led the big league pitchers in the matter of strikeouts last season, causing 231 of his opponents to fan the air.

Manager McAleer of the St. Louis Americans says he will hold on to Catcher Jack O'Conner, utilizing him solely to educate his young pitchers in the art of behaving properly on the rubber.

President Murphy of the Chicagos declares that he would not sell Artie Hofman for $12,000. This in answer to the Brooklyn club's offer of $10,000 for "Circus Solly."

A Columbus, O., inventor is working hard to produce a rubber pop bottle guaranteed not to kill when thrown at an umpire. He hopes to have it ready for the pop brigade before the opening of the season.

Bob Wicker, former Cub and former Red, has purchased his release from President Bryce of the Columbus club and, it is said, he will seek a berth with a major league team.

Ban Johnson says that the New York Highlanders have the fastest combination in the American league.

It may have been the fault of the prospective bride—anyhow, since the Philadelphia shortstop decided to get married he has changed the spelling of his name. It is Doolin no longer, but Doolan.

Roger Bresnahan says that baseball writers don't seem to figure the Giants at all this year as one of the leading claimants for championship honors. The harness wonder claims that it is due to the fact that the new recruits do not hail from higher minor leagues.

THE HARVEST TIME

REWARDS WE REAP FOR THE EFFORTS WE MAKE.

CROPS ARE OF MANY KINDS

Some Remarks of a Homely Character for Application to Everyday Affairs—Few Have Real Cause for Complaint.

There is a harvest time for all. Some reap their rewards late in life, others in early manhood; but none need expect to sow tares and garner any valuable crop. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." Often we do the sowing and some one else gathers the crop, and we only get the stubbles. But this is our harvest. Sometimes we plant, and find our growing fields devastated by the elements. Our harvest is barely worth the reaping. Still, is there any cause why we should complain that nature is unkind to us? Are we not to blame more often than we think? Have we not the warning that we shall reap as we sow? The planting implies that intelligence be used in selecting the soil, in choosing the place least likely to be within the storm belt, and where the lightning will not strike nor the hail fall. Then the quality of the soil and its preparation. It cannot be expected that among the rocks and stones in the barren places the seed planted will grow. Nor is it wise to not carefully select the seed, some that may not germinate. And don't forget that when your choice is made to see that the winnowing is properly done, and that no obnoxious weeds have a chance to spring up with the golden grain.

Too many of us—and some one has said, an honest confession is good for the soul—neglect to plant the proper kind of crop. Instead of honor, good health, riches of mind and material wealth, we reap instead the severest criticisms of public opinion, shattered nerves and poverty. A happy mind and disposition, and a feeling of kindness toward all fellowmen is a crop worth reaping. To have the respect of the masses that we come daily in contact with, is another thing desirable and an honorable name, good health and a conscience at peace is a harvest that is greater than many men of millions can ever hope to garner.

Yes, we may make mistakes in our sowing, and be disappointed with the results of the harvest time, but still there is contentment in store for the husbandman who after exercising care finds in spite of all disappointment comes, and drought and pests destroy. Still despair not of the future, for harvest time for all will come, and diligence and perseverance will eventually bring the reward sought.

In all affairs of life the elements of chance play an eminent part. Life is not a mathematical problem that is positive. Neither is it theoretical. Still all there is bends to natural laws, unchangeable, unalterable, and even the calamities that befall, are controlled by these same laws; but the mind of the mortal fails to understand them. Life is a conflict. The little spear of wheat seeks its existence with no certainty. The tares, the thistles battle with it and threaten annihilation. The careful gardener knows the danger of weeds rendering his work a loss. He removes the rank and useless growth, that his plants may get their share of nitrogen and oxygen and may thrive. But however great his care, still chance must be struggled with. The heat of the sun, those life-giving rays, may even destroy; the hurricane may level, and the hail cut down.

Much in similitude is man's harvest to the harvest of the poor gardener. Yet, there are other seasons, and other harvests coming. No use to despair. The brave man in battle has the fewest fears. Let us strive to have our harvest time come with its plenty, and let us work that it will be a harvest of good. Success sometimes comes only after long waiting. But let us be careful in our springtime sowing, and it is hardly possible that we will not reap a just harvest.

Tricks in the Soap Business.

Soap is one of the staples for which there is a heavy demand. There are numerous standard brands in the market, all of which are time-tested and not found lacking in good qualities. These are the kind that the people are never disappointed in. But some who are looking for bargains are willing to try anything new that comes up, if it be only recommended by some friend or widely advertised. One of the latest soap deals, which, by the way is an old game in a new dress, is to offer bargains in soap "just as good" as the old standard brands and at one-third the cost. A flattering offer is made to the housewife to lay in a supply. The statement is made that instead of using money for advertising in the papers the company intends to give the people the benefit, and the price named is about one-third that standard brands are sold for. Not alone this, but some cheap clock, a rug, a set of chinaware or some other article is offered as a premium, and sometimes an extra box is given with every two cases offered. The soap comes. It looks good, but after a few weeks more than one-third of its weight is evaporated. The soap is filled with water, and when that dries out the 12-ounce cake if placed on the scales will be found to weigh about seven or eight ounces.

IMPOVERISHING THE COMMUNITY

Constant Drain of Money Certain to Have Depressing Effects.

It is surprising how little the people of towns consider the way that communities are impoverished by the money which is sent away to other cities for goods that might as well be bought at home. In one of the live western towns, a county seat, and having a population of more than 1,500, a banker who is in position to know said that in a single day he knew of more than $600 in money orders having been sent from the town to retail order houses. Just think of this! There are about 20 business places in the town, and this amount going away daily keeps the place from advancing. It is hardly that the merchants cannot meet catalogue competition, but the farmers and others who send away for supplies never give the storekeepers in their home town an opportunity to give prices on the articles wanted. They get their money order at the express or post-office or their draft at the bank and send off without a word to any merchant as to the goods they need. Such people are not good citizens, in every sense of the word. They lack love of home and good will toward their town. The total store bill of the average farmer does not amount to more than $400. Say that he could even save 10 per cent. on the goods he orders—and he does not save a cent, in fact—it would only be $40 a year. But the money sent away from many communities aggregates millions of dollars to the wealth of the big houses and injure their own town to just that extent.

A western banker met by the writer, in conversation as to the extent of the business done by catalogue houses, said that the exchange paid his bank for drafts was nearly enough to pay all the ordinary expense of the institution. Just think of this! Are the people losing their senses? Are there conditions in any town that justify that the ones who are making their living from the country, who have a share of the taxes to pay, who should have pride in seeing their home town and the country around advance, shall send their dollars to far-off cities for supplies? It is a sorry condition. There is nothing to justify it only the ignorance of the ones who think that they may save a few dollars in the course of a year by sending away for their goods. One of the misleading things in the advertising of the big catalogue houses is the claim that goods are sold just as low as the merchant buys them. This is not so. The merchant must have a legitimate profit in his business. It is just that he should. The farmer would consider a man unreasonable who would ask him to sell the products of his farm for just the cost to produce them. The good farmer makes on all his crops, after good wages are allowed for himself, a percentage for interest on his investment, a greater amount by many per cent. than does the grocer, the dry goods or the clothing man or the implement man. Still, how many begrudgingly patronize home stores, and only when they wish accommodation, and their ready cash goes to the out-of-town concerns that handle prison-made goods and "seconds" and shoddy stuff. It is too bad; the people need more pride in home, more ideas of equity, and need much more education in economic matters.

FOR HOME IMPROVEMENT.

Necessity of Harmonious Co-Operation on Part of All Citizens.

Towns in agricultural districts apparently are awakening to the importance of organizing clubs and associations for the purpose of public improvements and the protection of home industries. The field for work is broad. It is the business of the town that makes the place of importance. Any institution that will give employment to labor, that will bring more people and more capital to any town is a thing to be desired. Many towns in which commercial clubs have been lately organized, have a wide field in the simple matter of keeping the people of the town and surrounding country from sending money to other cities for supplies of various kinds that can as well be purchased at home. Every dollar sent to a mail-order house or department store in another city impoverishes the town just so much. It is the business men of the small towns who pay the taxes, support the churches and schools, not the far-off mail-order house, and they are deserving of all the trade of their home place. Don't try to bring new business establishments to your town until local evils are remedied.

Personality in Business.

Personality in business is an important thing. There are the John Wanamaker stores, Marshall Field, the Tiffanys—and you can go down the line from the time of A. T. Stewart and Taylor and you will find that there is a great deal in a name in the mercantile line. In every town the successful stores can be picked out at a glance. In some towns there seems to be an inclination to avoid the use of signs, and there are stores with nothing to indicate the stocks of goods carried or the names of the owners. Generally the interiors of these stores are in harmony with the outside—an indication of lax business methods and a kind of catch-as-catch-can affair, as far as gathering in trade is concerned. Such methods have never been known to pay well. In fact, it is the hustler who wins out, and the merchant who hides his proverbial light under the bushel will sooner or later get out of business with the balance on the wrong side of the ledger.

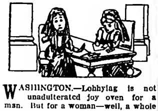
Washington Whisperings

Interesting Bits of News Gathered at the National Capital.

Women Lobbyists Are Most Unpopular



WASHINGTON.—Lobbying is not unadulterated joy even for a man. But for a woman—well, a whole calendar of saints would not be too many for the special protection and consolation of the woman who goes to Washington with an ax to grind.

There are really three lobbies at the house end of the capitol. One has for its habitat a luxurious suite of rooms, with soft carpets, beautiful paintings.

A good share of the men who are seeing congressmen have to do their lobbying, such as it is, in the corridor near the main entrance to the house. It's a mixed lot of humanity that gathers there, eagerly or sadly waiting for a response to the cards that have been sent in.

The women are still further away. Their lobby is a corner of Statuary hall.

The marble columns partly shut it away from the main hall, and there are chairs and a table where the women write their pathetic, apologetic notes. Many of them are in mourning; their eyes are frightened and appealing. Others are plainly pests.

It's not always clear to a congressman which he hates worse to see, the penniless woman who is absolutely incompetent to do anything much except starve, or the woman who is always nagging him for another job.

The first one makes him sorry for her. The second makes him sorry for himself. Both sensations are uncomfortable, and the consequence is that he very often tries to shirk the whole experience by not going out at all in response to these cards and notes.

As a capitol employe said: "Say, that corner over there makes me have the blues to beat the band. Them women in their black dresses, waitin' an' waitin' for a congressman that's probably hidin' in a cloakroom for the special purpose of dodgin' an interview with 'em, would drive a married man to drink or to the life insurance company."

The Postmaster General and His Name

THE postmaster general's name is George von Lengerke Meyer. It would be supposed that most Americans, especially those having business with this particular cabinet officer, would be able to get the name right. But they aren't. Any number of Americans can't pronounce the president's name, but it is not a matter of precision of pronunciation in connection with that of Mr. Meyer. The "von" fascinates the throng. They can't get away from it.

They know that a German with a "von" before his last name is noble, and this proposition looms large in their conceptions of the postmaster general. "George v. L. Meyer," "G. v. L. Meyer" and "George von L. Meyer" are the various ways the official's name appears on departmental papers, and that should be sufficient to secure accuracy in address and speech. But it isn't. The "L." or "Lengerko" are half the time ignored, and the magic preposition "von" prefixed directly to the family name, so that the postmaster general often receives letters addressed to "George von Meyer," "Postmaster General von Meyer" or—a particular detestation—"Gen. von Meyer," which has a field-marshally sound, suggesting clanking sabers and a charge to the death. Letters so addressed come from persons who should know better—officials and others close to the public affairs of the nation.

A magazine which pretends to national importance and is always filled with accounts of Washington affairs recently printed a full-page picture of the postmaster general and labeled it in large type "Postmaster General von Meyer." And the magazine is published in Boston, whence Mr. Meyer hails. A card in one of the elevators of the postoffice department was brought up to date by one of the employes, who, when the cabinet change came, crossed out the name of Mr. Cortelyou and substituted "von Meyer." The card hung undisturbed for months and may be there yet. It is interesting to wonder how this error arose and why it persists. There is apparently no good reason for it except carelessness in observation or a habit of grandiloquence. But the postmaster general is evidently doomed to remain "von Meyer" to a large number of Americans, since a remedy seems to be lacking.

Pete, Whitehouse Bulldog, Still Dead

THERE was great excitement in Washington when it was reported the other day that Pete, the bulldog, had returned.

Pete was the pet who almost started war between the United States and the rest of the world by tearing the trousers of diplomats. At one time he had the United States army on the run in the person of the secretary of war.

Pete disappeared some time ago, and diplomats, cabinet members and senators, knowing how much the president thought of him, called at the White House to offer condolences, coming out all smiles.

Then came the report that Pete had reappeared. Only strangers entered the White House grounds after this report became current. The president himself was one of the most interested. He said if Pete had returned it was a twentieth century miracle. So he investigated.

The investigation developed that Thomas R. Stone, veteran usher at the White House, had a brindle bulldog, which he has named Pete in honor of the original, only he calls this one Pete the Bulldog II.

The original Pete was white, and died under stress of circumstances in April of last year. Some one hit him with a brick in the White House lot.

Why Uncle Joe Cannon Clings to His Job

ACCORDING to Uncle Joe Cannon, his one great consuming ambition is not to be president of the United States, but to have a grand funeral at public expense—not yet a while, of course. He confided his ambition to a few congressional friends on the occasion of a recent dinner.

He took it up sectionally. He went back to the first term he served in congress and how he felt particularly glum one day. Hale of Maine, then in the house, read his thought.

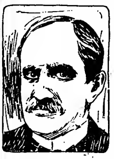
"Cannon," said Hale, "you're thinking about resigning right now or retiring as soon as your term expires. But you won't. Pretty soon you'll get word that some fellow out your way is a candidate for your job and then you'll get mad and insist on keeping it for yourself."

That's what happened. Uncle Joe's ambition for congressional honors revived and he returned to the house. After he had served a few terms and was just about ready to throw the pesky job over, some one out his way announced that as a congressman "Uncle Joe" had been a failure and that some one else ought to be nominated. That quickened his pulses once more and again he sought the nomination and election which but for interference he might have spurned. Thus it went, until his influence in the house began to wax until important chairmanships came his way, until the speakership was in sight.

"And now," concluded the speaker, "my highest ambition is to be a member of the house as long as I live, to die during a session of congress, and to be buried at the public expense with all you fellows at the funeral discussing, with bated breath, the question of my successor."

IN THE LIMELIGHT

TO BRING FLEET HOME



Rear Admiral Charles S. Sperry, who will succeed Admiral Robley D. Evans as commander of the United States fleet now in the Pacific ocean, and who is to bring the "big sixteen" back to the Atlantic coast by circling the globe, has had long and distinguished service in the navy. He is a native of New York, but is accredited to Connecticut in his appointment to the naval academy. He became a rear admiral in May, 1906.

During the war with Spain Admiral Sperry was equipment officer in the New York navy yard. Afterward he was given command of the Yorktown in Philippine waters, and directed the movements of the landing party on the eastern shore of Luzon, which is now regarded as one of the most thrilling adventures of the campaign against Aguinaldo.

As one of the officers under Admiral Walker Sperry helped to make successful the picturesque voyage of the "white squadron" which visited Europe and South America in 1891-93. From the commander of the New Orleans on the China station, Admiral Sperry became president of the war college.

His next detail was to the last Hague peace conference, where he went as one of the American delegates. Returning from The Hague, he was given sea duty, and assigned to command the fourth division of the Atlantic fleet, in which capacity he has made the trip around the horn with Admiral Evans.

Admiral Sperry is 60 years old and has been in the navy since his graduation from Annapolis in 1866. He is a native of Brooklyn, N. Y. His appointment as ensign was in 1868 and he became a captain in 1900. Since November 16, 1903, he has been president of the United States Naval War College at Newport, R. I., as well as a member of the general board of the navy.

EX-SENATOR UNDER CLOUD

Marion Butler, former United States senator from North Carolina, who is accused by Congressman Lilley of being hired by the Electric Boat Company to influence legislation, has had a somewhat checkered career. He was studying law at the University of North Carolina when his father died and he had to return home to run the farm and attend to the bringing up of his younger brothers and sisters. For three years he also taught in a neighboring academy. Then he became a politician and a newspaperman by joining the Farmers' Alliance and starting two papers, the Clinton Caucasian and the Raleigh Caucasian. This proved a stepping stone to the state senate which he reached in 1890. The following year he became president of the Farmers' Alliance and in 1894 was elected president of the national organization.

Butler had the strongest kind of an antipathy for Grover Cleveland, and when the latter was nominated in 1892 he left the Democratic party. He did not retire from politics, however, for he immediately set to work to organize the Populist party.

In 1896 he was elected to the United States senate for the long term, and sat until 1901, during which time he was also chairman of the national executive committee of the People's party. During this time also he reentered the law school and commenced the practice of law within a year. He has law offices in Washington as well as in Raleigh, and it is because he accepted the business of the Electric Boat Company when it came his way that he comes under the suspicion of Congressman Lilley.

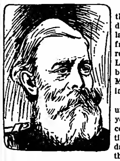
LORD WHO TALKED TOO MUCH

Lord Tweedmouth, first lord of the admiralty, who has stirred up a great muss because he bragged about a personal letter received from Emperor William, has been in English politics long enough to keep his mouth shut. If he were a plain American he would be known as Edward Majoribanks. His wife is a sister of the duke of Marlborough. He is an Oxford man and a lawyer, and first entered parliament in 1886. In 1882-5 he was home secretary. When made first lord of the admiralty in 1906 he did a very pleasing thing from an American standpoint. Up to that time it had been the rule that in all contracts given out by the admiralty the contractors should engage themselves to use nothing but British manufactures and materials. Tweedmouth decided the admiralty should be free to buy in the most profitable markets. This gave American firms a chance to compete against English concerns.

Lord Tweedmouth has been singularly unfortunate in private investments. Not a great while ago he transferred the Meux brewery, of which he had a large bunch of stock, into a joint stock company, and when the scrip was put onto the market its fortunes began to decline, and with it went considerable of Tweedmouth's money, for he fought hard bolstering it up. Other investments also panned out poorly.

Tweedmouth descended from Thomas Marjoribanks, who became lord provost of Edinburgh in 1541, and has an only son who, after emerging victoriously from a breach of promise suit brought against him by Miss Birdie Sutherland of the Gaiety theater, married Miss Muriel Brodicks, daughter of the secretary of state for India in the Balfour cabinet.

A VETERAN REGENT



Prince Luitpold, regent of Bavaria, celebrated the eighty-seventh anniversary of his birth a few days ago amid a brilliant gathering of the Bavarian nobility. Telegraphic congratulations came from Emperor William and the heads of the reigning houses of the empire, and from abroad. Later there was an immense military serenade before the palace, in which the entire garrison of Munich took part. The prince replied by appearing at one of the palace windows and bowing.

The effects of his many years are almost unnoticeable. The venerable regent looks much younger than he is. He is in splendid physical condition. His limbs have retained their elasticity, his muscles are still hard, and nearly every day he defies wind and weather and undergoes the hardships of the chase, wearing always the old fashioned greenish-gray shooting costume peculiar to Bavaria.

He goes about in thick hob-nailed shoes drawn over his bare feet, the woolen stockings of his costume merely covering the calves of his legs. His knees are bare, for the trousers of this costume are short knickerbockers. A flannel shirt, a rough home-spun jacket and a soft Alpine hat, adorned with the beard of a mountain goat, complete his outfit. He passes many a night in his sparsely furnished and primitive shooting lodges so as to be ready for the early morning excursions after game. The regent only stops hunting when the snow in the mountains is too deep to permit travel.

Talk of New York

Gossip of People and Events Told in Interesting Manner.

Millionaires Parting with Their Yachts

NEW YORK.—The sailing of yachts will not be so much of a millionaire's "sport" this year as in the past. For various reasons a large number of owners have decided to give up their magnificent floating palaces, and 50 of the most famous sailing craft in local waters have been placed upon the market. The aggregate value of the fleet, among which are three Vanderbilt, two Gould and one Astor boat, is placed at close to $4,000,000. Many of them, if not sold, will not be put into commission. The money panic, a desire to buy larger craft and a diminishing interest in the sailing fad are given as the reasons.

Among the most famous of the floating dream palaces for sale is John Jacob Astor's Nourmahal, upon which the owner spent several kinds of fortunes. The rugs on this craft cost enough alone to make the ordinary rich man feel a slight dizziness in the exchequer. Then there are old racers, transatlantic competitors, steam yachts and sailing ships, barks, sloops and squareriggers. All must go, and most of them at a sacrifice.

Among the yachts on which prices have been named are George Gould's 379-ton Atalanta, formerly Amzi L. Barbour's British built Lorene, and Frank J. Gould's Helenita, which he named after his sister. Three Vanderbilt yachts are in the market. They are Frederick W. Vanderbilt's 174-ton Conqueror, Cornelius Vanderbilt's 70-foot sloop Rainbow and W. K. Vanderbilt's 70-footer Virginia. Cornelius Vanderbilt, as commodore of the New York Yacht club, will keep his steamer North Star for his flag ship.

Detectives Now Watch Bank Officials

WITHIN a few weeks, in the wake of recent financial developments, detectives of New York city have found a new branch of their business developing in learning the reputation, and, as far as possible, the character of bank officers and directors. It is nothing new for a bank to want to know something about the men with whom it is doing business, but now the depositors are getting more particular and are becoming deeply interested in the men who handle their money and want to know their associates, habits of life and general business methods.

"It was about a month ago when my attention was called to this," said a member of a lower Broadway detective agency in speaking of the matter recently. "A large depositor of one of the banks in this section came to me with a list of its officers and asked me to learn all I could of their habits, methods and associates, both business and social. In two weeks I made my report, in consequence of which he changed his account to another bank, on which I likewise reported.

It has been learned that this same sort of thing is going on in many directions and that depositors in the banks of the metropolis are more than ever interested in the personnel of the banks with which they are transacting business.

Another detective told of a group of seven depositors who had joined and retained him to report on the directors of the bank where they did business. About a week before he had reported that there was one questionable man in the directory, who was engaged in doubtful transactions, the man resigned, and the bank took particular pains to give the matter the broadest publicity.

In another case a depositor, who carries an average balance of $200,000, said: "Why shouldn't we be particular about this matter? The fact is that the general business public has been entirely too lax in this direction. We have been governed entirely too much by bank statements, capital, surplus, dividends and all that sort of stuff, when we didn't know what the men inside were really doing or what, from their characters, they were likely to do. We have found out what some of the rough transactions under a smooth surface have been, and it behooves us to know a lot more about the men who are behind the fine appearance that a bank may make on the face that is presented to the public."

Metz to Abolish "Ambulance Chaser"

COMPTROLLER METZ is after the "ambulance chaser," an ancient adjunct to police headquarters, and his occupation is threatened. "Ambulance chaser" is a term used to identify petty lawyers, or their clerks, who make it their chief business to watch the police slips for accidents, fires and the like in the chance of striking a fee.

The comptroller has announced that he had established a bureau of claims, which will investigate and adjust claims against the city. This bureau will keep a man at police headquarters, who will copy the slips and notify the comptroller's office in time to have a city inspector beat the "chaser" in calling on some one who has a possible case against the city.

Nearly every slip is interesting to the ambulance chaser. He likes a fire, for then he may get the job of adjusting the insurance. He enjoys better, though, a report of an accident—especially of a street car accident. Then he makes a bee line for the hospital where the injured person is, and imparts vivid details of a hastily formed plan for suing somebody, especially the city.

Some new fields of enterprise have been brought under cultivation by claim lawyers, but Mr. Metz believes if he can produce an early frost in these fields he will nip a promising harvest in the bud and thereby save hundreds of thousands of dollars to the city treasury.

Ideal Bachelor Married for Seven Years

WILLIAM FISHER LEWIS, famed throughout the length and breadth of the land as "The Ideal Bachelor," was not, it develops, so adamantine in the face of Cupid's blandishments as supposed.

The arrival in Philadelphia of the "woman hater's" New York widow revealed the astonishing fact that for seven years, while the club man and bon vivant was posing as the man with a heart no descendant of Eve could touch, he was enjoying the quiet life of a benedict in this city with a wife who was formerly his housekeeper.

Nothing in years has so amazed the best families in the Quaker City or caused such a shock to those who knew the world famous "Ideal Bachelor" as the revelation of the gentleman as a simple contractor living with his wife at the Hotel Marseille in New York city.

Not that there was anything underhanded in Mr. Lewis' marriage. Not at all. The ceremony was regularly performed in church, and the widow, who was formerly Miss Emily C. Bentzon, a housekeeper at the Hotel Malvern, Bar Harbor, Me., has the wedding certificate properly made out and regularly signed by the clergyman. It was only that Mr. Lewis took too much pride in his reputation, which had been exploited in the magazines and the Sunday papers, to disillusionize his friends.

The "Ideal Bachelor" died at the Hotel Marseille in this city several days ago. Up to that time the friends in Philadelphia had no suspicion of his marriage. Then Mrs. Lewis made her appearance at the city hall in Philadelphia and proved herself to be his widow. In his will the late clubman acknowledges her and names her the executrix of his estate.

A New Precedent.

A new precedent in insanity cases has been set by William H. Holmes of Omaha, on trial for the embezzlement of $700. Although insanity is his sole defense, no alienists have been called, no one has testified to hereditary taints, and no mention has been made of brainstorm or exaggerated ego. The witnesses have all been ordinary citizens who have met him in everyday life. Sam Hoff, ex-sheriff and member of the legislature, testifies that he believes Holmes insane, because he wants a bath every day and is scrupulous about his dress. George Stryker, another ex-sheriff, says that Holmes would have "a roaring toothache evenings, but would be all right mornings," which, coupled with the fact that he turned out his gas in jail at 8 p. m. and went to sleep, though the rules allowed him to have it going till 9, proved madness conclusively. The only departure from the home-made brand of evidence was when Holmes' attorney argued that, as all the masters of music, art, literature and politics had been more or less crazy, Holmes must undoubtedly be so. One telling argument was adduced—the prisoner ate breakfast foods! However, remarks the New York Post, no one thought to point out the most conclusive proof of all, namely, that, if he had not been insane, Holmes never would have embezzled merely $700.

The Man We Envy.

In one of his plays, Bernard Shaw remarks that "the man with the toothache thinks everyone happy whose teeth are sound, and the poverty-stricken man makes the same mistake about the rich man." So it is with most things. One always feels that the thing one does not possess, or the thing one cannot do, is the one thing essential to happiness. The unsuccessful think the successful must be happy. The invalids think if they had health nothing else would matter. The laboring man thinks if he only had leisure he would be content. But, fortunately, happiness is not the prerogative of any class of people or station in life. No doubt some are gifted with a happier and more cheerful temperament than others, says the New York Weekly, but one's point of view is really largely a matter of habit, and the thing to do is to try and get into a habit of letting one's thoughts dwell on the pleasant things of life as much as possible and forget its worries as soon as may be.

"A nobleman who becomes the husband of an American heiress enters into the marriage with a proper respect for his bride. He does not crave the alliance because of the financial reasons, but because he is dominated by the overwhelming beauty and fairness of the American girl. He is carried away by her philosophy, her logic, her irresistible and fascinating mien," says an Austro-Hungarian visitor in Washington. Be-oo-tiful! But why, asks the Baltimore American, is it that only girls with the largest sort of fortunes have the peculiar brand of philosophy, logic and irresistible and fascinating mien to appeal to the foreign aspirants for American wives?

It is inspiring to read that the Association of Master Plumbers is animated by the noble desire to mitigate human suffering and lessen disease by improving the standard of plumbing. The enthusiasm with which the average citizen greets this sentiment gets something of a jolt, however, with the further announcement that by giving the people sanitary plumbing the organization will be able to command prices that will pay its members for the good work they do. Dear, dear, and most of us thought we had been paying enough to secure that kind of work all the time!

Even the Arabian Nights contains nothing more gorgeously weird than the story which comes from Alabama concerning one Smith who ran half a mile to a doctor, his head fastened to his neck only by a shred of flesh. Smith might have toted his top piece much more easily had he sawed it entirely off and carried it in a bag slung over his shoulder.

The Pennsylvania railroad has served notice on the steel trust to furnish it rails without blowholes. Holes are endurable in bread and cheese and lace insertion, but the present railroad traffic is so heavy that it leaves dents in rails that are spongy.

Mr. Whitaker is modest. The English fortune he seeks amounts to only $600,000,000. Few people attempting to collect a mythical chancery estate would give up a penny of their claims for such a sum.

CHILAPA, MEXICO, IS RUINED

EARTHQUAKE AND FIRE DESTROY ENTIRE TOWN.

Loss of Life Unknown—Communication by Wire Severed and Place Far from Railway.

Mexico City, Mex.—Chilapa, a town of 15,000 inhabitants in the state of Guerrero, has been shaken by an earthquake and burned.

The shocks, two in number, occurred early Thursday evening and were followed by fires which, originating in a dozen places among the tumbling buildings, joined in a conflagration that swept the town. Only meager facts of the disaster are known here and what has been learned has dribbled in from a half dozen sources more or less authentic.

The loss of life, if any, as well as the monetary extent of the property damage, is problematical, and continued efforts to guage the catastrophe have been futile. Telegraph communication with Chilapa was severed by the shocks and the town is two days by horseback from the nearest railway station.

El Imparcial, the government organ, received a dispatch from its correspondent in the town of Chilpancingo, saying that the town of Chilepa, 30 miles distant from that place, was totally destroyed by the earthquake and that fire broke out in the ruins and is now completing the work of destruction. The people of the town are terrorized and many are praying in the open plaza and in the fields adjoining the town.

Some hours later the same correspondent sent the following dispatch: "Later returns confirm my first telegram: Chilapa has been shaken to the earth and reduced to ashes. I avoid the sending of details."

Mrs. Emma Jeannette Dorville, an American, lost her life in a panic in the Tiburcio theater in the city of Vera Cruz, which followed the earthquake of Thursday night.

St. Thomas, D. W. I.—A sharp earth shock occurred here Thursday afternoon and created much alarm. No damage, however, is reported.

Lexington, Ky.—The failure on the part of the state authorities to run down perpetrators of outrages committed by "night riders" culminated Tuesday in a direct appeal to the president of the United States for federal interference in Kentucky, in the form of a petition prepared by leading men of Lexington and central Kentucky.

The petitioners are aware that the president can take no action unless the governor so requests, but it is their purpose by this means to bring the two executives together in the matter for mutual discussion and consideration that may result in some sort of action.

CONGRESSMAN SHOOTS NEGRO.

Heflin of Alabama in Desperate Affray—Wounds Another Accidentally.

Washington.—In a desperate affray on a Pennsylvania avenue car Friday night, a negro and a white man were shot by Congressman Thomas J. Heflin of Alabama. The shooting of McCreary was accidental. Mr. Heflin was arrested and taken to the Sixth police precinct station where a charge of assault with intent to kill was placed against him. Later he was released on $5,000 bail.

Mr. Heflin rebuked the negro for drinking on the street car and the latter is said to have made a motion as if to draw a pistol.

HILL TURNED DOWN

KAISER REFUSES TO RECEIVE HIM AS AMBASSADOR.

REASON NOT YET KNOWN

Personal Objection of Emperor Connected with His Brother's Visit to America—Explanation on the Way.

Washington.—The German government has declined to receive Dr. David Jayne Hill in the capacity of American ambassador to succeed Charlemagne Tower. Dr. Hill is at present American minister to The Hague and was formerly first assistant secretary of state under the administration of Secretary Hay.

The objection to Dr. Hill is one purely personal to Emperor William, who has simply caused it to be made known that the American diplomatist is persona non grata to him. The reason for the emperor's objection is connected with the visit to America several years ago of his brother, Prince Henry, the ranking admiral of the German navy. Dr. Hill at that time was first assistant secretary of state and necessarily was brought into official contact with the distinguished foreign visitors. Just what he did or did not do to give offense is not known here.

Once Consented to Him.

A perplexing feature of the case is presented by the fact that last November the German government let it be known that Dr. Hill would be cordially received as American ambassador to Berlin. At that time Ambassador Tower, after the president had sought in vain to dissuade him from such a course, reached the decision that proper consideration for his own private business interests and the welfare of his children, whose education he deemed it necessary to perfect in America, obliged him to insist upon the acceptance of his resignation.

Dr. David Jayne Hill.

After a conference between Ambassador Sternberg and Secretary Root it was ascertained that a letter is en route from the German capitol which contains a full explanation of the reasons for the change of attitude on the part of that government toward Mr. Hill. In the absence of the details of the objection, no comment could be elicited as to the probable action of the American government in respect to the matter. In any event, it is regarded as certain that an expressed objection to Mr. Hill made by Germany will be decisive so far as his appointment is concerned.

Mr. Hill Much Surprised.

Paris. — David Jayne Hill, who arrived Wednesday evening from The Hague, expressed the greatest surprise when informed that the German government had declined to receive him in the capacity of American ambassador to succeed Charlemagne Tower. He said that this was the first intimation he had of the German government's action, and he was at a loss to understand the announcement, especially because he personally saw an official communication from Germany to the government at Washington expressing Germany's satisfaction over the ratification of his selection for that post by President Roosevelt.

Moreover, he said, on a recent visit to Berlin he did not hear anything that would lead him to believe that he was persona non grata to the German government, nor had he received the impression that the situation was different from that expressed in the official communication he read. President Roosevelt, he added, informed him that he intended to appoint him.

BANKER ROBBED OF $5,000

BOLD CRIME COMMITTED ON STREET AT LINCOLN, ILL.

Pay Roll of Mine Is Taken—Bandits Are Pursued and Two Are Captured.

Peoria, Ill.—Frank Froarer, president of a Lincoln (Ill.) bank and owner of the Lincoln Mining company, was held up by highwaymen Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock in Lincoln and robbed of $5,000—the monthly pay roll of the company.

Three men did the work and two of them were caught, but the third escaped with the money after a running fight with the police and deputy sheriffs.

The robbery occurred within two blocks of the public square. Frosrer was on the way to the mine in a light wagon carrying two satchels containing the money in small amounts already counted for the miners. He was stopped on the street by three men in a buggy and two of these got out of the buggy and, jumping into Froerer's rig, quickly bore him to the ground and grabbed the satchels, threw him into the buggy, jumped in and started out of the city at a fast clip. Froerer, who was not seriously injured, returned to the office and notified the officials.

The sheriff and night captain of police started at once and pursued the robbers two miles, at which point two men left the buggy and took to the cornfields. After a short time they were discovered and a duel began. Five shots were fired before the two surrendered, but neither was injured.

The men refuse to give their names and so far have not been identified. The third man, who escaped, was of dark complexion, about five feet ten inches tall and wore brown clothes.

HOTEL LELAND IN FLAMES.

Famous Hostelry in Springfield, Ill., Partly Burned.

Springfield, Ill.—The Leland hotel, one of the most widely known hotels in the country, and which has been the center of political gatherings for the last 30 years, was severely damaged by fire Thursday, entailing a loss on the proprietors, the Wiggins estate, of about $75,000.

The fire broke out while the Republican state convention was in session, three squares away, and when the delegates received word that the hotel was burning they leaped from their chairs, tore wildly for the doors and hastened to save their effects. No lives were lost, nor was any person injured.

The fire for a time threatened the building of the Springfield Journal, which is separated from the hotel by a narrow alley.

As soon as it was evident that the hotel was doomed the management sent all the available employes to the rooms of the guests in the effort to save as much as possible of their baggage. Some of it was lost, but, considering that the hotel was filled to its capacity and that the capacity was somewhat stretched by the number of delegates to the convention, it was surprising that so much property was saved. Some guests lost everything. But the greater part of the baggage was saved.

The delegates from the convention, when they came rushing up to the hotel, bent upon saving their belongings, were too much for the Springfield police department. They outnumbered it about twenty to one, and while an officer was trying to restrain one man from rushing into the hotel to save his property a dozen others would go tearing by and rush into the smoke-filled halls. Men repeatedly risked their lives to save their head baggage and overcoats.

ALDRICH BILL IS PASSED.

Currency Measure Goes Through the Senate, 42 to 16.

Washington.—The Aldrich currency bill was passed by the senate Friday by a vote of 42 to 16, in the main a party vote.

Previous to the taking of the vote on the Aldrich bill a vote was taken on the Bailey substitute, authorizing the government, instead of the national banks, to issue the emergency circulation for which the bill provides. The vote on the substitute stood 42 to 13, and this vote was entirely partisan, even Senator La Follette casting his vote with the Republicans.

NEURALGIA

The real meaning of the word Neuralgia is nerve-pain, and any one who has suffered with the malady will not be so anxious to know of its nature as to hear of its antidote. Though scarcely recognized by the profession and people half a century ago, it is now one of the most common and painful ailments which afflict humanity. As now generally understood the word signifies an affection of the nervous system, with pain in the course of the principal nerves.

The two great causes of Neuralgia are, Impoverishment of the Blood and Deficiency of Nerve Force; and the treatment of it is not so obscure as many would be led to suppose. The first thing is to relieve the pain, which is done more quickly and satisfactorily by ST. JACOBS OIL than by any other remedy known; the second object is to remove the cause, which is accomplished by the abundant use of nourishing food, of a nature to strengthen and give tone to both the muscular and nervous systems.

THE PRESIDENT GIVES OUTLINE OF LEGISLATION

In Special Message He Asks the Passage of Several Pending Bills.

WOULD AMEND TRUST LAWS

Believes Some Features of Present Statues Are Obsolete and Need Revising.

Would Prevent Both Blacklist and Boycott—Sees Need of Tariff Revision Commission and Immediate Waterway Legislation.

Washington, Mar. 25.—The following is the full text of the president's message sent to congress Wednesday:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: I call your attention to certain measures as to which I think there should be action by the congress before the close of the present session. There is ample time for their consideration. As regards most if not all of the matters, bills have been introduced into one or the other of the two houses, and it is not too much to hope that action will be taken one way or the other on these bills at the present session. In my message at the opening of the present session, and, indeed, in various messages to previous congresses, I have repeatedly suggested action on most of these measures.

Child labor should be prohibited throughout the nation. At least a model child-labor bill should be passed for the District of Columbia. It is unfortunate that in the one place solely dependent upon congress for its legislation there should be no law whatever to protect children by forbidding or regulating their labor.

I renew my recommendation for the immediate re-enactment of an employers' liability law, drawn to conform to the recent decision of the supreme court. Within the limits indicated by the court, the law should be made thorough and comprehensive, and the protection it affords should embrace every class of employe to which the power of the congress can extend.

In addition to a liability law protecting the employes of common carriers, the government should show its good faith by enacting a further law giving compensation to its own employes for injury or death incurred in its service. It is a reproach to us as a nation that in both federal and state legislation we have afforded less protection to public and private employes than any other industrial country of the world.

Injunction Legislation.

I also urge that action be taken along the line of the recommendations I have already made concerning injunctions in labor disputes. No temporary restraining order should be issued by any court without notice; and the petition for a permanent injunction upon which such temporary restraining order has been issued should be heard by the court issuing the same within a reasonable time—say, not to exceed a week or thereabouts from the date when the order was issued. It is worth considering whether it would not give greater popular confidence in the impartiality of sentences for contempt if it was required that the issue should be decided by another judge than the one issuing the injunction, except where the contempt is committed in the presence of the court, or in other case of urgency.

Rate Law Amendments.

I again call attention to the urgent need of amending the interstate commerce law and especially the anti-trust law along the lines indicated in my last message. The interstate commerce law should be amended so as to give railroads the right to make traffic agreements, subject to these agreements being approved by the interstate commerce commission and published in all of their details. The commission should also be given the power to make public and to pass upon the issuance of all securities hereafter issued by railroads doing an interstate commerce business.

A law should be passed providing in effect that when a federal court determines to place a common carrier or other public utility concern under the control of a receivership, the attorney general should have the right to nominate at least one of the receivers; or else in some other way the interests of the stockholders should be consulted, so that the management may not be wholly re-delivered to the man or men the failure of whose policy may have necessitated the creation of the receivership. Receiverships should be used, not to operate roads, but as speedily as possible to pay their debts and return them to the proper owners.

Would Amend Anti-Trust Law.

In addition to the reasons I have already urged on your attention, it has now become important that there should be an amendment of the anti-trust law, because of the uncertainty as to how this law affects combinations among labor men and farmers, if the combination has any tendency to restrict interstate commerce. All of these combinations, if and while existing for and engaged in the promotion of innocent and proper purposes, should be recognized as legal. As I have repeatedly pointed out, this anti-trust law was a most unwisely drawn statute. It was perhaps inevitable that in feeling after the right remedy the first attempts to provide such should be crude; and it was absolutely imperative that some legislation should be passed to control, in the interest of the public, the business use of the enormous aggregations of corporate wealth that are so marked a feature of the modern industrial world. But the present antitrust law, in its construction and working, has exemplified only too well the kind of legislation which, under the guise of being thoroughgoing, is drawn up in such sweeping form as to become either ineffective or else mischievous.

In the modern industrial world combinations are absolutely necessary; they are necessary among business men, they are necessary among laboring men, they are becoming more and more necessary among farmers. Some of these combinations are among the most powerful of all instruments for wrongdoing. Others offer the only effective way of meeting actual business needs. It is mischievous and unwholesome to keep upon the statute books unmodified a law, like the antitrust law, which, while in practice only partially effective against vicious combinations, has nevertheless in theory been construed so as sweepingly to prohibit every combination for the transaction of modern business. Some real good has resulted from this law. But the time has come when it is imperative to modify it. Such modification is urgently needed for the sake of the business men of the country, for the sake of the wageworkers and for the sake of the farmers. The congress can not afford to leave it on the statute books in its present shape.

Remedies Advised.

It has now become uncertain how far this law may involve all labor organizations and farmers' organizations, as well as all business organizations, in conflict with the law; or, if we secure literal compliance with the law, how far it may result in the destruction of the organization necessary for the transaction of modern business, as well as of labor organizations and farmers' organizations, completely check the wise movement for securing business cooperation among farmers, and put back half a century the progress of the movement for the betterment of labor. A bill has been presented in congress to remedy this situation. Some such measure as this bill is needed in the interest of all engaged in the industries which are essential to the country's well-being. I do not pretend to say the exact shape that the bill should take, and the suggestions I have to offer are tentative; and my views would apply equally to any other measure which would achieve the desired end. Bearing this in mind, I would suggest, merely tentatively, the following changes in the law:

The substantive part of the anti-trust law should remain as at present; that is, every contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations should continue to be declared illegal; provided, however, that some proper governmental authority (such as the commissioner of corporations acting under the secretary of commerce and labor) be allowed to pass on any such contracts. Probably the best method of providing for this would be to enact that any contract subject to the prohibition contained in the antitrust law, into which it is desired to enter, might be filed with the bureau of corporations or other appropriate executive body. This would provide publicity. Within, say, 60 days of the filing—which period could be extended by order of the department whenever for any reason it did not give the department sufficient time for a thorough examination—the executive department having power might forbid the contract, which would then become subject to the provisions of the antitrust law, if at all in restraint of trade.

If no such prohibition was issued, the contract would then only be liable to attack on the ground that it constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. Whenever the period of filing had passed without any such prohibition, the contracts or combinations could be disapproved or forbidden only after notice and hearing with a reasonable provision for summary review on appeal by the courts. Labor organizations, farmers' organizations, and other organizations not organized for purposes of profit, should be allowed to register under the law by giving the location of the head office, the charter and by-laws, and the names and addresses of their principal officers. In the interest of all these organizations—business, labor, and farmers' organizations alike—the present provision permitting the recovery of threefold damages should be abolished, and as a substitute therefor the right of recovery allowed for should be only the damages sustained by the plaintiff and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

The law should not affect pending suits; a short statute of limitations should be provided, so far as the past is concerned, not to exceed a year. Moreover, and even more in the interest of labor than of business combinations, all such suits brought for causes of action heretofore occurred should be brought only if the contract or combination complained of was unfair or unreasonable. It may be well to remember that all of the suits hitherto brought by the government under the antitrust law have been in cases where the combination or contract was in fact unfair, unreasonable, and against the public interest.

Labor Organizations.

It is important that we should encourage trade agreements between employer and employe where they are just and fair. A strike is a clumsy weapon for righting wrongs done to labor, and we should extend, so far as possible, the process of conciliation and arbitration for strikes. Moreover, violence, disorder and coercion, when committed in connection with strikes, should be as promptly and as sternly repressed as when committed in any other connection. But strikes themselves are, and should be, recognized to be entirely legal. Combinations of workingmen have a peculiar reason for their existence. The very wealthy individual employer, and still more the very wealthy corporation, stand at an enormous advantage when compared to the individual workingman; and while there are many cases where it may not be necessary for laborers to form a union, in many other cases it is indispensable, for otherwise the thousands of small units, the thousands of individual workingmen, will be left helpless in their dealings with the big one unit, the big individual or corporate employer.

Twenty-two years ago, by the act of June 29, 1886, trades unions were recognized by law, and the right of laboring people to combine for all lawful purposes was formally recognized, this right including combinations for mutual protection and benefits, the regulation of wages, hours and conditions of labor, and the protection of the individual rights of the workmen in the prosecution of their trade or trades; and in the act of June 1, 1898, strikes were recognized as legal in the same provision that forbade participation in or instigation of force or violence against persons or property, or the attempt to prevent others from working, by violence, threat or intimidation. The business man must be protected in person and property, and so must the farmer and the wageworker; and as regards all alike, the right of peaceful combination for all lawful purposes should be explicitly recognized.

Objects to Boycott.

The right of employers to combine and contract with one another and with their employes should be explicitly recognized; and so should the right of the employes to combine and to contract with one another and with the employers, and to seek peaceably to persuade others to accept their views, and to strike for the purpose of peaceably obtaining from employers satisfactory terms for their labor. Nothing should be done to legalize either a blacklist or a boycott that would be illegal at common law, this being the type of boycott defined and condemned by the anthracite strike commission.

The question of financial legislation is now receiving such attention in both houses that we have a right to expect action before the close of the session. It is urgently necessary that there should be such action. Moreover, action should be taken to establish postal savings banks. These postal savings banks are imperatively needed for the benefit of the wageworkers and men of small means, and will be a valuable adjunct to our whole financial system.

Tariff Revision.

The time has come when we should prepare for a revision of the tariff. This should be, and indeed must be, preceded by careful investigation. It is peculiarly the province of the congress and not of the president, and indeed peculiarly the province of the house of representatives, to originate a tariff bill and to determine upon its terms; and this I fully realize. Yet it seems to me that before the close of this session provision should be made for collecting full material which will enable the congress elected next fall to act immediately after it comes into existence. This would necessitate some action by the congress at its present session, perhaps in the shape of directing the proper committee to gather the necessary information, both through the committee itself and through government agents who should report to the committee and should lay before it the facts which would permit it to act with prompt and intelligent fairness. These government agents, if it is not deemed wise to appoint individuals from outside the public service, might with advantage be members of the executive departments, designated by the president, on his own motion or on the request of the committee, to act with it.

I am of the opinion, however, that one change in the tariff could with advantage be made forthwith. Our forests need every protection, and one method of protecting them would be to put upon the free list wood pulp, with a corresponding reduction upon paper made from wood pulp, when they come from any country that does not put an export duty upon them.

Waterways Commission.

Ample provision should be made for a permanent waterways commission, with whatever power is required to make it effective. The reasonable expectation of the people will not be met unless the congress provides at this session for the beginning and prosecution of the actual work of waterway improvement and control. The congress should recognize in fullest fashion the fact that the subject of the conservation of our natural resources, with which this commission deals, is literally vital for the future of the nation.

Plans for Duluth.

New York—In connection with the proposed Duluth steel plant of the United States steel corporation, the report of the corporation for the year ending Dec. 31 last says:

"There has been purchased a site containing 1,580 acres, of which 300 acres are now submerged, ten miles from the center of the city of Duluth, on which is proposed to construct a moderate sized iron and steel plant. The tract fronts on the St. Louis river, which is navigable for large lake steamers, and is located on the line of the Northern Pacific railway.

"It is expected, however, that there will be constructed in connection with the steel plant a belt railway, extending northwardly therefrom to a connection with the Duluth, Missabe & Northern railway to enable the prompt and economical delivery of ore to the plant from the Minnesota ore ranges; also eastwardly from the steel plant across the St. Louis river into Superior, Wis., where connections will be made with five trunk lines of railways reaching the head of Lake Superior from the south and west.

Find Home on Fire.

Crookston—Mrs. Peter Huff and son, Louis, a boy fifteen years old, had a narrow escape from death by fire. The dwelling is situated about a block from the business portion of the city and two blocks from the fire department. The young boy was awakened during the night and smelled smoke. He descended the stairs and investigated its origin. He found the entire lower floor of the dwelling a mass of flames, and ran hastily back up the stairs after his mother.

They again returned to the head of the stairs to escape from the house, but were driven back by the flaming of the wall paper which had detached itself from the wall. The mother, an old lady, became frantic and ran wildly back into the upper rooms. However, the young boy discovered that the paper at last consumed itself, and, calling his mother, they ran down over the burning embers and made their escape.

Caribou.

Greenbush—Although it has been supposed for several years that caribou were no longer to be found in Minnesota, except a stray animal now and then, it is now reported that there is a herd of fifty to sixty in the region northeast of the north arm of Red Lake in Beltrami county. Reports have also been received by Carlos Avery, executive agent of the state game and fish commission, that the Indians on the Red Lake Indian reservation have been killing some of these caribou during the winter, and the matter will be taken up with the interior department in an effort to restrain the Indians from killing off this last herd.

$16 AN ACRE REALIZED ON CROP IN WESTERN CANADA.

ANOTHER FARMER REALIZES $22.50 PER ACRE FROM HIS WHEAT CROP LAST YEAR.

Charles McCormick of Kenville, Manitoba, writes:

"During the season of 1907, I had 100 acres in crop on the S. W. quarter of section 18, township 35, range 27 west of the Principal Meridian, Western Canada, yielded as follows:

"80 acres at 22 bushels per acre, which I sold for 90 cents per bushel; and 20 acres oats yielding 60 bushels per acre I sold for 35 cents per bushel so that my total crop realized $2,004.00. From this I deducted for expenses of threshing, hired help, etc., $400.00, leaving me a net profit on this year's crop of over $1,600."

Thomas Sawatzky of Herbert, Saskatchewan, says:

"The value of my crop per acre of wheat is $22.50. I threshed 1,750 bushels of wheat from 70 acres, and was offered 90 cents a bushel for it. Oats, 15 acres, 500 bushels; and barley, 5 acres, 80 bushels. I do not know if I have been doing the best in this district, but I know if all the farmers were doing as well, Western Canada would have no kick coming as far as grain growing is concerned; and I further say that if you want to put this in one of your advertisements, this is true and I can put my name to it."

PRESCRIBED CUTICURA

After Other Treatment Failed—Raw Eczema on Baby's Face Had Lasted Three Months—At Last Doctor Found Cure.

"Our baby boy broke out with eczema on his face when one month old. One place on the side of his face the size of a nickel was raw like beefsteak for three months, and he would cry out when I bathed the parts that were sore and broken out. I gave him three months' treatment from a good doctor, but at the end of that time the child was no better. Then my doctor recommended Cuticura. After using a cake of Cuticura Soap, a third of a box of Cuticura Ointment, and half a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent he was well and his face was as smooth as any baby's. He is now two years and a half old and no eczema has reappeared. Mrs. M. L. Harris, Alton, Kan., May 14 and June 12, 1907."

How to Raise Boys.

"Ther ain't much of a problem in raisin' boys ef you'll have a little common sense about it," said Mr. Billy Sanders. "Don't let 'em run wild like pigs in the woods, an' don't keep the lines too tight, an' when things go wrong don't be afear'd of usin' a rawhide. But don't fergit that the mammies an' daddies of the land are twice responsible when one of the'r boys goes wrong. Ef the legislatur' wants to do a good work, an' make better citizens out'n the risin' generation, let it put a heavy penalty on the dear parents of the boys that go wrong."—Joel Chandler Harris, in Uncle Remus' Magazine.

How Her Life Was Saved When Bitten By a Large Snake.

How few people there are who are not afraid of snakes. Not long ago a harmless little garter snake fell on the wheel of an automobile which was being driven by a woman. The woman promptly fainted and the car, left to its own resources, ran into a stone wall and caused a serious accident.

The bite of a poisonous snake needs prompt attention. Mrs. K. M. Fishel, Route No. 1, Box 40, Dillsburg, Pa., tells how she saved her life when bitten by a large snake.

"On August 29, 1905, I was bitten on the hand twice by a large copperhead snake. Being a distance from any medical aid, as a last resort I used Sloan's Liniment, and to my astonishment found it killed all pain and was the means of saving my life. I am the mother of four children and am never without your Liniment."

Volum VIII, No, 1

With this issue THE SUNBEAM enters the eighth year of its publication under the present management, and while it has not been a gold mine to gather wealth by close attention to business we have been able to make both ends meet and get enough ahead to buy a cow. We have not been able to live on porter house stake, strawberries and ice cream and drink champagne, but have been able to get neck stake jonnie cake and beans, and occasionly a five cent glass of beer. We have not traveled around the world but stayed at home and set type, and looked after other details of the business.

Any young man that has had fond dreams of suddenly becoming wealthy by going into business we would advise him to go into some other busines besides a country news paper As for us, we have always had a horror of geting to wealthy for fear the money would be wasted after we are dead, so we are ready to start the publication of Vol. VIII, as we were I with full confidence in THE SUNBEAM.

TAFT THE LOGICAL CANDIDATE; BOOM SWEEPS THE COUNTRY

The One Man Fitted by Ability, Experience and Sympathy to Carry Out the Important Policies Inaugurated by President Roosevelt.

The American People Have Absolute Confidence in the War Secretary Because They Know What He Stands for and What He Has Done.

Demand for Taft's Nomination as Roosevelt's Successor Sprang Spontaneously From All Sections of the Country—Victory Foregone Conclusion.

On the night of election in November, 1904, when returns which were pouring into the White House from all sections of the country showed that Theodore Roosevelt had been chosen by an overwhelming majority to succeed himself as president of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt issued a formal statement to the effect that he would not be a candidate for another term. From that moment the question in the minds of the leaders of the Republican party throughout the country has been one concerning the selection of his successor. For a time there were many who, while not doubting the sincerity of the president in declaring his intention not to be his party's standard bearer again, nevertheless insisted that in order to carry out the policies which he had so successfully inaugurated he should yield to the unmistakable sentiment of the voters of the country and consent to a renomination.

Naturally Turned to Taft.

It became apparent later that the president said what he meant and that he intended to stand by it, for in every subsequent utterance on the subject he has only the more strongly emphasized his statement and his position in the matter. Naturally, when Mr. Roosevelt's position came to be thoroughly understood and appreciated, the leaders of the party, directed and guided by the prevailing sentiment of the great mass of voters of the country, began to cast about for the selection of his successor. Granting the abundance of presidential material within the party, the first consideration was for a man who could fill Mr. Roosevelt's political shoes and wear them with the same ease as Mr. Roosevelt himself; in other words for a man in thorough sympathy with the president's policies and his equal to carry them successfully into execution. Unquestionably that man was William Howard Taft, secretary of war. He had helped to formulate the president's policies, and his administration of affairs in the Philippines, in Panama, in Cuba and in the war department generally, as well as his advice and counsel in other matters, were, and still are, a part of those policies. The country knew Taft as it knew no other administration leader, except the president; it knew him for what he had done; it knew what he stood for.

Victory Is Foregone Conclusion.

It was on this account that early in the consideration of an available candidate upon whom the Republican party could confer the nomination for president, that attention was directed to the present secretary of war. Since the first mention of his name in this connection—and it would be difficult to discover the original Taft man—the demand for his nomination has steadily increased until now, with the great national Republican conclave three months in the future, his selection by that assemblage, as the standard bearer of his party, seems to be a foregone conclusion.

While it cannot be denied that immense impetus to the movement in favor of the nomination of Mr. Taft was given by the unqualified expression by the president in favor of the selection of his secretary of war as his successor in the White House, yet with all due credit to the president it cannot be said that it was he who started the so-called Taft boom.

Boom Is Spontaneous.

The boom was spontaneous from all sections of the country, and what the president did was simply to join in the procession of those who, with accurate judgment, had decided that the best man to fill Theodore Roosevelt's place as the executive head of the nation was Mr. Taft. That the great influence of the president's judgment has done incalculable benefit to the candidacy of Mr. Taft cannot be denied, yet in the last analysis it is the people in this country who choose their presidents and not the president who selects his successor. In indicating a preference for Secretary Taft the president acted as Theodore Roosevelt, citizen of the republic, rather than Theodore Roosevelt, president of the United States. He spoke as hundreds of thousands of other citizens and voters have spoken voicing their feelings and exercising their right to indicate a choice on this all-important question, involving as it does so much that is vital to the welfare of the country and of the party during the next four years.

His Essential Fitness.

But the president had one advantage over his fellow countrymen in indicating his preference; he knew better than any one else the qualifications and the essential fitness of the man to whom he has thrown the great weight of his prestige; he knew who could best bear them; he knew, too, the man who would best appeal by reason of the principles for which he stands and the great service which he has given to his country, to the people of the nation for support.

While the people of the country have accepted the president's high estimate of Mr. Taft, they have not done so without full consideration of the merits of the secretary of war. They have examined his record and given approval of his candidacy. Throughout the canvass which has now been in progress with more or less activity for a year or more, Secretary Taft has maintained a dignity and poise which has commanded universal respect.

Hardest Worker In Administration.

No duty appertaining to the great office which he now holds has suffered from neglect by reason of the fact that he is a candidate for the presidency. He is still secretary of war, and the obligations of that office are the obligations which command his attention and which receive his attention. That the secretary of war is the hardest worked and the hardest working man connected with the present administration no one familiar with affairs in Washington can successfully deny and few will have the hardihood to question. The incandescent bulb burns brightly over his desk at midnight many and many a night, and beneath it sits the secretary of war diligently laboring over matters which are as far removed as can be from questions relating to the action of the Chicago convention.

A Great Administrator.

They are matters which have to do with the administration of the war department with its many ramifications, not the least of which are questions concerning affairs in the Philippines, the construction of the Panama canal, and the direction of the provisional government of Cuba. All of these fall within the province and upon the shoulders of Mr. Taft, as secretary of war. How well these affairs are administered the peace and prosperity of the Philippines, the progress on the big Isthmian ditch, the contentment of Cuba and the successful working out of her troubles amply testify. With a realization of these things no one can doubt that Secretary Taft is a busy man and a successful administrator.

At the inception of the movement to bring about the nomination of Mr. Taft for the presidency, when the average politician would have remained at home to "look after his fences," Mr. Taft started out upon his memorable trip around the world.

Keeps Faith With Filipinos.

He had given his word to the Filipinos that he would be present at the opening of their first legislative assembly, the establishment of which was due more to his efforts than to the work of any other man.

With a knowledge of the fact that Secretary Taft's candidacy was paramount in the minds of politicians throughout the country, a reporter asked him if he still intended to make the trip to Manila.

"Why, yes," he answered with an expression which indicated that no consideration, not even that involving the nomination for the presidency, could induce him to break his word to his wards, the Filipinos and disappoint them. And he did go.

MOUNTING TAFT BAND WAGON

Secretary Will Go to Convention With More Than Two-thirds of Delegates Pledged to Him.

There will be 980 delegates to the Republican national convention which meets in Chicago on June 18 for the purpose of selecting a candidate for president, and of this number Secretary Taft must receive a majority—491 votes—in order to carry off the prize. As indicating whether or not he will be able to control that number of votes the friends of the secretary of war point to the fact that of the 138 delegates chosen at the close of the first week in March 108 have been instructed to vote for Mr. Taft. Of the remaining thirty, twenty-six have been instructed for Vice President Fairbanks, all of them in his home state of Indiana, and four others, two in Alabama and two in Missouri, are uninstructed. If this ratio is maintained during the remaining two months of the canvass for delegates Mr. Taft will go to the Chicago convention with more than two-thirds of the delegates pledged to his candidacy.

During the first week in March forty delegates were chosen to the national convention, every one of whom was instructed to vote for Mr. Taft. Mr. Taft's native state started off the month with a state convention held in Columbus on March 3 and 4 and named four delegates-at-large and instructed them for Mr. Taft. These delegates are Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, brother of the secretary of war; Former Governor Myron T. Herrick, Arthur I. Vorys and Gov. Andrew L. Harris. Kansas followed on March 4 with a state convention at which her delegates-at-large were instructed to vote for Mr. Taft. These delegates are Senator Chester I. Long, Senator Charles Curtis, Robert McGonegle and Grant Hornaday. Five district conventions were also held in the Sunflower State during the first week of March, and ten delegates were chosen, each with explicit instructions to vote for Secretary Taft. Four district delegates were also chosen in Nebraska, five in Oklahoma, four in Maryland, four in Missouri, two in Alabama, two in Tennessee, and two in Iowa, all of them instructed to cast their votes in the national convention for Secretary Taft.

ENVIABLE ROLL OF NOTEWORTHY DEEDS OF STATESMANSHIP

Secretary Taft's Important Achievements, Creative and Administrative, Have Won Him the Title of "The Busiest Man of a Busy Administration."

Enormous Scope of His Official Activities Includes Solution of Such Problems as Presented in the Philippines, Cuba and the Panama Canal.

"Bill Taft Could Not Be Bought or Budged From What He Thought Was Right by All the Wealth of the Country," Says Life-Long Friend.

Measured by years, William Howard Taft is only fifty. Conservatively estimated by the scale of accomplishment he is fully twice that age. Few men of fifty, even in these days of rapid development when success largely is gauged by the winning of dollars, have to their credit the deeds of important achievement set down to the score of the secretary of war. The record of his mature years is an enviable and immaculate roll of noteworthy deeds of statesmanship, of creative and administrative functions in judicial and civil life, which have brought him international fame, and set him preeminently before the eyes of the country as the embodiment of the highest type and ideal of an American citizen who is true to his convictions, to his trust and to his fellow man.

Solves Vast Problems.

Mr. Taft was twenty-four years old when he entered the public service as assistant prosecuting attorney in Cincinnati. He was on the bench of the superior court at thirty, appointed to fill a vacancy, and in the following year was elected to a full term. There has been no retrogression in Mr. Taft's career. Each call has summoned him to more important tasks, until now as secretary of war, and additionally weighted with the responsibility of bringing order from chaos in Cuba with the solution of the vaster problems presented by the Philippines and with the gigantic job of digging the Panama canal he has undisputed right to the title which has been conferred upon him of "the busiest man of a busy administration."

Inherits Sturdy Character.

In Mr. Taft's sturdy traits of character, his resolute opposition to deeds, either personal or those of others, which do not square with his promptings of conscience and his inflexible will, one may easily discern the influence of his New England ancestry. Judge Alphonso Taft, his father, was born in Vermont. He was graduated from Yale and became judge of the superior court in Ohio, secretary of war in President Grant's cabinet, and United States minister to Austria and Russia. The secretary's mother was Louise M. Torrey, daughter of a Boston merchant in the West Indian trade. She was Judge Taft's second wife. Secretary Taft was their second son. He was born in Cincinnati on Sept. 15, 1857. In his boyhood days at Mount Auburn, the suburb of Cincinnati, where the Tafts lived, William was the leader among his comrades, numbered among whom were many who have since arrived at positions of distinction in the business and professional world.

Cannot Be Bought.

He was a hard student, but zestful for full and healthy recreation. Two men who were reared with him recently uttered sentiments which admirably serve as indices to the secretary's character. One said, quite as a matter of course, that he would lend "Bill" Taft every cent he had in the world without a scratch of the pen to show for it. The other said: "Bill" Taft could not be bought or budged from what he thought was right by the six hundred, or whatever number of billions of dollars there may be in the whole country." When he entered Yale Mr. Taft was only seventeen. His father and one of his half brothers had taken honors, and Mr. Taft regarded it quite a matter of course that he should do the same. He concentrated himself upon his work, taking no part in athletics, as a team of crew man; but rowing, boxing, wrestling and playing football merely as a diversion, and to keep himself in physical trim to withstand the rigorous course of study which he was following.

Mr. Taft was graduated from Yale with the degree of bachelor of arts. He stood second in a class of 121, and was the salutatorian and class orator. When he was graduated from the Cincinnati Law School in 1880 he divided first prize. Judge Taft was not a wealthy man, and William, his education finished, became entirely the architect of his own fortunes.

Is Strenuous Prosecutor.

He was admitted to the bar in 1880. Then he tried his hand at newspaper work on the Cincinnati Times and the Cincinnati Commercial. He was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney in Cincinnati in 1881. He tackled this job with characteristic ardor, fruitful in promise of the manner in which he was to handle other and more momentous tasks in the years to come.

At the solicitation of friends, and to settle a factional fight, Mr. Taft accepted from President Arthur the appointment of internal revenue collector for the First district of Ohio. The post was uncongenial, and he resigned after a few months to practice law.

He married in 1886 Miss Helen Herron of Cincinnati, daughter of John W. Herron, former United States district attorney and law partner of President Rutherford B. Hayes. He was assistant county solicitor for a time.

Goes on the Bench.

Gov. Foraker in 1887 placed him upon the bench of the superior court, and in the following year he was elected for a full five-year term. President Harrison offered him the post of solicitor general of the United States in 1890, and he accepted, although he had not been an applicant. In this field Mr. Taft assumed responsibilities far weightier than any with which he had before coped. He won invariably, and triumphed for the United States in the most important actions of the Harrison administration, one of them being the seal fisheries case, precipitated by the capture of a Canadian schooner by an American revenue cutter.

Becomes United States Judge.

When he was thirty-five, with a record of brilliant victories that would have insured him a huge income in private practice, Mr. Taft, whose absorbing ambition always has been a seat on the supreme bench, resigned to become United States circuit judge for the famous Sixth judicial circuit, including Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. For eight years he was presiding judge, and with Judges Day and Lurton made that court, measured by the high respect paid its judgments by the legal profession of the nation, the greatest subordinate court in the country. An example of his quality as a judge was afforded by the Phelan case during the railroad strike of 1894. Phelan was enjoined from trying to tie up the Southern road, which was being run by a receiver appointed by the court.

Judge Taft Threatened.

He was arrested, and brought before Judge Taft, charged with contempt of court. Threats were made that he would never leave the court room alive if he decided Phelan guilty. He sentenced the man to six months in jail. It was admitted, even by the strikers themselves, that Phelan had a fair trial. Phelan owned as much when he was released, calling upon Judge Taft and telling him that his offense deserved the punishment he got. Touched by the woeful state of the strikers' families, as told him by Phelan, the judge asked the receiver of the Southern to abolish the black list, and the strikers were given their jobs back as vacancies offered. It was in this court that Judge Taft handed down his famous labor decisions, which were not long ago analyzed in the Review of Reviews by Frederick N. Judson, attorney for the railroad brotherhoods in the Wabash case.

Vindication for Labor.

Mr. Judson wrote:

"There is no foundation, therefore, for the suggestion that the decisions of Judge Taft were in any sense unfriendly to labor, and it is clear that through his lucid declarations of the rights of labor the railroad brotherhoods secured the judicial vindication of their right of combination and of representation in their demands for the betterment of their conditions."

Trusts were dealt with by Judge Taft as impartially and fearlessly as other interests, as witness his condemnation of the Addystone iron pipe trust as a conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce.

McKinley Turns to Taft.

It was to Judge Taft that President McKinley appealed when borne down by the perplexities of the Philippine problem. "We must build a new nation out there," said the president, "I want you to help us." Judge Taft was reluctant to quit the bench to head the first Philippine commission, but he consented, purely from a sense of duty. "I am sending Taft to the Philippines because he is the broadest and the most unselfishly brave man I know, and because he will carry the spirit of the Constitution of the United States in his very blood," said the president in announcing the appointment.

No man was ever beset by more vexations, brain-wearing questions, or a greater multiplicity of them in all ramifications of diversification, than was Mr. Taft in the Philippines. "The Philippines for the Filipinos" was the motto which he adopted in the outset, and to which he unswervingly has held.

Won Confidence of Filipinos.

He won the trust and confidence of the Filipinos, and has retained it. Slowly, but steadily, he shaped the indeterminate and tottering destinies of the islands and their people until the fruition of part of his plans came in November last with the convening of the first Philippine assembly, composed of natives elected by the free ballot of the people. He pledged his confidence in the Filipinos that they would not abuse the right of suffrage, and cast it in the balance against the doubts and mistrust of consequences held by not a few of his associates. Thus far the official conduct of the assembly has been a splendid vindication of Mr. Taft's judgment. It was characteristic of the man that he should adhere to a long ago promise passed to the Filipinos, and journey to Manila to open the assembly. He kept his word, although absence from the United States at that time was admittedly perilous to his chances of being nominated for the presidency. "I've promised, and I'm going," said Mr. Taft, throwing all else to the winds.

Taft Again to the Rescue.

It was Mr. Taft whom the president dispatched to the rescue of the Cuban republic in 1906, when the island's political destinies were threatened by revolution. For a time he was provisional governor. Responsibility for the Panama canal also has been placed upon him. None of the vital and complicated affairs of the war department have been neglected or mismanaged because of the enormity of the scope of Mr. Taft's powers and official activities. Every branch of his department and of the army has been bettered and rendered more effective by him.

Mr. Taft, returning from Manila in December, completed a notable journey around the world. In Japan he was received by the emperor, and delivered his famous speech, which effectually quelled the rumors of impending war between this country and Japan. Another deliverance of international importance was uttered in Shanghai, when he reaffirmed our intention to maintain at all hazards the open door in the East.
